Mr. RAWLINS. It has not been my purpose to allude to anything which might be regarded as confidential. Of course, we know the reason for discussing in executive session treaties with other governments. We do not want to say things which might be offensive to other governments. But here we have an act of Congress; we have two treaties which have long been ratified, which are matters within public knowledge, and which are of the utmost public importance to the people of the United States. Congress has legislated as to the conditions upon which it is willing to make appropriations of money to construct the canal. The treaty which is now pending has been made public. Any consideration which arises purely from the construction of the language that that treaty employs is as much entitled to publicity as the treaty itself.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his question of order.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Utah, as I understand, is discussing a treaty which is in the consideration of the Senate in executive session, and, as I understand, he claims that he has the right to discuss it because the text of the treaty has been made public. I respectfully suggest to the Chair the point of order that that is not true.

Nominations for office are always made public, but it never has been held that the merits of such nominations, because the nominations had been made public, could be discussed publicly.

Mr. RAWLINS. I should like——

Mr. HOAR. It puts in an awkward position the Senators who might have something to say in reply to the Senator. They can not reply publicly. What they may have to say may be based on something that clearly is confidential.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question? It is not my purpose to infringe on any rule of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I am sure of that.

Mr. RAWLINS. I recognize the long experience of the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senate orders a pending treaty to be made public. That gives publicity, of course, to all the terms of that treaty. I ask the Senator if he would regard any Senator who might rise here and read the treaty as being guilty of any infringement of the rules?

Mr. HOAR. No; I should not.

Mr. RAWLINS. Now, Mr. President, that being so, if a Senator should invite attention, after reading any clause of the treaty, to the necessary significance or meaning of the language thus employed, would he any more infringe the rule of the Senate?

Mr. HOAR. I think he would, Mr. President. I think then he would be debating the merits of something which the rules of the Senate require to be debated, if at all, in confidence.

Suppose a man be nominated for Chief Justice of the United States. The nomination is given to the public. Is it open to a Senator to come here and discuss the public record of that gentleman with reference to his fitness to be confirmed? Nobody can answer him without being restricted to public matters.

Mr. RAWLINS. I think the analogy which the Senator undertakes to make is not quite apropos, but it is not necessary to dwell upon this subject, because I have no further allusion to make to the pending treaty.

Mr. President, just a few other considerations.

Mr. HOAR. May I put a question to the Senator?

Mr. RAWLINS. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. Do I understand that the Senator avows his purpose to discuss the merits of the pending treaty so far as to call attention to his views and opinions in regard to the meaning and effect of certain passages in it, the treaty having been made public?

Mr. RAWLINS. Not further than I have already done. I have said all I intend to say on that subject.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator to be stating his doctrine about it. I want to know if I correctly understood the Senator to claim the right to discuss in open session the pending treaty, which has been made public, so far as to call attention to the effect and meaning of particular passages in it?

Mr. RAWLINS. I have already done that to the extent I desire to do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the Senator from Massachusetts. Discussion of a treaty is not in order in legislative session unless in executive session the injunction of secrecy has been removed.

Mr. RAWLINS. Do I understand the ruling of the President to be that I may not discuss the act of Congress and treaties already ratified by the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair simply decided that the discussion of a treaty which is now under consideration in executive session is out of order in legislative session.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, we will have no controversy about that, because I have said all I designed to say upon the subject. All that I care to say in addition to what I have already said is this: I voted against the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. I have opposed the policy of the majority in relation to the conditions upon which this canal is to be constructed. I think the United States is going to expend a large sum of money, and that under the treaties which have been ratified by the Senate we are surrendering every means of affording protection to the property which is thus to be created.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. RAWLINS. That when the canal is constructed under the terms of the treaties already ratified——

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. RAWLINS. I should like to finish. I am nearly through. If the Senator will be patient just a moment I am sure I am not going to infringe any of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I have not listened attentively to the speech of the Senator from Utah, I am sorry to say, and therefore I am not aware fully of what he has been saying. But I arose for the purpose of saying, and of making a motion if necessary, that if he intended to discuss this treaty in any way I would move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business with closed doors.

Mr. RAWLINS. I might as well say that there are additional things to which I wish to invite the attention of the Senate, and I have not any objection to discussing it in secret session.

Mr. CULLOM (to Mr. RAWLINS). Do you want to do it now?

Mr. PERKINS. I will state to my friend the Senator from Utah that unless he has some particular amendment to propose to this bill I hope he will permit us to dispose of it at this time, as it must go into conference, and the hour when this Congress will close is very near. It seems to me we ought to dispose of the bill at this time.

Mr. RAWLINS. Let the Senators upon the other side determine their own course about this matter. There are a few things which I desire to say, not with a view of detaining the Senate. I have not quite completed what I have to say, and it is open to them to pursue such a course as they deem proper. I want to conform entirely to the rules and traditions of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator intends to go on, I will move that the doors of the Senate be closed.

Mr. RAWLINS. I have already said practically all that I want to say on that subject.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator is through, I will not make the motion.

Mr. CARMACK. I did not understand the Senator from Utah to say he was through.

Mr. CULLOM. He said he was substantially through.

Mr. RAWLINS. If I may be permitted to repeat, in order to make a continuous statement of what I was desiring to say, this canal, under the operation of the treaties already ratified by the Senate, against which I cast my vote, and the policy proposed by the majority, as I understand it, involves and will involve the expenditure by the people of the United States of something like $400,000,000 and the surrender, at the same time, of the right to fortify, protect, and defend the property, leaving it to the care of an independent Government and with an invitation——

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senator from Utah is out of order in discussing in legislative session a pending treaty or its provisions.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate proceed to secret legislative session.

Mr. LODGE. I second the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The galleries will be cleared and the doors will be closed.

The doors were thereupon closed, and at the expiration of forty-five minutes were reopened.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The fortifications appropriation bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] for a moment. I was not in the Chamber in the early part of the remarks made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], and so did not hear all the questions which he propounded to the Senator from California. I understood the Senator from California to say, however, that there was no provision in the pending bill in respect to providing for any fortifications in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator's understanding is correct. There are no provisions in the bill for the fortification of any of our insular possessions whatever. An amendment was proposed to the committee for that purpose, but they declined to put it in the bill.

Mr. CARMACK. I was about to ask the Senator if he himself or if the committee have given any consideration to the question of fortifying the various islands in the Philippine Archipelago for the purpose of making them secure against possible attack and invasion in case of a foreign war?

Mr. PERKINS. No such proposition was presented to your committee, Mr. President, for their consideration, and therefore any opinion which I might express would have no value whatever.

Mr. CARMACK. I would suggest to the Senator and to the Senate that it has been said here by distinguished Senators, amongst others by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], at this session of Congress that our control over the Philippine Islands would increase the dangers of complications with foreign nations and the danger of foreign wars. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], at a previous session of Congress, in discussing this question said, I believe, that in case of a foreign war our Philippine possessions would be the first ones attacked, and therefore that there would be very great necessity of strongly fortifying those possessions and increasing our Navy for the purpose of protecting and defending them. It does seem to me that Senators upon the other side of the Chamber who have a fixed purpose of holding, maintaining, and retaining possession of those islands ought to consider the question of fortifying them for the purpose of protecting them against a foreign enemy, and they ought to be prepared to make some statement to the Senate with respect to it.

I will ask the Senator from California, or any member of the committee, if the amendment to which he has referred was offered by a member of the committee?

Mr. PERKINS. It was presented by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers as a part of the estimates of appropriation of a million and a half dollars to be used in fitting up emplacements for fortifications. As I stated, however, it was not taken up or entertained by the committee. No reference, therefore, is made in the bill to appropriations for fortifications for our insular possessions.

Mr. CARMACK. The amendment was recommended, as I understand the Senator to say, by the Secretary of War.

Mr. PERKINS. The recommendation was that $500,000 might be used, in the discretion of the War Department, for fortifications in our insular possessions.

Mr. CARMACK. Then I should like to ask the Senator if while the matter was under consideration the committee made any estimate of the cost of properly fortifying those various islands?

Mr. PERKINS. None whatever, Mr. President.

Mr. CARMACK. Would the Senator mind saying what his own opinion is as to the necessity of fortifying those islands?

Mr. PERKINS. Not being an expert in that line, I should prefer, first, that my friend from Tennessee should give his opinion and make his estimate. It is much easier to criticise and tear down than it is to build up. When the proper time arrives I doubt not the capacity of my friend from Tennessee, if it be deemed expedient and advisable, to assist us in devising such a plan as will protect the possessions of this country; but the time never has been, and I believe it never will come, when we are not able to protect and defend our own country and our own possessions. We have a Navy to-day equal almost in its efficiency to any in the world, and I believe that we are able to compete with and meet in conflict any navy to-day that belongs to any foreign country.

Mr. CARMACK. Of course I agree to all that. We are able to defend our possessions; but the Senator, I think, will agree with me that we are not able to defend our possessions, or even our own country, without preparing necessary defenses and fortifications and a navy for that purpose. I was not asking the Senator for any detailed statement as to what it would cost. I was simply asking his opinion as to whether or not it would be necessary to fortify the Philippine Islands for the purpose of their protection, and if the Senator has any opinion upon that question I should like to hear from him in respect to it.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I think our coast defenses and the vessels that we have are quite sufficient for any defense that we may be required to make.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SAFETY APPLIANCES ON RAILROADS.

Mr. FORAKER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3560) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, and amended April 1, 1896, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

On page 2, line 2, after the word "Columbia," insert the words "and shall apply in all cases, whether or not the couplers brought together are of the same kind, make, or pattern."

On page 2, line 3, after the word "to," insert the words "train brakes."

On page 2, line 4, after the word "all," insert the word "trains."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of amendment numbered 2 the words: "Provided, That the Interstate Commerce Commission may, upon application and after full hearing, decrease said minimum percentage as to any common carrier for a stated limited time; and provided that in no case shall such reduction permit the running of any train with less power or train brakes than are required by section 1 of the act of March 2, 1893;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 3, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

J. B. FORAKER,
J. H. MILLARD,
MURPHY J. FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

IRVING P. WANGER,
J. S. SHERMAN,
W. C. ADAMSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish the Senator from Ohio would explain, in a few words, what is the effect of this conference report?

Mr. FORAKER. It was provided in the bill as it passed the Senate that 65 per cent of the cars in any train, if that many were to be found in it equipped with air brakes, were to be coupled together. The House of Representatives reduced that to 50 per cent, and then added an amendment to the effect that any road might apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission and, on showing good cause therefor, secure a reduction to a still less percentage. The House receded from that part of their amendment authorizing this application to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does it now stand at 50 or 65 per cent?

Mr. FORAKER. It stands at 50 per cent now. I think it is satisfactory to everybody concerned. That was the principal amendment. The other amendments were merely to correct the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

SAFE-KEEPING OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 7301) to further provide for the safe-keeping of public money, and for other purposes.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry on that motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to ask, If that motion prevails will it set aside what is known as the omnibus statehood bill—the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will.

Mr. ALDRICH. Undoubtedly; but I shall move to resume the consideration of the unfinished business after the conclusion of the bill which I have just named.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] does not seem to be in his seat at this moment, and I do not think we ought, in his absence, to displace the bill of which he has charge.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Pennsylvania understood that I was going to make this motion. I ask that the question be put on the motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 7301) to further provide for the safe-keeping of public money, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. DUBOIS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLLIVER (when his name was called). The roll call taken yesterday indicates that I voted, notwithstanding my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. I have taken the liberty to transfer that pair for the remainder of the session to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and I desire to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN], but understanding that he would vote on this question the same way I do, I shall take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. KEARNS. I am paired with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON], and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire if the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Then, having a general pair with that Senator, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to ask if the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will withdraw my vote, as I have a pair with that Senator.

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire whether the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—42.

Aldrich,	Dolliver,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.
Bacon,	Dryden,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, N. Y.
Bard,	Elkins,	Kean,	Pritchard,
Beveridge,	Fairbanks,	Kittredge,	Quarles,
Burnham,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Simon,
Burrows,	Frye,	McComas,	Spooner,
Cullom,	Gallinger,	Martin,	Stewart,
Deboe,	Gamble,	Millard,	Tillman.
Depew,	Hale,	Mitchell,	Wetmore.
Dietrich,	Hanna,	Nelson,
Dillingham,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,

NAYS—18.

Bailey,	Culberson,	Morgan,	Teller,
Berry,	Dubois,	Patterson,	Turner,
Blackburn,	Heitfeld,	Pettus,	Vest.
Carmack,	McEnery,	Quay,
Clay,	Mallory,	Rawlins,

NOT VOTING—28.

Alger,	Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Penrose,
Allison,	Daniel,	Kearns,	Proctor,
Bate,	Foster, La.	McCumber,	Scott,
Burton,	Foster, Wash.	McLaurin, Miss.	Simmons,
Clapp,	Gibson,	McLaurin, S. C.	Taliaferro,
Clark, Mont.	Harris,	Mason,	Warren,
Clark, Wyo.	Hawley,	Money,	Wellington.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 7301) to further provide for the safe-keeping of public money, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALDRICH. In deference to the expressions on both sides of the Chamber, I move to amend, on page 2, line 19, by striking out "fifty" and inserting "ten," so that cities and counties of 10,000 inhabitants or more will be included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 19, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "ten;" so as to read:

And which has at such date more than 10,000 inhabitants as established by the last national census.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Will the Secretary read that part of the bill which relates to the receiving of railroad bonds as it was amended the other day?

The Secretary read as follows:

Or the first mortgage bonds of any railroad company, not including street railway bonds, which has paid dividends of not less than 4 per cent per annum regularly and continuously on its entire capital stock for a period of not less than ten years previous to the deposit of the bonds.

Mr. HALE. It has been suggested to me by a very eminent lawyer, who has sent me a letter, that after the words "ten years" the word "next" be inserted; so that it will read "ten years next previous to the deposit of the bonds."

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no objection to that.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the objections I have to this bill, or most of them, will apply with equal force to the law as it now exists; and no amendment that the Senator from Rhode Island may offer or change that he may propose in regard to particular features of the bill with reference to the character of the bonds or the amount of the security would change my view of it, because my objections to it are fundamental.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] the other day stated that the law as it stands upon the statute book to-day authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit in such national banks as he may designate the public revenues, except the revenues that are received from customs duties. This bill proposes to enlarge that act and to authorize him to deposit the money received from all sources, including customs duties, in such national banks as he may designate.

I am not familiar with the causes which induced Congress to make the exception with respect to customs dues that was made when the act was passed in 1864. I have not examined the debates, but I imagine the object and purpose of the act originally were the convenience of the Government; that the internal-revenue taxes and the receipts from public lands and from various other sources were often received at remote points, distant from the Treasury or a subtreasury, and that in order to provide for the better safety of the money and the security of the officer it was provided that the revenue of the Government, other than receipts from customs, might be deposited in national banks, as it would be far more convenient and afford much greater safety. The facilities of transmission were not so great then as they are at present.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BERRY. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. I think I can state the reason. At that time the customs dues were paid in gold, and the Government had to pay the interest on the bonds in gold, and I think that is the reason why the distinction was made.

Mr. BERRY. Perhaps it may be as the Senator states—that the customs dues were paid in gold and all other receipts were receivable in United States Treasury notes.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. BERRY. But whatever the purpose or reason was—perhaps there was more than one—the Congress did make this distinction and provided for the deposit, as I have stated.

My objection to the present bill is that it extends the operation of what I regard as a most objectionable law. It extends and enlarges the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to do that which I think he never should have been authorized to do in any case. I object to it because it authorizes him to select a particular class of our citizens, a class engaged in a particular pursuit, and himself to loan to that particular class—because this bill provides for nothing else than a demand loan—the Government money at a rate of interest less than is customary to be charged by the banks of the country. It confines it to that particular class. The Secretary of the Treasury can loan it to no other class. He can not name any citizens to receive this money save and except he be a national banker.

Not only that, but it authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to select from that class a particular national banker with whom he will deposit this money, if you choose to call it a deposit, or to whom he will loan the money of the United States, at a rate of interest of 1½ per cent per year. He can not extend this privilege to any State bank. It might be that the State bank is more solvent and is in rivalry with the national bank, and the State bank might be able to and would offer securities, United States bonds, if you wish, or any other class of securities named in the proposed act, and yet he could not designate that bank. He must select this class, the privileged class, to whom this money can be loaned, and he selects from that class.

Mr. President, the workings of this law in the past, as it stands on the statute books to-day—and this, as I said before, only enlarges and extends the power which is now conferred by law—in many instances has been such as to bring scandal upon the country. It has been charged again and again that the Secretary of the Treasury selected his favorite banks, his particular friends, and deposited the public money in their banks, thereby giving them advantages that other bankers could not have.

It has been charged again and again that it was used for political purposes. I say it is true. Prior to the time, in 1885, when the Democrats came into power, throughout the section of country in which I live the national banks which were known to be in sympathy with the Republican party, as a matter of course, were universally named for the deposit of United States funds. I admit that when the Democrats came in they sought also to have the Democratic banks named as depositories. I think I wrote myself a letter stating that one bank in Little Rock had had the deposit for years, and I thought it should be extended to the other bank there, which was equally solvent and equally entitled to it. And I think I said it was a Democratic bank. But I repeat that it has been used for political purposes and it will be used for favoritism. No man can deny it.

I remember a case which happened two or three years ago, and it was fully discussed in the House of Representatives. If I remember the proof in that case and that which was admitted, and I state it from memory only, because I have not read it recently, a certain bank in the city of New York purchased from the Government of the United States a public building. I do not remember the cost of it, but I think it was some three or four or five hundred thousand dollars. The purchase price was agreed on, and the bank pretended to pay the purchase money, except a small balance. I do not remember the amount. They did not pay it all, because if the deed had been made to the bank the proof in the case showed that the bank would have had to pay taxes on the property. Therefore it was not made. But then that purchase price, instead of being deposited and paid by order of the Secretary of the Treasury into the Treasury, was left in the bank without interest, without charge.

The Government then turned around and rented this public building from the bank, paying a rental the amount of which I do not know how much, and occupied the building. The bank kept the money in their vaults and loaned it to citizens at whatever rate of interest they could get, and they paid, as it was stated, no taxes upon the property. I say that is one of the evils which have come from this law, because it is a law enabling the Secretary of the Treasury to pick out his favorite or his political and personal friend, and give him an advantage which others can not secure.

I do not pretend, Mr. President, that this particular Secretary or that would exercise the discretion in that way, but I say it is human nature that he should do so, and in this Government no such power should ever be conferred upon one man.

I admit, and I do not want the Senator from Rhode Island to come back and confront me and say, that is the present law. It is the present law, save and except that this bill is applied to customs dues and proposes to enlarge and extend it to that extent.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BERRY. I do.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is something more than the present law in that on the deposits of the Government in such banks now no interest is paid.

Mr. BERRY. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And under the proposed law the banks will have to pay interest.

Mr. BERRY. I will come to that later. It is different from the present law in that respect. Heretofore the excuse has been that it was simply a deposit, and it was better to deposit the money in the banks than to have it tied up in the Treasury.

Now, the Senator from Connecticut comes in and says this is a change in the fact that the bill provides that the banks shall pay 1½ per cent interest. It is changed in that particular. But I want to put to the Senator from Connecticut the question whether in a free government, where all men are supposed to be equal and to have equal rights before the law, it is just and fair to say that the Secretary of the Treasury may determine to whom he will loan—and I repeat it is nothing but a demand loan—the Government money; to what class of citizens and to what particular citizen of that particular class he will loan it, when another class, equally responsible, equally deserving, is denied that privilege?

There may be two rival banks in any city in this country, one holding a State charter and another holding a charter from the General Government. You take the people's money and turn it over to one of those banks at 1½ per cent interest, and thereby enable the national bank to crush out its less fortunate rival, although it may be able and willing to tender the same class of securities that the national bank does. This, Mr. President, is one of the main objections I have not only to the present law, but to the proposed enlargement.

It was but a few years ago when there was a class of citizens throughout the South and West who believed that they should be granted special privileges. They made the demand upon the Government that they should be loaned money at a low rate of interest and that they should deposit farm products as security for it. The scheme was wild and impracticable. I opposed it because it was class legislation. I say to-day that it was not any more class legislation than this bill is. I admit that the bill was impracticable in execution, but in selecting a particular class and saying that that class only should have the benefit of the people's money, the one scheme was no more objectionable than the present one. This gives it to national banks, and it enables the Secretary of the Treasury to continue the power he now has to designate which particular one of the national banks shall have it.

But, Mr. President, this is not the only objection to the bill. I take it that any man who has watched the operations of these banks in the past, that any man who is familiar with the tremendous power they exercise in this Government to-day, knows full well that when this money is once loaned to them it is not intended that it shall ever be repaid. I assert here upon the floor of the Senate that if misfortune should come, if the revenues should fall off, and if a general demand was made by the Secretary of the Treasury upon national banks to return this money to the Treasury, there would go up a cry from one end of the land to the other that such an order would destroy business; that it would crush out every enterprise; that such an order was suicidal; that there would be no money to circulate among the people; and then would come the same old statement that it was far better to issue more bonds and sell them rather than to force the banks to turn this money back into the Treasury of the United States.

But, Mr. President, another and the most serious objection of all to this bill, as I think, and one which it seems to me can not be answered, is this: When the very law as it stands is enlarged as the Senator from Rhode Island desires to enlarge it, so as to include all receipts of the Government, and when a particular class of individuals can borrow the Government's money at 1½ per cent and loan it out at 5 or 8, as the case may be—4, 5, or 8, and in some parts of the country 10 per cent—when that can be done you array every national bank in this land and every friend of every national bank throughout the country against any reduction of taxation whatever which would tend to deprive them of this privilege.

Mr. President, I say it is an everlasting shame and disgrace to this country that we should collect year by year millions of dollars in the way of taxes from the people and then turn around and vote to loan it out, if you will, to a few favorite bankers, at 1½ per cent, for them to loan it to other people at whatever interest they can secure. And you not only do that, but you put into their hands a power and a force that will prevent the repeal of oppressive tax laws, and the very money that has been wrung from the people by unjust taxation will be used to prevent any reduction of that taxation.

Why can we not reduce the taxes? The Senator from Rhode Island, more, I think, than any other man in this country, has been the champion of high protective duties. He stands to-day as one of those who say that the law shall not be changed. He is at the head of those who say they will stand pat on the high taxes, which he now says bring into the Government Treasury millions of dollars more than what is sufficient to pay the expenses. Now he comes around and says, "Oh, if you tie it up, you will thereby decrease the money in circulation and affect the business of the country." If the Senator from Rhode Island would repeal the infamous tax laws and collect only such money as is required to pay the expenses of this Government, then there would be no necessity for a law authorizing the loan of Government money to these individuals. I say that is an objection which no man can answer.

But Senators say it is far better to turn it over to these banks rather than to tie it up in the Treasury. Mr. President, rather than to give these banks the privilege which this bill confers, it would be far better to take the surplus that now exists and buy in bonds and reduce the debt of the United States. I know the bonds are at a premium, but that would be much better in a Government like ours—a Government which claims that all men have an equal chance—than to wring taxes from the whole people and then say we will loan the money out to a particular class at 1½ per cent interest and enable them to loan it out at a much larger interest, an injustice which, if ever practiced generally in the affairs of this Government, would necessarily undermine the very foundation upon which it rests.

No wonder that the banks in New York have grown immensely rich. No wonder, Mr. President, that Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, the banker of New York, to-day, by reason largely of the transactions he has had with the different Secretaries of the Treasury, has gained such an immense fortune and such a control over the business organizations that he has more power to-day than even the President himself. Only last fall, when the whole country was crying out for fuel, when we were confronted with a coal famine, when the President of the United States called together the owners of the coal mines in Pennsylvania and the representatives of labor organizations and appealed to them on high and patriotic grounds to enter into arbitration to avert the danger which threatened the whole country, the owners of the coal mines, I will not say contemptuously refused, but they did refuse to accede to the proposition of the President.

All over the country there was great anxiety as to the result. The telegraph wires flashed the news that the representatives of labor had expressed a willingness to agree to arbitration if the President would name the arbitrators. But the owners of the coal fields, the papers said, refused. A few days after Mr. Pierpont Morgan was induced or persuaded to come to this city, and when he made the request that the arbitration should go on, the coal barons immediately acceded to his proposition and the arbitration ensued. That is the history of it as given, which I have never seen denied.

The immense power wielded by this banker of New York, by this man who has again and again bought Government securities at a low price, and on one noted occasion, I think, by private contract, and sold them at an immense increase on the markets of New York, is by reason of these unjust laws, by reason of this favoritism, by reason of the immunities enjoyed by the national banks.

The great objection to the banks to-day, and has ever been, is on account of their power to expand or contract the currency. They practice it again and again—to force up bonds or force them down, to reduce the amount of money in circulation or to increase it. They have gone on from year to year until to-day they are the most powerful organizations throughout this country. It is largely due to them that these immense fortunes have been builded up into a few hands and industries have been organized into trusts which are so strong to-day that the Congress of the United States dare not grapple with them.

I know it will be said that this Congress has passed a measure known as the Nelson amendment. What does it do, Mr. President? What is there in the amendment? The sole thing in it is that the Department of Commerce may inquire into the business of these corporations and associations and report the matter to the President of the United States, and if he see proper he may make it public. That is all.

That is the trust law you passed; and now, when we are about to adjourn, your papers and organs throughout the country say we have passed a trust law which will curb the combines and destroy these monstrous trusts. Yet there is upon our Calendar to-day a proposed trust law, prepared by a Republican House and passed by that Republican House almost unanimously, sent here to a Republican Judiciary Committee, reported back by a Republican Senator, and placed upon the Calendar; and yesterday, when we proposed to consider it, there were but two Republicans on the other side of the Chamber who cast their votes for it. Yet you tell us you have passed trust laws, and now, having done that, you propose to enlarge the powers of the national banks.

Mr. President, I am opposed to it. No appeal about the scarcity of money can affect the foundation principle upon which it is based. I remember to have read when I was a boy how President Jackson was engaged in a great fight with the old National Bank and the appeal made on the floor of the Senate of the United States by Mr. Clay and others, far more eloquent than any which has been made or can be made here to-day. That appeal was that if the President removed the deposits from the old National Bank it would so reduce the amount of money in circulation that it would bring sorrow and distress throughout the land. It was painted in the most glowing colors. But the old hero who sat in the Presidential chair unheeded those passionate appeals. He said: "This National Bank has become a menace to the liberties of the people, and, by the Eternal, I will destroy it, whatever the consequences may be."

He did destroy it. He earned the gratitude and the love of the entire people of the country, and to-day his name is more honored and revered for that act than for any other that occurred within his history. He believed in the rights of the people. He believed that in a government like ours, where all should be equal under the law, special privileges conferred by law upon a special class, and leaving the Secretary of the Treasury to select from that class, were dangerous to the Republic.

Mr. President, the power of the old National Bank as compared with the power of the national banks to-day was but of small consequence. The power of the national banks to-day is ten times greater than the power exercised by that one bank which General Jackson said threatened the liberties of the people of America.

To-day, Mr. President, these national banks control elections; they dictate appointments; and, what is far worse, they dictate the passage of laws through the Congress of the United States.

The Senator from Rhode Island said to me this morning, I think it was, that he had letters from some national banks who were opposed to this law. Mr. President, another Senator on this floor told me a day or two ago that when the bill was first printed he received a telegram from a strong bank in his city urging him to oppose it, but within a day or two thereafter he received a letter from the same president of the same bank telling him that he had changed his mind and that he hoped the Senator from Virginia would favor the law.

When the Senator from Rhode Island tells me that the national banks are opposed to this measure, and then when I see him surrounded by the men who are urging the passage of the bill and say that they are in favor of it and the national banks are against it, I say he states two propositions which can never be reconciled.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BERRY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MASON. I want the Senator to understand that so far as the banks of Chicago are concerned, I have received this dispatch this morning and they are opposed to the measure. I represent the city of Chicago as a part of my State. They protest against the bill and I feel constrained to vote with the Senator against its passage. If the Senator will permit me I will state their reason.

Mr. BERRY. Not now; after I get through.

Mr. MASON. I simply wanted——

Mr. BERRY. I beg not to be interrupted further now.

Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois has simply admitted what I had already charged, that the power of these national banks to control the votes of Senators and Members is most potent. It had its influence, it seems, on him, and perhaps on others.

I want to emphasize another thing. It may be that there are some banks in Chicago or Kansas City against it, but I repeat, the Senator from Rhode Island has been the friend of these banks from the time they were organized; he has been their champion; and when he, with others from the East whom I could name, but will not, tells me that the national banks of New York or those generally throughout the country are opposed to this bill, I tell him I can not but think that he is mistaken. I can not entertain such a belief. If they opposed it they would be here in these lobbies and in that Marble Room opposing it with all the power that they have.

But whether they are opposed to it or for it, Mr. President, it matters not with me. I take my stand upon the ground that this is an enlargement, an extension, of the power which is given to a Secretary of the Treasury which should never be conferred upon any mortal man in a free government. I take my stand against it because it selects a particular class of our citizens engaged in a particular pursuit, and gives to them privileges and rights that are not conferred upon others. I take my stand against it because it will enable the Republican party to still maintain the high and unjust taxes that are levied upon the people to-day. It is an injustice which no argument can justify to levy taxes upon the people over and above what is necessary to pay the expenses of the Government. And then you turn around and either give or loan it at 1½ per cent interest to particular individuals whose power and influence will thereby be increased.

I do not say how this Secretary would use it, but we all know that it is one of the most powerful engines in the hands of a political party that was ever given to any mortal man. We know that the power given him to say how much and to what particular individual this money shall be loaned will enable him to secure such a campaign fund for political purposes as has never been used in any campaign in the past. I can not conceive of a law more mischievous upon the statute book than this one which proposes to amend and enlarge its powers.

But it is said, Mr. President, that it ought to pass because it gives the chance to deposit securities as collateral for the loan of this money over and above and beyond that which is extended by the present law. That is true, Mr. President. The bill proposes to take State securities. It proposes to take municipal and county bonds of a certain character. The Senator has reduced it now to bonds of cities of 10,000 inhabitants instead of 50,000, as the bill was originally reported. But whether it be much or little, whether the purpose be to enhance the securities, State, municipal, or first railroad bonds, I know not and I care not, but I for one will never vote to enlarge and extend the power, which is already greater than ever ought to have been conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury.

I do not know; it may be that I am wrong, but if I have learned one thing more than another of the Democratic faith and the belief of the Democratic party, it has always been from the days of Jefferson and Jackson down to the present time that we stood for the equality of all people before the law, and that we stood in absolute and unalterable opposition to any law that conferred special privileges upon one class which would not be extended to all other classes.

We are unalterably opposed to legislation made for the benefit of particular individuals as contrary to that of the great masses of the people. That is the faith in which I have been raised. Whether the national banks are for it or against it; whether the Democratic party or any member of it supports it or opposes it, I, for one, so long as I have a seat upon this floor, will cast my vote and raise my voice against any legislation of this character which confers additional power on the national banks and special benefits upon particular individuals.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. BATE. I have been out of the Senate all the morning. I offer an amendment, if it is in order. I ask if the bill is now amendable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the amendment can be offered under the rule. Does the Senator desire to have it read at the present time?

Mr. BATE. Yes, sir. It is short. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add as a new section at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. —. That all the laws of the United States imposing any tax on bank notes issued by banks or corporations or associations chartered or authorized by any State in the Union be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for a moment, simply to offer an amendment?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator need not have it read now.

Mr. CLAY. It is to come in on page 3, at the end of section 1. I ask that it be read. It consists of only three or four lines.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, at the end of section 1, add:

That as far as practicable the Secretary of the Treasury shall fairly distribute the deposits herein authorized throughout the country.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I have always been opposed to any financial legislation having in view hard times. I am opposed to hard times. I am opposed to contraction in any form which shall interfere with business.

It is impossible to regulate the revenues so as to have no surplus on hand. In fact that would be a very dangerous experiment. We would get into trouble when the revenues fall off, and we would have to borrow money in emergencies, as we have done on various occasions, paying an enormous interest. We had to sell 4 percents, that had been sold theretofore for 1 cent premium for every year they had to run, at 4½ per cent, when, in fact, the market price would put them at 30 per cent. We have seen those things happen on account of a deficiency in the revenues. We have seen such emergencies and we have seen panics. Any deficiency in the revenue or any idea that the Treasury would run dry would produce a panic and embarrass business. I do not believe we ought to have a condition of things which would produce that result.

This is a plain proposition. We have a surplus revenue. It is a necessity. In order to carry on the business we must have it. The only question is whether we shall withdraw it from circulation and make contraction and hard times, and an irregular contraction because the amount will vary at various times.

For a long time the Government has had the right to deposit surplus revenues in the banks. At first they did not deposit receipts from customs because those receipts were payable in gold and had to be reserved to pay interest on the bonds. That is the reason why the distinction was made at the time. That practice has gone on now for nearly forty years. The privilege has been exercised constantly. There ought to have been such legislation before this time. It should have been exercised in a way less injurious to the interests of the country. It should have been more general. More banks should have had the privilege and the security should have been enlarged so that more banks could take it and have a small interest paid.

No banks are opposed to this measure unless it be those that had the benefit of the former legislation and expect to have the deposits, on which they are not paying interest. They may be opposed to it, but I am inclined to think that the banks in general will be in favor of it. It will simply keep the money in circulation and stop contraction and hard times.

I hope there will be no vote in the Senate against the passage of this very just measure, which will give us more money, and more stable money, and give us better times. If the time should come when there would be contraction, if next year the business should fall off and hard times should come, if stocks should fall, if the price of property should fall, and if men should become embarrassed, they would not be pleased with the votes of those who kept money tied up in the Treasury which ought to be in circulation.

Now, it is proposed to put this money in circulation. I think this is a very good plan. It takes solvent banks. They put up a good security and they pay 1½ per cent interest on the deposit. That keeps the money in circulation and gives good times to the country and makes stability, and it does not interfere with any monetary principle. In fact this is about the only way we can keep the money in circulation, because there will be more money collected than is paid out on occasions, and sometimes largely more. But to stop then and repeal your revenue laws and produce a deficit would be very dangerous. If we repeal the revenue laws it must be done cautiously or we will produce a deficit. A deficit is a most disastrous thing. It makes countless millions mourn, because it brings bankruptcy and ruin to the homes of the people in general.

We have not forgotten the crisis even of 1893, where millions suffered and the losses that were incurred from the contraction and the deficiency in the currency. There is now no deficit. The country now is immensely prosperous. We have good times. The output of gold has given us a basis, the whole world is moving on, and it would be a shame now if on account of lack of business principles we should tie up the money in the Treasury and make the volume of money irregular and make times hard without any occasion for it at all.

Nobody can be injured by putting the money in solvent banks with good security at 1½ per cent. It certainly will be better than to have it tied up in the Treasury; and we must have a surplus or be in danger every minute. That being the case, do not tie it up in the Treasury, but let it be used for the people; let the people have the money. That is my view of it; and I hope this bill, which is a very good measure, will pass.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question. I see that on page 2 of the bill it provides that "any legally authorized bonds issued for municipal purposes by any city or county in the United States which has been in existence as a city or county for a period of twenty-five years."

I ask the Senator if it is not true that if the bill shall remain in that shape there are ten States which have been admitted into the Union during the last twenty-five years, and that the cities and counties in those ten States would be practically outlawed by the bill?

I understood the Senator to move to strike out "50,000 inhabitants," in line 19, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof "10,000 inhabitants." I also understood the Senator to say that he would move to amend the bill on page 2, line 24, by striking out the words:

Or the first-mortgage bonds of any railroad company, not including street-railway bonds, which has paid dividends of not less than 4 per cent per annum regularly and continuously on its entire capital stock for a period of not less than ten years previous to the deposit of the bonds.

I believe the Senator has two amendments pending. One is to strike out "50,000 inhabitants" and insert "10,000 inhabitants"——

Mr. ALDRICH. That has already been adopted.

Mr. CLAY. It has been adopted?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. That will leave the bill, then, as I understand it, so that bonds issued by a city of 10,000 inhabitants can be used as security for national deposits.

Now, I ask the Senator does he think it just that a county or town must have been in existence for twenty-five years in order to enjoy the privileges set forth in this bill? Is it not true that if you take North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Montana, and several other States and the cities and towns in those States, they would not enjoy any of the privileges allowed other States?

Mr. ALDRICH. What number of years would the Senator suggest?

Mr. CLAY. I would not have any number of years. If a State has been organized, and if a county has been organized, and if towns have been organized, it strikes me that there ought not to be a distinction.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I do not propose to debate this bill at any length, but I could not get my own consent to permit it to come to a vote without expressing my emphatic dissent from it both in principle and in application.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a moment to ask unanimous consent about a matter which pertains to the convenience of a number of Senators?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent that it be agreed that a recess of the Senate shall be taken to-day, and that whenever the recess is taken it shall be until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock, in order that we may have eulogies upon the various members of the House of which notice has been given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Limiting the session to-morrow to eulogies?

Mr. ALDRICH. Limiting it to eulogies.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I think a statement is due from me. I do not care particularly to object. I do object, however, very strenuously. I have consented to be one of the Senators to deliver a eulogy to-day, and I hardly think at this time we ought to rescind our practice, which we have had so long. I myself agreed to deliver a eulogy to oblige a brother Senator, and out of high regard for the memory of a deceased member. I can not be here to-morrow. I want it publicly understood that I was prepared to perform my part of the sad duty to-day, as this was the time agreed some time ago.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a moment? I will state that this arrangement is perfectly satisfactory to all the parties interested—that is, the gentlemen who gave the notices, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], and I hope the Senater will not object to the arrangement.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me a moment to say one word?

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator let me finish my sentence first?

Mr. BERRY. Very well.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] will not object to this arrangement. The Senator must be as well aware as I am, in this stage of the public business, with only a few hours remaining of the session, that to avoid an extraordinary session of Congress it will be necessary for the Senate to remain in session for the transaction of public business. The House of Representatives, if I am permitted to refer to that body, have very wisely and very properly provided that their services of this kind shall be held on Sunday. It seems to me that there can be no good purpose in forcing the Senate to give up discussion and consideration of important business for this occasion, especially as my proposition is satisfactory to the Senators concerned.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I only wish to say a few words personal to myself.

I had promised to submit some remarks to-day in regard to one of the deceased members of the House of Representatives. I am ready to do so to-day, but I can not do so to-morrow. Of course, however, I would not inconvenience or stand in the way of what is the desire of Senators who represent the State from which that member came, and who requested me to make the remarks.

I want to add to what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] has said that, while I am not going to object to the unanimous consent which has been asked, at the same time I do not believe that we should change the practice which has so long existed in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Perhaps it would be proper for the Chair to suggest that in the case of Mr. Cummings, of New York, leave was given that eulogies which were not delivered on the occasion of the commemorative services because of the lack of time or opportunity to do so by Senators might subsequently be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from Idaho will withdraw his objection to the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I desire to state that if anybody is responsible for legislation being crowded in at the last days of the session I think the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] should bear his share of that responsibility. For fourteen weeks he and his colleagues have discussed a measure here which to-day has 50 votes in its favor in this Senate. They would not permit a vote upon it. They consumed time, one Senator speaking for ten days. And now the Senator comes in here, in the closing days of this session, with a Senate bill which involves a question which has been considered by the people for a great many years in different ways—the elasticity of the currency—a proposition which contemplates that money shall be had when it is wanted, at the time of moving crops, etc. It is a question which the country has not been able to solve satisfactorily, though efforts have been made at different times to present some solution of it. If there is any merit in the bill which the Senator from Rhode Island now proposes, it is that it will prevent stringency in the money market and prevent panics.

I bow to the Senator from Rhode Island. I agree with the splendid article which I saw in the Saturday Evening Post of Philadelphia not long ago headed "The Real Boss of the United States," on the front of which was a magnificent picture of the Senator from Rhode Island. [Laughter.] The article went on to tell the secret of his power, stating it to be that he was the essence of the protection doctrine of the Republican party, and through that he had more power than all the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives combined. The writer dissected the character and ability of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] with great skill and predicted that when it came to the fight now pending in the Republican party——

Mr. BURTON. If I may interrupt the Senator for a moment, I have been requested to make some remarks in the course of the eulogies to be delivered on a late member of the House of Representatives. Do I understand that we are on the eulogies now? [Laughter.]

Mr. DUBOIS. If the Senator from Kansas had done me the honor to listen to me he would have known that I was not delivering a eulogy on a dead man, but paying a tribute to the most lively man in the United States to-day. [Laughter.] At the end of the article to which I have referred, after speaking of the struggle which is taking place in the Republican party between those who want to revise the tariff and those who do not, the writer said that the President of the United States now found himself confronted with the Senator from Rhode Island; that the Senator from Rhode Island will remain here for a number of years unless a political revolution shall occur; that the Senate was necessary to the occupant of the White House, but that the White House occupant was not necessary to the Senate.

As I have said, the convenience of everybody must be put to one side. The President of the United States has sent special messages here asking that we should pass treaties and that we should pass the Philippine tariff bill. They are not up; but the bill which the Senator from Rhode Island wants to pass is up. He not only led the fight against the omnibus statehood bill, but on his motion the omnibus statehood bill was displaced this morning, only 17 votes being recorded against the motion. I pay tribute to the Senator.

The other Chamber, if I am well informed, is ready for his bill. It is a Senate bill. Numerous amendments are pending to it; it can be again amended in the House of Representatives; the bill, with those amendments, then goes into conference, and perhaps the amendments which go out here now will appear in the bill, and then we shall be in the closing hours of the Congress and nobody must object to the conference report on the bill.

Mr. President, I do not think a measure of this importance should be brought in here as a Senate measure in the closing days of this session, when we can hear from no one except the bankers of New York. I am not objecting to that. I realize fully the importance of the bankers of New York to the country at large. I understand if there is any crisis in New York it affects the entire country. I am willing to give the bankers all power which is consistent with the rights of others, but there are various other interests to be considered in connection with this bill, and they can not be fairly and justly considered at this late day. It is plain to everyone that the Senator from Rhode Island intends to put this bill through now. He has displaced the Philippine bill; he has displaced the treaties; he has his party lined up on the other side to hold on to this bill, no matter if it defeats everything which the President has recommended by special message. The Senator does not, and can not, give time for the consideration of this measure as it should be considered in all its bearings.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. DUBOIS. I yield.

Mr. DIETRICH. I wish to state that some days ago the chairman of the Philippine Committee called up the Philippine bill and there was not a single objection to that bill except upon the Democratic side. I understand that all the Republicans are ready and willing to pass that bill.

Mr. DUBOIS. Well, Mr. President, what difference does that make? Does the Senator from Nebraska, who was one of those who stood here for fourteen weeks filibustering, mean to say to us in the closing hours of the session that because the Republicans are now ready to pass a measure which affects the West and the South, "You must keep still; we are ready to pass the bill; do not say anything. We have talked fourteen weeks; we have consumed the time, and now nothing is left for you to do except to accept, without debate, the proposition which we on our side have agreed to; you can not have sufficient and adequate debate in this Chamber on this bill, and you can have none in the other Chamber; it will be put through there under the rules in fifteen minutes." Is that fair?

This is a question, as I say, which the country has been considering in one form or another for years. When you pass your bill, do it after consideration, after all parts of the country have been heard from in regard to it, after they have had an opportunity to digest it and offer what suggestions they think are right about it, taking it up in an orderly way at the beginning of the session, and not in the closing days, when you ask every Senator to lay aside his personal convenience and his feelings in order that you may rush it through.

Mr. President, I do not think that in order to pass a measure of this kind at this time we should change the custom of the Senate and deliver eulogies on deceased members of the other House on Sunday, when we have agreed that they should be delivered to-day. I do not think the situation under all the circumstances justifies us in doing these things.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand the Senator from Idaho to object?

Mr. DUBOIS. I object.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I move that at 6 o'clock to-day the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow, the session to-morrow to be for the delivery of eulogies on deceased members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. TURNER. I have no objection to yielding to a request for unanimous consent, but I shall not yield for any motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I give notice that later in the day I shall make that motion.

Mr. TURNER. I was proceeding to say, Mr. President, when taken off my feet by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], that I regard this bill as absolutely indefensible on any proper principles of government, and as extending the grossest kind of favoritism to a class in this country who have already been too highly favored by the laws of the United States, and as being extremely indiscreet and inconvenient in the result which it will bring upon this country.

I hope our friends on the other side will consider this bill carefully before they exert their majority to put it upon the statute book, because, to my humble apprehension, it is the most vicious measure which has been introduced in either branch of Congress since I have had the honor to serve in this body.

We had a bill before this body two years ago of malodorous memory, called the ship-subsidy bill. Desperate efforts were made to put that bill upon the statute books of the country. That bill only proposed to take $9,000,000 a year out of the Treasury as a gift to a few favorite individuals. This bill proposes to take anywhere from one hundred to one hundred and fifty million dollars out of the Treasury of the United States and confer its use upon a few favorite individuals in this country, I venture to say, for all time to come.

This bill comes to us in the specious guise of an amendment of already existing law. It is supposed to be an extension of innocent and meritorious provisions of already existing law. The law to which I refer is one which permits the Government to make deposits of its internal revenues in the national banks of the country as governmental depositories. That law has always been open to very serious question as to its policy and to very serious criticism as to the manner of its execution; but something might be said for it upon the question of policy. The internal revenues of the country are collected throughout the country generally, and it may become important to the Government that it should save the trouble and expense of transferring those revenues to the Federal Government and then back again to remote parts of the country where they may be needed for the purposes of expenditure. That is all that can be said in favor of the law as it exists to-day.

But this bill, Mr. President, proposes to apply this law to all the revenues of the Government, customs as well as internal revenue. It proposes to go further than that—not to deposit these moneys in these banks for the convenience of the Government of the United States, to be drawn out whenever the convenience of the Government may require, but it proposes to go to the extraordinary extent of making a loan to these banks at the rate of 1½ per cent upon securities which have never been regarded as sufficient for such purposes in our legislation heretofore, in order that these banks may loan this money out to the merchant, to the manufacturer, and to the farmer at anywhere from 6 to 8 per cent per annum, the Government receiving, as its compensation for this loan, interest at the rate of 1½ per cent per annum. I do not see how any Senator can get his consent to vote for a measure of this kind.

It is the old subtreasury scheme of the Populist party in principle and in application, except that the beneficiaries of the scheme are not the farmers of the country, but they are the national bankers of the country. That scheme was laughed to scorn by the intelligence of this country, and properly so, and my Republican friends will find that if they now adopt this principle of that scheme, turning it to the benefit of their friends, the bankers of this country, the people of this country, who condemned the subtreasury scheme, will visit an equal condemnation upon them for the adoption of the same scheme in the interest of different beneficiaries.

But it is said, Mr. President, as an additional reason why this extraordinary measure should be adopted that to keep this money in the Treasury will be to cause stringency in the money of the country, which is liable to cause trouble and disaster; but I suggest to my friends on the other side if they want to get this money out into the country let them pay the debts of the Government with it. The money will then be put into circulation and the interest which we are now paying upon those debts will be saved to the national Treasury. If there be no law requiring the application of these surplus moneys in the Treasury to the national debt, then I submit to the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island that it is just as easy to frame a bill applying these surplus moneys to the national debt as it is to frame this bill which he has framed, to loan it out to the bankers of this country.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. TURNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH. I supposed the Senator, with his familiarity with this and all other questions of a similar nature, was aware that there was already upon the statute book the necessary legislation to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to use the money in the Treasury to pay the debts of the United States. There is a sinking fund there.

Mr. TURNER. I presume that is true. If it be true, then I do not understand why the Secretary of the Treasury has not executed the law and paid these surplus moneys of the Treasury out in liquidation of the national debt instead of keeping them there to form an argument why we should loan them out to the bankers of the country in order that he might prevent stringency in the money market and disaster to the business interests of this country.

I venture to say, as the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has said, that if we enter upon this policy of loaning out the money of the Government to individuals of any class or character, the time will never come when this Government will feel justified in calling those moneys in.

I have lately been charged, as a member of the Judiciary Committee of this body, with the duty of assisting in the framing of antitrust legislation. It is undoubtedly true that this country is filled with monopolies in the manufacture of all of the necessaries of life; that every article of use or convenience in this country is the subject of complete and perfect monopoly; but when we came to deal with the framing of laws for the purpose of curing this great evil, the greatest obstacle that we found, the one that appealed most strongly to every member of the committee, including those who were most earnest in their desire to curb or control or destroy these monopolies, was the fact that in attempting to do so by substantive legislation of serious character and import, the effort was likely to bring panic and disaster to the country; and, if it did not do that, was likely to cause a stoppage in the supply of these useful and necessary articles which these monopolies were furnishing to the country. So that if you once give a special privilege or if you once permit any particular class in this country to take unto themselves a special privilege, you are met with all sorts of obstacles in attempting to deal by law with the evils which arise therefrom.

So with this measure: Let this money be put out among the national banks at an interest rate instead of being deposited subject to the call of the Government at a moment's notice; let that condition of affairs continue for a few years, and you will be met here upon the floor of the Senate and the floor of the other House with the proposition that any attempt to call these moneys into the Treasury will result in panic and disaster. And probably if you attempt to do so—if you should get a President of the character of Andrew Jackson, who looks at the interests of the Government rather than at the interests of wealth and corporations, who undertakes, when the interests of the Government require it, to call in this money—then you are very liable to have panic and disaster. The time to avoid these things is right now, when the Congress of the United States is invited to enter upon that species of legislation which may bring about such results.

Another reason why this legislation ought not to pass is that it is lending the strength of this Government to the bolstering up of a certain class of securities with which we have nothing to do; which ought to stand upon their own merits or rise and fall upon their own bottoms. It would not be so bad if this were confined, in addition to the bonds of the United States, to the bonds of States, counties, and municipal corporations; but when the Congress of the United States goes into the business of bolstering up the bonds of the railroad companies of this country, then it has taken an extraordinary step; and while you are bolstering up the bonds of the railroads of the country by this class of legislation you are bearing down and depressing the bonds of the Government of the United States by taking away from them that exclusive use which has heretofore been given to them and which has resulted in giving them a very great portion of the value which they now have in the markets of this country.

These reasons seem to me, Mr. President, to be conclusive against the policy and against the principle of this bill. If it shall be forced as a law by the votes of a Republican majority in this Congress, it will be simply another evidence to my mind and another evidence to the mind and the apprehension of the people of this country, and it will not require many evidences of that kind to bring conviction to their minds, that the Republican party in this country is wedded to the trusts and the corporations and the money power, and that it proposes to wield its control of the country in their interests rather than in the interests of the common people of this land.

We had the extraordinary spectacle yesterday of the Republican majority in this Chamber voting down the consideration of the antitrust bill, which received careful consideration by the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives; which passed that body almost unanimously; which came here and was considered by the Judiciary Committee of this body; which was reported to the Senate more than ten days ago, and which has been pending here for consideration and action ever since.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TURNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose there is no Senator who has given more attention to the antitrust bill than I have, and I suppose there is no Senator who more earnestly desires its consideration than I do. I do not mean that there may not in discussion turn out to be serious defects in it which should be amended, but in the main I think it a healthy and valuable piece of legislation. I voted against taking it up because to take it up would not at that time, as everybody in the Senate knows perfectly, have resulted in its passage, but would only have displaced a treaty which, it seemed to me, we were bound by the strongest considerations of national good faith to consider and dispose of at once.

Mr. TURNER. Well, I do not know why the Senator assumes that if the trust bill had received consideration on yesterday it would not have passed the Senate. I do not know whether it would or not.

Mr. HOAR. I did not say that it would not have passed. I said it would have displaced a treaty. The Senator can judge himself whether in the brief time at our command we could have passed it. If we could, I should have been glad to do it.

Mr. TURNER. I understood the Senator to say the only effect of the vote in taking up that bill would have been to have secured its consideration, without hope of its passage, at the expense of the treaty. Now, I should like to ask my friend, the Senator from Massachusetts, whether this bill now under consideration has not displaced the same treaty?

Mr. HOAR. I do not think it has.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then, how would the other bill have done so?

Mr. TURNER. Has that treaty yet been ratified?

Mr. HOAR. As I understand it, the conflict on which we voted yesterday was a conflict between going into executive session and the consideration of a conference report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. HOAR. What was it, then?

Mr. BLACKBURN. My motion was to stop the procedure on the conference report made by the Senator from Massachusetts and proceed to the consideration of the antitrust bill.

Mr. HOAR. I was thinking for the moment that it was a conflict between going into executive session and the conference report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It was the Senator's own conference report on the bill for the protection of the President which I antagonized.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. TURNER. I do not care anything about that. I have said all I wanted to say on this floor, except I was proceeding to point out the course of our Republican friends on yesterday in voting down the consideration of the antitrust bill—a bill in the interest of the people of this country, a bill to prevent the trusts and the combines from going down into their pockets elbow deep and gouging them, as they have been doing for the last five or ten years—the contrast between that action and the ready action of the same majority this morning in bringing up, by the same Republican votes, for consideration and passage this bill, which is manifestly not in the interest of the common people of the land, but in the interest of the national bankers of the land. If our Republican friends want to take that onus, that burden, that responsibility upon their shoulders, they are entitled to take it. I bid them Godspeed in the job.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I expect to vote for this bill. I expect to vote for it because the purpose for which it is framed seems to me to be a good one, and because of my great respect and deference for some of the persons who are responsible for framing it and for some men not responsible for framing it, but whose judgment and patriotism are entitled to the profoundest respect.

But I confess I feel great anxiety that this policy, which leaves it in the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to affect public business in times of great monetary pressure, shall not be carried too far. In the first place, it is putting into the hands of a dishonest or unwise official an enormous power over the business of the country.

I do not now speak of this particular law, but of the general power of the Secretary of the Treasury to interpose in times of special excitement. That power has been wielded in the past with very great and salutary effect, I think, in every case where the Treasury has interposed, from the time of the Black Friday down to the present time. But it is a dangerous power, and even if it be wielded wisely and discreetly, the result is that the existing Government is held responsible by the public; is held responsible, if it can be done, by its antagonists for everything that goes wrong in financial matters. Whenever there is a panic or a pinch the clamor is raised that the Treasury Department or the banks are responsible.

Now, they do this thing in general better in England. The Bank of England is not the Government. It is not controlled by the Government. If the Bank of England does anything extraordinary in time of commercial danger, all the Government does, if it be necessary afterwards, is to secure the directors from personal liability for violation of law: to indemnify them.

Mr. President, I hope that the efforts of financiers like the honorable Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and other gentlemen who are to succeed them in this body, will be directed toward divorcing the Government of the United States from any relation to the financial conditions of the country.

This bill contains no protection against favoritism. The only protection there is against favoritism as against communities or individual banks is in the wisdom and discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] offered an amendment. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Massachusetts was listening when it was read.

Mr. HOAR. I have not seen the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Perhaps we had better have the amendment read.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have it read. I was about to say that I hoped some emphatic declaration of that purpose might get into the bill before it was finally disposed of.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Georgia offered an amendment which I was inclined to accept. I should like to have it read.

Mr. HOAR. I should be glad to have the Secretary read it now, if the Chair please.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be read.

Mr. HOAR. I retain the floor.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 1:

That as far as practicable the Secretary of the Treasury shall fairly distribute the deposits herein authorized throughout the country.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. That removes the difficulty to a certain extent.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. At any rate it is an effort in the right direction.

There is one other practical consideration which I should like to suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island. I have had some experience in former days by reason of a professional relation to various banks that have been in trouble and difficulty, and there is a very uncomfortable condition so far as concerns depositors in such institutions (and the same applies to all cases of sureties on bonds to the Government) growing out of the fact that the assets are tied up in case of embarrassment, and they must await the action of the United States. No estate of a deceased person or of an insolvent person can ever be settled when there is an obligation held by the United States, and a great deal of trouble and injustice arises.

Now, in this amendment, on the third page, it is provided that "the United States shall have a lien on the current assets of banks." I suppose that means every available property of the banks. There is no provision made as to how the lien shall be enforced, but I suppose it will be enforced by some equity process instituted in behalf of the Government.

The United States shall have a lien on the current assets of banks in which public moneys are deposited for the repayment of the same—on demand of the Treasurer of the United States as aforesaid; but the securities deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury for the safe-keeping of such moneys shall be sold before the said lien is enforced.

That is, the public money—

The depositor may be a person of small means. He will have to wait first until a legal proceeding has been instituted, and that legal proceeding can not be begun until the Treasurer of the United States chooses to enforce the lien and liquidate the claim of the United States. I have an amendment here.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. HOAR. I move this amendment, to be inserted at the end of section 1:

But the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, permit such assets, or any part thereof, to be applied to the discharge of the other obligations of the bank to which they are lawfully applicable if, in his judgment, that may be done consistently with the security of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should be glad to have the amendment adopted. I think it is a very wise one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not in order at this time. The Senator from Tennessee has offered an amendment, which is the pending amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. On behalf of the committee I will accept this amendment so far as I can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island accepts the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I desire to inquire whether an amendment is now in order. If so, I desire to offer one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order at the present time as there is an amendment pending. It will be in order a little later on.

Mr. BERRY. Has the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts been agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of line 22, section 1, the following:

But the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, permit such assets, or any part thereof, to be applied to the discharge of the other obligations of the bank to which they are lawfully applicable if, in his judgment, that may be done consistently with the security of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is accepted by the Senator from Rhode Island. The amendment pending now is the one offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BERRY. Has the Senator from Massachusetts concluded his remarks?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3560) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to couple their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, and amended April 1, 1896.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6139) to provide for the organization of private corporations in the district of Alaska.

PROPOSED ANTITRUST LEGISLATION.

Mr. BERRY. As there is neither treaty nor conference report now pending, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the measure known as the Littlefield antitrust bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 17) requiring corporations engaged in interstate commerce to make returns, prohibiting rebates and discriminations and the use of interstate commerce in attempts to destroy competition, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BERRY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi (when the name of Mr. MONEY was called). By arrangement with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] my colleague [Mr. MONEY] stands paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am paired with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. With the consent of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO], I will transfer my pair to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] and will vote.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. It is agreeable to me.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I vote "nay."

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I notice that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is absent. So I withdraw my vote, being paired with him.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—30.

So the Senate refused to consider the bill.

SAFE-KEEPING OF PUBLIC MONEY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 7301) to further provide for the safe-keeping of public money, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, as I shall probably find myself differing with a majority of my political associates on this bill, I desire briefly to state the reasons which will induce me to vote for its passage. According to my view of it, neither the principle nor the policy of the national banking act is involved in it; but it presents simply the question of what shall be done with money collected by the Government. Shall it be locked in the vaults of the Treasury and thus be withdrawn from circulation, or shall it be deposited in the banks and thus be available for the uses of trade?

If I were permitted to frame the laws of this Republic, the Government would have no surplus to dispose of, because I would so frame those laws that nothing more would be collected from the people in the way of taxes than is necesssary to provide for the economical administration of the Government. A hundred times in my life I have assailed the Republican party for its system of taxation, against which I have alleged a twofold injustice. I have asserted, first, that it was an injustice against the taxpayer in that it compelled him to contribute more than was necessary toward the support of the Government. And I have alleged, in the second place, that it was an injury to the business interests of the country in that it removed from the channels of commerce and trade money which was needed for its uses.

If I had my way I would correct at one and the same time and by a single law the injustice against the taxpayer and the injury to the trade of the country. But as I can not have my way and discontinue the collection of what I consider an unnecessary revenue, and can not relieve the taxpayer of his unjust burden, I intend at least to make the other part of my contention good by voting to restore, in the only way possible under existing law, to the channels of circulation the money which I think the Government unnecessarily collects. I venture to say there is not a Senator on this side of the Chamber who would to-morrow, if given the power, take the responsibility of withdrawing from the commerce of this country $300,000,000.

The natural instinct of every Democratic Senator is to vote against every measure proposed by a Republican Senator. I myself share that. Always my first impulse is to vote against any proposition the other side presents. My friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] says to me I am justified in suspecting it. [Laughter.] But when there is presented a plain business proposition I propose to meet it—decide it upon its merits. As sensible business men we deposit our money in the banks when we do not need it, and most of us when we do need it, because it is more convenient to check it out in payment of our daily transactions than it is to carry it in our pockets, and I can see no good reason why the Government should not do the same.

The policy of depositing public money is not up for discussion even now, because that is the existing policy of the Government. Already it is authorized to place certain collections on deposit, and if any living man can give me any rational distinction between money collected from internal-revenue sources and money collected from customs, as the matter stands to-day, I should like to hear the explanation.

There was a time, possibly, when specie payments were involved, that there was a proper distinction; but there is none to-day. If it is just and proper for the Government to deposit in the banks money which it collects as internal-revenue taxes I should like to hear some good reason why it is not equally just and proper to deposit likewise the money which it receives in customs dues.

This bill commends itself to my mind for another reason. It not only puts the money collected from the people back into the channels of circulation, but it compels the bonds of the United States to share with the bonds of States, counties, and municipalities a privilege that it now exclusively enjoys. Our friends talk about special classes and special privileges. They ought to recollect that in voting for this bill to-day we vote to compel the bonds of the United States Government to share what is now their exclusive privilege of being deposited as security for the public funds with the bonds of the cities, counties, and municipalities of this entire country.

As the bill was originally introduced, I shared the very general prejudice against the proposition to accept railroad bonds, and yet that was more sentimental than substantial, because if the Government is going to leave this money on deposit for the purpose of allowing it still to be available for the uses of trade, then it is a question of security, not the kind of security except where the kind is related to the sufficiency. We had just as well be frank with ourselves and say that there is a good deal of demagoguery in the objection to any kind of security that is sufficient.

There is an amendment reported by the committee to which I object. It is the provision that gives the Government a first lien upon the assets of the bank as against all other depositors. The Government takes a special security for its deposit, and the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to demand more security is ample, if what he has becomes impaired. Not content with that, it is further proposed the Government shall have a prior lien over the widow who had her last dollar deposited in that bank. In other words, the Government, with a power to take a collateral security, asserts and enforces a lien against the very money you have deposited in the bank.

My objection is not only practical but it is also rather theoretical. Undoubtedly the Government has ample power and a perfect right to say to the banks that before they can receive its money on deposit they must give it a special security. But I do not believe the Government ought to go further and, projecting itself between the bank and its depositors, vary the contract which exists to-day between every bank and every depositor on its books. As the law now stands, every depositor stands on an equal footing with every other depositor. That is a contractual relation between the banks and their depositors, and whatever may be the authority of the Government to exact ample or more than ample security as against the bank, I do not believe it just and wise for the Government to violate the contract of every bank with its depositors and assert for itself a prior lien as against them.

Another provision in the bill that I should prefer to have stricken out is the provision for interest. I believe that it would be better to avoid all question about the Government loaning money as contradistinguished from depositing it. By simply depositing its money and requiring the bank to perform whatever services a bank usually performs for one of its depositors, we would avoid a feature which serves to confuse the real nature of the transaction and allows it to be charged that the Government is loaning its money to the banks, when as a matter of fact the Government is only depositing it.

Of course some gentlemen will say a deposit is a loan, but my experience with the banks is that a loan is different from a deposit. I am sometimes a depositor; I am frequently a borrower, and I have discovered the difference between a loan and a deposit on more than one occasion.

It looks to me like it would be well for us to preserve what is actually a difference between a deposit and a loan, and as it is not the practice of the banks usually to pay interest on deposits, I have a belief that they ought not to be permitted to do so here. They ought to have no moral claim upon the Government for the use of this money. They ought not to be able to look a Treasury official in the face and say, "I am paying you interest on this deposit;" but they ought to be made the mere servants or agents of the Government, leaving its officers to demand its funds whenever the public convenience or safety may require it.

I know it is easy to arouse a certain popular prejudice by claiming that you are according privileges to the banks. For so widely used an institution the banks are the most extensively abused in the world. You could no more progress under this civilization and this commerce without banks of discount and deposit than you could proceed without railroads, or factories, or storehouses. I have no prejudice against them. There is not a Senator in this Chamber who hesitates to use them whenever his business or even his personal convenience requires, and surely it can not be that they ought to be feared and dreaded, and that they ought to be assailed and denounced whenever it becomes necessary for the Government to touch them in any of its relations.

Let us be frank, not only with ourselves, but with the country. The only argument against this is that it is an advantage to the banks. Suppose you grant it, although the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] says that the banks in the city of Chicago are almost unanimously opposed to it. I myself happen to know that the Senator on this side of the Chamber who is most largely interested in national banks is an earnest opponent of the bill. But it makes no difference to me whether the banks favor or oppose its passage. Let us suppose that it is an advantage to the banks. I have no objection to it on that account, provided it is no disadvantage to the people. If it is no disadvantage to the people, then I have no objection to it because it is an advantage to the banks.

I denounce a special privilege to any man and every man, because a special privilege to one implies a special burden on the other. If by some legislative enactment I could make every man in the country rich and happy I would be glad to pass a law to do it. The reason why I vote against all laws to increase the fortunes of one man is because I know the law creates no wealth, and, therefore, when it confers wealth upon one it can only do so by taking wealth from another who has created it.

When Senators tell me that this bill is a benefit to the banks they only half state the case. They must also tell me that it is an injury to the people. If it is, I vote against it. If it is not, I cheerfully and unhesitatingly vote for it.

Now the question is, is it to the advantage of the people of the United States that the Government should lock its money in its Treasury vaults and deny them the use of it in their trade and commerce? No man contends it. Then is it to the advantage of the people of the United States that the Government should place this money where they can enjoy its use, even though they have to pay a reasonable rate of interest? That is unquestionably true. Believing so, no apprehension that I may be charged with favoring the banks can deter me from giving to the people of the United States the use of the largest amount of circulation.

My friend from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] and myself a few years ago, fighting side by side, insisted that the country needed more money. I still think it needs more, but he parts company with me.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no.

Mr. BAILEY. I am glad to know that my friend has not come to the conclusion that the increase in the production of gold has given us all we need. He agrees with me that though money is more abundant than it was and consequently the times are better, we still do not have enough to be able to lock it up in the Treasury vaults.

Mr. STEWART. That is right.

Mr. BAILEY. To my friends on this side of the Chamber I will say in conclusion that with denunciations on our lips against our opponents because they would not give the country more money we ought not to vote to lock up any part of what we have.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am quite sure, Mr. President, that I was sorry, sincerely sorry, when a short time ago divergence and separation occurred between my two friends, the one from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and the other from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]; and I do not know whether I can conscientiously say that I am glad now to see those estranged comrades once more united. I was surprised at the separation, and I have scarcely yet grown familiar with the reconciliation.

The Senator from Texas (and there is not a man in this Chamber or in this land who holds in higher esteem his deliberate opinion than I) says that he would like to make every man rich in this land by law if that were possible, but the law does not make wealth if legitimately enacted and applied. I agree with that. Yet here is a law which proposes to allow to a railroad corporation (I select that simply for purposes of illustration) of a certain description set out in this bill, that has been paying consistently dividends of not less than 4 per cent for a term of ten years next preceding, the deposit of their first-mortgage bonds. I quote, I think, the provisions of the bill. Is it a fair law that allows me to take those railroad bonds and deposit them as collateral with the Government and upon that deposit take out money at 1½ per cent? Is not that law necessarily to result, if, indeed, it was not intended——

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. With the greatest pleasure.

Mr. ALDRICH. What does the Senator mean by "taking out money?" He used that expression.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I had just as well define that right here and right now, so that the Senator from Rhode Island and myself will not misunderstand each other any further. I admit that the money provided for by this bill is to be taken from the vaults of the Treasury and put into circulation. It is not new money. It is not new money—a new bill—that is to be issued. It is old money, that by process of taxation has been withdrawn from circulation and is locked up in the coffers of the Government.

When I say that the deposit of that railroad bond is as a collateral upon which to take out money, I do not mean to be understood that new money is to be issued and brought into existence upon that deposit, but I mean that that amount of money which has been abstracted from circulation, which has become dormant and dead as the gold that has never yet been brought from the bowels of the earth for all processes of business, is to be dragged from its hiding place in the vaults of the Treasury and put into circulation, for which the banker is to pay 1½ per cent interest, and on its circulation he is to get neither you nor I nor anybody except the Lord and that banker know what rate of interest.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Kentucky permit me?

Mr. BLACKBURN. With the greatest pleasure.

Mr. BAILEY. Is it not likewise true that when the Senator from Kentucky deposits money in the bank the banker loans it out the same way and pays him nothing?

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is true; but my money is there on call, if I am lucky enough to have any.

Mr. BAILEY. This is, too; this is on call.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Wait; I am coming to that. I trust the Senator from Texas will not be impatient. Whether my views are of any value to him or to anybody else, he shall have the fullest opportunity of knowing what they are before I sit down. It is not my purpose to discuss this bill at length, but I am not willing that it shall be voted upon and perhaps enacted into law, so far as this Chamber is concerned, without entering my protest against its passage, and in my own feeble way submitting the reasons which have led me to that conclusion.

I am opposed to the national banking system and always have been. I admit that it has many exceptional features which commend it to my approval. In the matter of security, whether it be to the depositor or to the holder, I believe that it is an admirable system of banking. But I have insuperable and vital objections to that system of banking. Hence, to be consistent, I have insuperable objections to this bill because, as I see it, the bill is simply an enlargement of the powers of the national banking system of this country. Whatever is objectionable to me in that system of national banking of necessity is objectionable to me in this bill, because this is an enlargement of it.

As the national banking system of this country stands to-day there is a limit to the exercise of its power, to which I object, and that limit is found in the amount of Government bonds that they can get possession of, for beyond it they can not go. They can get no money upon which to do a national banking business except that money is based upon the deposit of national bonds.

Here is a proposition to enlarge their powers in that direction, to say that they shall have what they have to-day, the right to take out currency upon the deposit of national bonds, plus the right to take out money upon the deposit as collateral of State or county or municipal or certain railroad bonds described in this act.

But the passage of this bill is demanded for reasons that force us to face two propositions which may not be denied. First, there is a congestion of money in the Treasury. I admit it. I believe the amount is some $300,000,000, all told. The advocates of this measure say that that money is of no value in the channels of trade and commerce. I admit it. The advocates of this measure say that we are in this fix; that there is $300,000,000, or whatever the amount may be, of idle capital in the Treasury, and that our purpose in this bill is to bring it back and put it into active circulation.

That situation is not denied, but that situation prompts me to ask one or two questions. How came it that we are in that predicament? What is it that brought about the congestion of money in the vaults of the Federal Treasury? There can be but one answer given by honest men. Excessive taxation, producing a disproportion between the receipts and the expenditures of the Government, is the only explanation that can be vouchsafed or answer given to that question.

Now, admitting that this is the condition we are in; that we are collecting more money than we need for governmental purposes; that by this high rate of taxation we are taking out of the channels of commerce and trade this amount of money that the people need to carry on their business and conduct their commerce, is this the only means to correct the evil? Is this the best way? Is it modest, is it fair, for our friends on the other side to come to us and say, "We passed the tariff laws under which this country is to-day laboring; we have extracted from the pockets of the producing classes of this country a surplus of revenue that runs up to-day into the hundreds of millions; we have put you in this pocket, and now we insist that you shall let us prescribe the remedy and devise the way in which you are to be gotten out?"

I say that this is not the best way to remedy the situation. There is an open road before us. There is no want of statutory authority that we might follow. The law to-day confers ample power upon the Secretary of the Treasury to invest this plethora of revenue in the purchase and retirement of the United States Government bonds, which are its evidence of debt.

There is not one of these bonds to-day that is not drawing a higher rate of interest than you are going to exact from the beneficiaries of this bill for the use of this surplus money. What would be said of me or you in the proper transaction of our private business if we owe a debt upon which we are paying 3 or 4 per cent interest if we should turn around and loan our surplus money at 1½ per cent and pay the higher rate which is being charged against us?

Mr. STEWART. Would it be a complete remedy for that to sell the bonds?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have not got through. I hope my friend will wait until I do.

Mr. STEWART. Would that be a complete remedy? We must have a surplus all the time, and if you invest in bonds there would be a deficiency and a panic. We can not invest all our surplus in bonds. We must keep enough money on hand to give confidence.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion.

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. We can not invest it in bonds, the Senator says, because there will be a deficiency. So long as the present rate of taxation continues there will never be a deficiency in the Treasury, notwithstanding the lavish hand with which appropriations have recently been made by Republican Congresses.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator think all this money should be paid out?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not; but I say that a reasonable discretion should be employed. And I will answer the Senator from Nevada that, if there is no more surplus in the Treasury to-day than ought to be there, then why this complaint? Why tender us this bill? If you have not got an awkward and an inconvenient, if not a dangerous, surplus in the vaults of the Treasury, where is the necessity for this legislation?

Mr. STEWART. We do not want the money tied up.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator has just this minute told me that he did want a margin held; but I hope my friend will make his argument in his own time and let me get through, for I do not want to detain the Senate.

Mr. President, it may be answered that the bonds are at a premium. Very well. Are they likely to go lower? Not while the credit of this Government stands good. You can not get away from this proposition. Why not be candid? Why not tell the truth? Let those who attempt the passage of this bill answer me—Is it true that there is an element in this country, and a potential element at that, who do not want those bonds canceled or retired or the debt of this Government ever to be paid? Is there a reason why there should be such an element in our country? Let us look at the facts and answer.

What constitutes the foundation upon which the national-bank system was builded and rests to-day? The Government debt, as evidenced by that Government's bonds. Pay off the last of this Government's debt and you will have retired and canceled the last of this Government's bonds, and the national bank system topples to the earth because its foundation has been pulled from under it. You can not have a national bank system unless you have a national debt on which to build it as the rock of its foundation.

May it not be true, Mr. President, that there are people in this country, and potential, too, in proportion to their numbers, who never want the national debt paid off, because, if you do that, the privileges of the national banks are gone. You dare not pay the debt in full. The only country on the earth to-day, with a Treasury bursting to overflowing, which does not undertake to retire the obligations which it has out against its credit and against its resources——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator be good enough to mention any other government than ours that does that?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have just this moment said there was not another government upon earth that did do it, and I do not believe that another government on earth would propose to do it.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator to say that this Government did not do what other governments did—that is, pay off its debts or obligations.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, no; the Senator did not hear me.

Mr. HOAR. I heard the Senator, but I may not have heard him correctly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator did not hear me correctly. I stated that so far——

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator to say that this Government did not dare to pay off its debt because it would take out from the national banks the foundation on which they stood. I understood him to say that this Government did not do what every other government did—retire its obligations. Now, I ask the Senator if he will mention another government that does retire its obligations, except ours, which has done it more than any or all the countries of the world put together, under the Republican policies of the last generation?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am always delighted, Mr. President, I am always entertained, and I am always instructed when I hear the Senator from Massachusetts on any subject, but he has in this case builded a man of straw, in order that he might knock it down, and to that I have no objection.

I did not make the statement that the Senator from Massachusetts understood me to make, but, for his accommodation, I will come this near making it right now, for the first time. I will say that, so far as my information goes, this is the only Government on this earth, either in this epoch of the world's history or in any previous period of that world's history, that has ever found itself provided with surplus revenues for which it had no use, that were lying dormant, idle, dead, that did not apply them to the extinguishment of its debts.

Now, Mr. President, I insist that the best way for an honest man—and the argument that applies to the individual applies with equal if not greater force to the nation—I insist that the best way for an honest man to employ surplus money for which he has no use is in paying his honest debts that are drawing a big interest, instead of loaning it to his neighbor for a less interest than he is required to pay. That may not be modern-day financiering; that may not be the theory upon which Wall street conducts its business—I am not an expert in their questionable methods of transaction—but as a plain, uninitiated representative of the uninitiated and honest people of this country, I insist upon forcing the proposition here and now; if you have got money in your Treasury that you have no use for, pay your debts that are drawing 3 per cent interest, instead of loaning it out to the national banker at 1½ per cent, in order that the banker may loan it at 6 or 8 per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. With pleasure.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Kentucky must be aware of the fact that within the last generation the United States has paid more than two thousand millions of its public debt under Republican policies and methods against the protests of the Democratic party at every step and against their action at every step; and there is not another civilized country in the world that has not only not reduced its debts, but all of those countries have increased their debts, while we have reduced ours, as I have said, under Republican policies and against the protests of the Democratic party.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the Senator. "I thank thee. Jew, for teaching me that word." I might, I doubtless should have forgotten to make the point which the Senator enables me to make right now. I admit that the governments of Europe, the older governments of the world, which are saddled with expenditures for the maintenance of military establishments of which we can not conceive, have as a rule failed to reduce their debts, but have increased them and are to-day increasing them. I admit that this Government has reduced its debt, not by reason of Republican policies, but in spite of those policies, which, by your own confession, have extorted from the pockets of the American people hundreds of millions of money beyond all that you have done in the nature of debt reduction.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the Senator rise for a question or for a speech?

Mr. DIETRICH. For a question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am more than glad to have the Senator ask a question.

Mr. DIETRICH. Twenty-eight years ago we were collecting a duty of 5 cents per pound upon coffee and 50 per cent ad valorem on rubber——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is that the question?

Mr. DIETRICH. Yes, that is the question. We placed those articles upon the free list, and the government of the country from whom we purchased those articles put an export tax upon those articles equal to the amount that we took off at this end. Did we gain anything by that transaction?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not see, Mr. President, that that has the slightest bearing upon what I was talking about. I am not discussing the tariff question here; I am not discussing the difference between an allopathic fashion of arranging tariff duties and the homeopathic fashion, to which the Senator now alludes, and I do not intend to be deflected into a tariff debate. If I were, I should only say that, as a general proposition, my objection to the doctrine of reciprocity—which the Senator's party claims to favor, but fails to put it into execution—is that it is Democratic free-trade doctrine taken after a homeopathic fashion, and for that reason I do not like it.

So I do not care what the effect was upon the Federal Treasury by the proposition stated by the Senator from Nebraska. I am dealing with a separate question. I am dealing with a fact, conceded on all sides here. The credit for the enactment of the tax laws which are to-day upon the statute books of this country is altogether to be given to the Republican party. There is not a tariff or a tax law, whether it be the customs or the internal-revenue tax law, on our statute books to-day that our Republican friends did not put there. If these laws have worked well, you can take all the credit that attaches to you for their enactment; if they have resulted in a condition of which you now complain, be manly and assume the responsibility for having brought about that condition.

What are you complaining of here by the presentation of this bill? You gathered the three hundred millions of surplus money in the vaults of the Treasury. How did it get there? Because somebody collected too much taxes from the people. Who did it? Who made the law under which the taxgatherer has taken from the pockets of the producing classes of this land the money which you now want to loan out practically as a gratuity to certain favored classes of individuals?

Mr. President, the question is right here, and it can not be avoided. If you pass this bill, you declare that you would rather perpetuate the national debt and pay 3 per cent yearly interest upon your bonds than to use money for which you have no use in the discharge of that debt, and to loan it at 1½ per cent.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] say that this is the only Government that has of late years been reducing its national debt. For that you are entitled to credit; but in heaven's name why do you not go on with it?

Mr. ALDRICH. We have been going on with it within the last three months.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Why do you not put that $300,000,000 to the credit of the nation against its obligations outstanding in the shape of bonds?

Mr. ALDRICH. We have very largely reduced the national debt.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Why do you not continue to reduce it until you have extinguished it?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is nothing in this bill to prevent its extinguishment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; the law already authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the national debt, but he will not execute that authority, that discretion. Now, instead of passing this bill, why not pass another statute making it obligatory upon the Secretary of the Treasury whenever—not in his discretion—but whenever the surplus in the vaults of the Treasury exceeds a given amount to use that surplus above a certain conservative amount that you may fix upon to retire the obligations of this Government's debt?

I ask the Senator from Massachusetts now is it not true, can he or will he deny, that the very instant that this national debt is paid off and these bonds are canceled the national banking system is a thing of the past?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I rose to ask the Senator a question, but I will first answer the one he put to me.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would rather the Senator would answer, if he is going to speak at length, in his own time.

Mr. HOAR. I will first answer the question the Senator put to me, and then I will ask the one I rose to put to him.

I have not the slightest doubt that if every national debt were wiped out this afternoon another foundation for the business of national banking would be supplied which would enable it to go on to the satisfaction, to the convenience, and to the advantage of the people. So I answer the Senator's question by saying that I do not think the national banking system would be destroyed in the manner he suggests.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the Senator mean to say——

Mr. HOAR. I will ask the Senator the question——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Well, I want the Senator to complete his answer to me.

Mr. HOAR. I will do so.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the Senator mean to say that if this national debt was paid and the last of the nation's bonds were canceled there would be any foundation left for the present fabric of the national banking system?

Mr. HOAR. Of course there would be.

Mr. BLACKBURN. What would it be?

Mr. HOAR. The National Bank of England and the old Massachusetts banking system——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I said in existence to-day.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator mean to say that there being at this moment but one foundation for the national banking system, if that foundation were destroyed, it would still be there? I did not understand him to ask that question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not. I asked the Senator this question——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; I insist that my question shall be correctly stated. I asked the Senator from Massachusetts if there was any foundation upon which the present national banking system of this country rested to-day except the national bonds, the evidences of the national debt.

Mr. HOAR. That is the question in substance that I have just said the Senator put to me. If the Senator asks me if the national banking system does rest now on Government bonds, I say yes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is what I asked.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; but I understood him to ask me—I think my hearing did not deceive me—what would happen if that foundation were destroyed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, no.

Mr. HOAR. What foundation we would have?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, no.

Mr. HOAR. Then, whether the Senator asked me that question or not, let me answer it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; I will answer for the Senator. I did not ask any such question, because I have as abiding a faith as the Senator from Massachusetts has in the conviction that if we were to pay off the last national bond this day, strike down all, tearing from under it the last vestige of foundation on which the national banking system of this country rests, I am as thoroughly persuaded as the Senator from Massachusetts can be that the dominant party in power in this country now, within a very short time, probably twenty-four hours, would exhaust both human and devilish ingenuity to furnish another one that would be the counterpart of the one with which we are now dealing.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, many of the national banks do business now without any circulation at all and without any foundation of bonds. Other national banks are going out of business rapidly because there is not money enough to be made on their circulation on bonds to warrant their keeping on. They are giving place to trust companies.

I think if the Senator will look at the report of his question to-morrow he will find that he did put the question that I thought he did; but let that pass.

I want to ask a question of the Senator now. Will he tell the Senate what bonds there are now in existence that the Government of the United States can pay without great sacrifice?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have already tried to answer that question.

Mr. HOAR. I have not heard the answer. Perhaps the Senator will state it again.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator did not do me the honor of listening. I said that it might be answered that the Secretary of the Treasury would find himself at this disadvantage, that none of our outstanding bonds have matured and can be called in at the pleasure of the Government, and that, consequently, the Secretary of the Treasury would have to go into the open market, the open street, and pay a premium upon these bonds. That I concede; of course that is true; but as against that premium he would have to pay I offered this liberal percentage, and then, supplementing that, I offered the suggestion that it is much safer for an honest man or an honest people or an honest nation to invest its surplus and idle moneys in the discharge of its own debts than to loan it out to other people at a nominal rate of interest.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator said, as I understood him, or assumed, that instead of lending this money, as is proposed by this bill, or depositing it, the Secretary ought to pay debts with it. Will the Senator tell me if he were Secretary of the Treasury would he proceed to pay debts with it; and if so, what debts, and what would it cost him to pay them?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am more than happy to answer the Senator; but I want to say, Mr. President, that if there is one reputation that I am less anxious about attaining than any other it is that of a long-winded speaker in the Senate. I did not expect to be on this floor five minutes, certainly not ten, and I would not have been but for questions.

Now I will answer the question of the Senator from Massachusetts. If I were Secretary of the Treasury, with the law staring me in the face, as it is to-day staring him in the face, and clothing him with undisputed, ample, and plenary power to buy the bonds of this Government with the surplus revenues in the Treasury, I would buy them, and I would send a communication to both Houses of your Republican Congress, and I would tell you that I intended to keep buying them so long as I had a dollar for which I had no use until that Republican Congress reduced the rates of taxation and quit piling up surplus revenue upon my hands as the bonded official of this Government. That is what I would do.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator would do that even if the bonds cost him 25 or 30 per cent premium?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; but has the Senator any right to predicate that question upon the quotations of the market? Can he point to a bond that commands that price?

Mr. HOAR. I can point to plenty of bonds that command a price that would make it a bad business to buy them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is a question of mathematical calculation. I doubt very much whether the Senator from Massachusetts knows anything more about that than I do, for I doubt if he ever owned a national bond in his life.

Mr. HOAR. Most of these questions are matters of mathematical calculation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I doubt whether the Senator is prepared to say that he ever indulged himself on this line. I am frank to say I have not, because I do not believe either he or I belong to the bondholding class of the American people.

This is all I care to say, except if it should be asserted that opposition to this bill puts one in the position of objecting to State, county, and municipal securities being put upon even terms with national securities, I answer and say that the only objection that I have to doing that is not because I am afraid that the security in the nature of collateral would not be as good as national bonds. I have every faith in the solvency of our State, our county, and our municipal governments.

The only objection I have is, not because I do not want to dignify those local securities in the same way that the existing law does the bonds of the Government, but because it enlarges to still greater extent the power of the moneyed element, the banking people of the country, to contract or expand, not the amount of money issued, but what is practically the same thing, the amount of money in circulation at any one time.

But I have an objection beyond that to this bill, and that is that you bring in the syndicated railroads of the United States and say that every bond of every railroad which for ten years preceding has paid a dividend of as much as 4 per cent shall be accepted on even terms with the bonds of the nation itself. I should like for my mathematical friend, the Senator from Massachusetts, to tell me, if he can, how much margin would that give to the circulating medium of this country. How many railroad bonds are there in this country, the roads issuing which have paid for ten years a dividend of 4 per cent, and whose first-mortgage bonds, under the provisions of this proposed law, would stand on even terms as acceptable collateral for the idle money in the vaults of the Treasury? I do not know. I assume that it is no small amount.

I presume that it puts into the power of one man—I mean Pierpont Morgan, of New York, the promoter of pretty much all the railroad syndicates and mergers and combines and railroad monopolies of this land—I presume, I assume in the absence of contradiction, that it would put into the hands of that one man a power to be counted only in hundreds of millions of money. I assume in the absence of contradiction that Mr. Pierpont Morgan could to-morrow place as collateral in the subtreasuries of the United States at least five hundred millions, if not a thousand millions, of railroad bonds such as are described and set out in the provisions of this proposed act.

Mr. STEWART. If it will not disturb the Senator, I should like to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. Would the Senator buy in the bonds issued during Cleveland's Administration—some sixty-two millions for 4½, and a hundred million for 11 per cent premium—which, I understand, are now selling for about 35 per cent premium? They were sold to get money because of a deficiency in the Treasury. They are now selling, as I understand, at about 35 per cent premium. Would he buy them in at that price?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the Senator.

Mr. STEWART. All right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And I will tell him yes. Whether as an individual or as a representative of this nation I would, as an honest man, employ the last dollar of money, idle cash for which I had no use, in retiring my own debts; and those evidences of my debt are worth as much to me, as an honest man, as they are worth to the brokers in Wall street or anywhere else in the United States.

Mr. STEWART. Is the Senator sure that a declaration of such a policy—that he would buy them at any price if he were Secretary of the Treasury—would not push up the bonds to two or three hundred?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the Senator, and I hope he will be content with it, because it is the honest expression of the only opinion I have upon the subject. I say that to an honest man or to an honest nation the evidence of his or its debt ought never be worth more to anybody on earth than it is to him or to that nation.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose the Senator owed $10,000——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would pay it if I had the money.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose it was not due for six months?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would pay it before it was due if I had the money.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose the creditor asked you $20,000 for it, would you pay him $20,000 for it?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If I owed the Senator from Nevada $10,000 and was paying him 4 per cent interest on it, I would never go and loan $10,000 to somebody else at 1½ per cent and let the other debt run against me.

Mr. STEWART. Would you pay me $20,000 to take up the obligation?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would pay whatever it was worth to the world, and the debt of an honest man is worth more to him than it is to a speculator or a jobber.

Mr. President, if the railroad feature were eliminated from the bill I will frankly confess that one of my principal objections to the measure, though not the most serious or the most sweeping, would be obviated, for I do protest against giving into the hands of the railroad syndicates of the country an equal opportunity for the handling of Government money as if it were upon the basis of national bonds.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLACKBURN. With great pleasure.

Mr. DEPEW. Will the Senator yield to me, not for a question, but for a mere statement as to these railroad bonds?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. DEPEW. The bill says:

Or the first-mortgage bonds of any railroad company, not including street-railway bonds, which has paid dividends of not less than 4 per cent per annum regularly and continuously on its entire capital stock for a period of not less than ten years previous to the deposit of the bonds.

There is not a railway company in the United States which has paid dividends upon its stock in that manner which has for sale any railroad bonds that are first-mortgage bonds.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Would it be necessary that they should be for sale in order to answer every purpose of collateral?

Mr. DEPEW. They do not have the bonds. The bonds are in the hands of the public. They have been sold years before. They have long periods to run. They belong to the public, and the railways have no interest in them and no control over them, except to pay the interest on them as it comes due or the principal when it comes due.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thank the Senator, and I recognize him as an authority upon questions of railroad interest and all railroad concerns.

I put this question to the other side of the Chamber: Assuming that the Senator from New York is correct in the statement that there is not a solitary railroad on this continent that is to become the beneficiary of that provision of this bill, why is it there? How came it to find its way? Did it commit burglary and break into this bill? The Senator from New York tells us, and states it positively and I doubt not correctly, that there is not a railroad in the United States that will or can become a beneficiary of this provision of the bill. Then why put it there and why keep it there?

Mr. ALDRICH. I will answer the Senator very frankly. It was put there because the committee recognized the fact that railroad bonds of this class, subject to these conditions, are absolutely first-class security, as good as any bond can be, whether issued by the Government of the United States or by any municipality.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am not impeaching the value of the collateral.

Mr. HOAR. None of these companies will be beneficiaries of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Of course not.

Mr. HOAR. The beneficiaries are the national banks.

Mr. ALDRICH. These bonds have been sold by the railroad companies long years ago. There are no——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am not talking about the railroad companies. I am talking about the fellow who holds the bonds.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator was trying to say that if this bill were passed it would be of benefit to railroad syndicates.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. ALDRICH. And he mentioned the name of a single gentleman.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will mention his name again.

Mr. ALDRICH. Those companies have none of these bonds.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. ALDRICH. They have long since been sold by the railroad companies or disposed of by them and are now in the hands of investors throughout the country.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Widows and orphans and trust funds, I doubt not.

Mr. ALDRICH. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me ask the Senator a question. Do I understand the Senator from New York to say or do I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to say that if this bill becomes a law Mr. Morgan, as the head of great railroad enterprises, would not find himself in possession of collaterals upon which he might not draw a portion if not all of the surplus moneys from the Treasury?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Morgan, like anybody else, if he represented a national bank, could go out upon the market——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Has he got any now?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know whether Mr. Morgan has any now.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Neither do I, but I suspect it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. My judgment is there is not a single railroad represented in Mr. Morgan's office at this moment which can possibly comply with the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I come back to the original proposition. I am standing on the statement made by the Senator from New York, and I know there is no better authority in this Chamber. If, in the light of that statement, there is not a railroad within the limits of our country that can profit by or become the beneficiary of that clause and section of the bill, why put it there, and why not strike it out and let us be rid of that one ugly feature at least?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky permit me?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The committee were anxious to restrict the securities to be deposited for the security of the United States deposits to certain well-known and definite securities that can find a market and do find a market anywhere in the United States. The Senator from Kentucky can not be unaware of the fact that a railroad bond of this description is absolute security and would be considered so in any moneyed institution in the United States.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have conceded that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Or in the world.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have conceded it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The committee were well aware that the amount of securities that could be used under this provision was very limited. The number of railroads in the United States that answer this description is very small. So the security is ample and is absolute. That is the reason why the provision was put in.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, as to the character of the security, I beg the Senate to bear me out in this, that I have never impeached the character of the collateral, whether it was to be a State bond or a county bond or a municipal bond or a railroad bond. I never have uttered one word in the direction of expressing a doubt as to the absolute value and safety of that collateral.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I never have done that.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will excuse me for one moment, I think he is making a mistake in saying that municipalities and States and railroad companies are to be the beneficiaries of the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I know.

Mr. ALDRICH. Their securities are issued and outstanding.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I will not say——

Mr. ALDRICH. They are in the hands of investors throughout the United States.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will not say——

Mr. ALDRICH. And no railroad or municipality can possibly deposit the bonds——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Or get any advantage whatever. They must become the property of banks.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I admit it all. That does not touch or approach the question I have tried to discuss. What matters it to me whether the railroad or the State or the county or the municipal government owns the bonds? I do not care.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Did he not ask just now why the railroad was inserted in the bill as a beneficiary?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; and I am still asking that question, and I never yet have been able to get an answer.

Mr. HOAR. Now, then, he has asked that question. I ask him, is the railroad inserted in the bill as a beneficiary?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not start out to split hairs, but if nothing else will please the Senator from Massachusetts, I will undertake to do that.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer his question and admit that it was a technical misstatement if I spoke of the railroad or the county or the State or the municipality as a beneficiary of the bill. What I mean to say is what the language of the bill says—that the person or persons, the individual or the corporation, anything or anybody——

Mr. ALDRICH. The bank.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The bank or what not.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not "the what not."

Mr. HOAR. Nobody else than the bank.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If they take their bonds and put them into the hands of a banker, the banker has a right, based on railroad bonds, State bonds, county bonds, or municipal bonds, to go and get possession of this currency at 1½ per cent. That is a quibble. It is worse than a quibble. What boots it to me, what do I care who gets the advantage, whether it be the corporation or the bank or the railroad? I say that if these railroad bonds are not to be dignified in this way without regard to their ownership, why put them in this bill? If this dangerous power is not to be conferred, why not strike it from the bill? The Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] says there are no such bonds to be deposited. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] says there are not many of them.

Mr. ALDRICH. Dangerous to whom?

Mr. BLACKBURN. To the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. In what way?

Mr. BLACKBURN. In that their money is being loaned at 1½ per cent whilst they are paying 4 per cent upon their indebtedness, which will not be retired.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator can not be unaware of the fact, I assume, that the United States Government is paying on a large part of its debt——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Three per cent.

Mr. KEAN. Two per cent.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not as low as 2 per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not as low as 2 per cent?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No.

Mr. ALDRICH. I can not discuss this question with the Senator from Kentucky if he does not understand that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. This is no place to discuss it. The proposition has been made, and it has not been denied, and I defy the man who lives to deny it, that this bill proposes to loan the idle capital, for which the Government has no use, at a less per cent than the Government is paying upon the lowest interest-bearing bonds it has out.

Mr. ALDRICH. This bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall fix the rate of interest to be paid by the banks, but not less than 1½ per cent per annum. It is to be at a rate of not less than 1½ per cent.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes. Does the Senator think we will get more?

Mr. ALDRICH. And the bonds of the United States or a large portion of them, and all of them if the refunding act had gone on, are paying 2 per cent. The Senator ought to know that; and they are selling in the market at a rate of about 1½ per cent and some of them are yielding even less than that. You can not go and buy them. The Secretary——

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator is not going to involve me in the discussion of a complicated question——

Mr. ALDRICH. I am stating a few facts.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Which involve facts that I know as well as the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am stating a few facts which I desire to interject into the speech of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; I am always glad to have the Senator from Rhode Island make any part of my speech he wants, for it only brings out in more glaring colors the injustice and the indefensibility of the exactions he is demanding.

The Senator may hope to involve me in a discussion as to what is the rate of tariff duty upon any one of a thousand articles, after he has manipulated that tariff schedule and complicated it with ad valorem and specific duties until even my mathematical friend, the Senator from Massachusetts, would find himself unable to decide it. I am not going into a discussion of the interest on bonds. There is to be considered the interest stipulated for and the premiums paid. I am not going into that.

I stand upon the proposition here asserted and not denied (and I have again and again challenged the Senator to deny it, and he has not done it, and I undertake to say he will not do it, because he can not do it) that the purpose of this bill is to loan the money of the American people, wrung out of the pockets of the taxpayers by a system of taxation conceded to be too high, which the party in power refuse to reduce and say they will stand pat and refuse even to revise a single schedule—the purpose is to take this tax-wrung money that belongs to the American people, the producing classes, and loan it to somebody at a rate of interest below the lowest rate of interest that the Government is paying on any bond that it has on earth.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator one more question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator know of a business man or a concern of any importance anywhere that does not, even if it borrows money, keep a deposit somewhere in a bank for which it receives no interest whatever or small interest, much less than it pays on its debts? Is not that the universal practice of all sound business concerns which must have money on hand which it can use at call?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I tried to say some time ago that I am not a banker or an expert in finance. But I will answer the Senator from Massachusetts by saying that I understand that a man who owes $10,000 is not in the habit of depositing $10,000 in a bank and drawing no interest on it in order that he may have the privilege of paying interest upon the debt.

Mr. HOAR. Now——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the Senator to make his speech in his own time.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to make a speech.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am trying to answer his question, but he will not let me. I beg the Senator's permission to answer his question.

It may be that an honest man, who owes a debt of $10,000, will keep to his credit $50 or $100 in a bank, where it draws no interest, for an exigency that he may be called upon to meet. But I repeat, not for the first or for the second time, that I have but little respect for the business acumen and the personal integrity and honesty of that man who will lay aside surplus revenues, running up into the millions and hundreds of millions, while he has an unpaid debt out which it is in his power to dispose of and retire.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield for a simple question for information?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know that in my State provision is made by law for loaning the surplus money of the State, and it is loaned at a much lower rate of interest than the State bonds draw which are outstanding.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should say that is bad finance.

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment. I know that is also true of counties, and it is true of several of the States. I desire to ask the Senator if, in the laws of Kentucky, provision is not made whereby the treasurer of the State can loan a certain sum, under certain conditions, being part of the money of the State of Kentucky, to the banks of that State?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the Senator's question and tell him we do not need any law of that sort. My State, unlike his, does not owe anything.

Mr. McCUMBER. Do they make their deposits in that way?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir. We loan our money at the best rate of interest the bank will pay us. But we are not paying any interest upon any debt, because we do not owe anything.

Mr. McCUMBER. But you are loaning out the State money.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to see the Federal Government in the same fix the State of Kentucky is—out of debt and loaning money, or else reducing taxes and cease gouging people under the guise——

Mr. McCUMBER. Are you not, then, under your own proposition, in your State levying a tax for money which you loan again to the people?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is it not exactly the same proposition you are complaining of here?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No. I will answer the Senator and say no, because the surplus we have is never more than what a private citizen would have to his credit in his bank if he had a hundred dollars and owed ten thousand. We have no surplus revenue.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is what I would say also of the United States, considering our financial importance.

Mr. BLACKBURN. All our surplus revenues go into the school fund; and I would say to the Senator from North Dakota that he had better adopt the policy I am insisting upon this nation adopting, and which the people of the State of Kentucky have adopted—get out of debt and quit paying interest and quit taxing the people unnecessarily.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am through with all I have to say about this bill, and I will yield the floor to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. All right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. All I want to say further about this bill is that I think it is a bad one, and I am going to try to help make it better by an amendment. I know I can not offer it now, for it is not in order, as there are several amendments pending ahead of mine. But I am going to try honestly to improve the general texture of this bill, and as soon as these amendments are disposed of I intend to offer one for that purpose, which is to put upon it what is known as the Republican, House-indorsed, Senate-committee-indorsed, Littlefield, Roosevelt antitrust bill, and I think that will cure many of the defects of the bill.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, before the Senator from Kentucky leaves, and before another speech intervenes, I was very much pleased, as an admirer of the State of Kentucky, at the ideal conditions of her debt and credit as stated by the distinguished Senator; and so he was enabled to answer the Senator from North Dakota satisfactorily upon the question which he has been so ably arguing.

But I find here that the city of Covington, Ky., has a debt of $2,061,200, and that the city of Louisville, Ky., has a debt of $8,657,000. Those two cities collect large amounts of money from taxation for which they have no use, except as it comes due during the year. Do they use that money to pay these debts, or leave it in banks without interest?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from New York could have understood me as saying that there was not a county or a municipality in the State of Kentucky that owed a debt. I surely was not capable of a statement like that. I spoke of the State in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota. He was telling about the financial policy of his State and I answered as to the policy of the State of Kentucky.

In order to be exactly correct, I should have said that Kentucky has a debt too. Of course the municipalities in Kentucky owe a debt. Of course the counties, for there are 119 of them in the State, owe debts. Their credit is very good, and I do not think any of their bonds are selling below par. I said the State of Kentucky owed no debt. In order to be technically correct, for that was substantially correct, I should have said that we have a debt, and a perpetual debt; that we had made it so intentionally. But that is the school fund, which we have taken care of in that shape. That is what I said.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator who has this bill in charge whether he has stricken out of the bill the provision about first-mortgage bonds of railroads?

Mr. ALDRICH. That has not been done. There has been no motion or suggestion of that kind made yet.

Mr. TELLER. I understood that somebody made the motion and that the Senator had accepted it.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Colorado probably was misled by me in what I had to say. I stated that it had been done, because I understood it was agreed to. If that motion has not been made, it will be made.

Mr. TELLER. I think that before discussing the bill it had better be determined whether the friends of the bill are willing to strike out that provision or not. It seems to be very objectionable to certain Senators.

Mr. President, I have examined this bill with some care. I have tried pretty hard to bring myself to vote for it, because I can see some advantages in the bill and some disadvantages in the present system. But I do not believe it is just what we ought to have had and what we are entitled to have from the party in control of the Senate. I think we should have had a measure more fitted to the present conditions.

This is an enlargement of section 5153 of the Revised Statutes. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the peculiar language of that section. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall require the depositaries thus designated "to give satisfactory security" by a deposit of United States bonds and other bonds "for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public money so deposited with them," etc.

Mr. President, that has been construed by some to mean that in addition to the bonds the Secretary might call for other securities. It has been held by the present Secretary of the Treasury that that authorized him to take other securities, and that I understand he has done. If that is the interpretation of this law there will be some merit in the bill which provides what securities he shall take. As it is now he is without restriction; he can take any security that he thinks best.

I have found no difficulty with this bill on the ground that the security to be taken was not ample, whether it be railroad bonds or whatever it may be. I have no particular prejudice against railroad bonds and railroad stock. Railroad bonds and railroad stock are supposed to be held by the citizens of this country, and if it should increase, as it undoubtedly will increase, the value of their bonds and of every description of bond that can be used for this purpose, I do not think that that is an objection to the bill. It will have a tendency, undoubtedly, to decrease to some extent the value of the national securities, which are now so high that I do not see how the Government could buy them with any considerable profit. If they were liable to go below par I should regard that as a very objectionable feature of this bill. Everybody knows that though you may take other securities it will not depreciate national bonds to the extent of their going below par. So there is no evil in that.

Mr. President, I am one of those who believe that the Government ought to pay its debts. I have contended for that in the Senate from time to time. On every measure for the issue of a bond that has been voted for in the Senate since I have been in it I have insisted that the Government should reserve to itself the right to call that bond for payment whenever it had the money to pay.

But we are not in that condition to-day, I am sorry to say, because that policy has not been the policy of the party in power. On the contrary, the policy of the party in power, for the last few years at least, has been to perpetuate, and I do not know but I ought to say increase, but I will not say that, because it is not necessary to this debate—it has been the policy of the party in power to perpetuate the public debt. That has been done sometimes upon the theory that the present banking system is dependent on the Government bonds.

Mr. President, I do not share with the Senator from Kentucky his opposition to national banks. I think the national banking system is the best system we ever had, and I am very much afraid, from the character of the legislation proposed in modern times, that it is the very best we are ever to have. It is certainly better than anything which has been suggested by the bills that we hear of in another place, and sometimes here, for a banking system that is said to be elastic; in other words, under which somebody can issue notes and make currency of them whenever somebody sees fit. Mr. President, you can not have an elastic currency in the sense that term is used and have a safe currency. You are quite likely to sacrifice safety whenever you secure this so-called elasticity.

I am one of those who do not believe in allowing banks, except it might be under restriction which should be most carefully prepared, to have what is called an asset issue. I am not going into that to-night, but I want to call attention to the time of payment of our national bonds. In 1900 we issued bonds payable with 2 per cent interest after April 1, 1930. I know what was said when that was done: "You must issue a bond with a low rate of interest, and to do that you must have a long time bond," and we made a 2 per cent bond and sold it at par, which our friends on the other side of the Chamber thought was the greatest financial triumph of the world. They appealed to us, I know, and said: "We are about to issue a bond of 2 per cent; did anybody in the world ever do the like of that?"

Now, Mr. President, I said then, I remember, and I want to say now, to have paid a greater amount of interest would have been more to the interest of the Government if we had reserved the right to call those bonds before maturity on fair terms.

We have to-day in the Treasury of the United States four hundred and some odd million dollars. I have the statement right here and I will give it as it is stated. We have, according to the statement made February 1 by the Government, $300,820,275 in the Treasury; and I find here a note:

This statement of money held in the Treasury as assets of the Government does not include deposits of public money in national bank depositaries to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States and amounting to $142,903,773.07.

So, Mr. President, if you put those items together you have $443,724,048 in the Treasury, because that in the banks is practically in the Treasury, and that amount of money could be paid upon our national debt if the Government had reserved the right to do so.

Then we have some bonds that are due in 1908, some in 1907, some in 1925, and a small amount in 1904. So we are locked up, and I do not believe you can use this money for that purpose.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator make the statement about what money we have in the Treasury once more?

Mr. TELLER. I will, for the benefit of the Senator and those who are not paying attention.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I heard it; I thought I did.

Mr. TELLER. The Treasury statement which I hold, of February 1, 1903, says:

Held in Treasury as assets of the Government, $300,820,275.

Then I find a note at the bottom:

This statement of money held in the Treasury as assets of the Government does not include deposits of public money in national bank depositories, to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, and amounting to $142,903,773.07.

Now, putting those two sums together you have $443,820,275.

I can show without any difficulty that we might increase the amount we have in the Treasury by about $14,000,000 for the redemption of bank notes that could be used and is used sometimes for the purposes of the Government. Of course, if the Government uses it, the Government must replace it, as it is required for such redemption. Also you have $20,000,000 worth of silver on hand that might have been put into money long ago if the Government had so wished.

So we have here in the neighborhood of $477,000,000 which we can use, and of that money only $143,000,000, in round numbers, is in circulation, because it is in the banks of the country.

Now, Mr. President, I am one of those who thought with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that we should collect only as much money as is needed for the current expenses of the Government. We collected this surplus some years ago. We have held it in the public Treasury for some time. But I ought to say that in this $473,000,000 there are one hundred and fifty millions of gold held in the Treasury for the purpose of redeeming greenbacks and Treasury notes, although Treasury notes were not until recently to be redeemed in gold. However, that is a small amount.

The total of that—I speak from recollection, I have not got it here—is a little over 300,000,000; 346,000,000 greenbacks, and I I think about 20,000,000, or something like that, of Treasury notes, but of the 346,000,000 probably there is not over 300,000,000 in circulation. So, to redeem about $300,000,000 or a little over, we hold in the Treasury $150,000,000 in gold, and that amount has been so held for three years.

I remember when that provision was made that it was pretty thoroughly contested on this side of the Chamber. We said it was not necessary to lock up that amount of money. But on the other side it was said we must make the Government credit strong by locking up the money in the Treasury to that amount. Mr. President, I have never believed that it added a particle to the strength of this Government. There was not a man on this continent who did not know that we were receiving every day money enough out of the current receipts of the Government to have redeemed every greenback that should be presented.

In the three years we have been locking up those $150,000,000 away from the public, who have a right to use it, we have redeemed $68,000,000, in round numbers, of greenbacks and Treasury notes, or about $22,000,000 a year.

What is that law, Mr. President? If to-day the Treasury Department redeems $10,000, to-morrow it must put back the $10,000, and if they can not do it by exchange of greenbacks so reissued for gold they must go out and borrow the money, for there is a provision of that kind. They must put it back if there is enough money in the Treasury to put it back, and of course there always is. So that if you take out to-day $10,000, $15,000, or $20,000, to-morrow it is back again.

We keep $150,000,000 of gold in the Treasury. Have we got so much money that we do not need this large amount in circulation? Last summer when a great financier was called to the head of the Treasury Department from the West he came down from Iowa, and he knew when he got down here, if he did not know it before, that to a very great extent, under the modern system of doing business, the credit and the business interests of the country are dependent upon what the Government is going to do or what the Government will do in an emergency, and he said at once, "There is not money enough in circulation."

I think he was backed by the great financiers of the great financial centers of this country in the opinion that there was not. The first thing he did was to say to the banks of the country, "You must issue more bank notes; we need now $16,000,000 additional currency, and you must issue it at once;" and the banks, having a proper respect for the Secretary of the Treasury and feeling the need of more circulation, proceeded to issue $16,000,000 of bank notes. If he had had the authority, he could have taken $50,000,000 out of the gold reserve and not disturbed the Treasury at all.

He could have taken $145,000,000 out and not disturbed the business of the country an iota nor impaired the credit of the Government in the slightest degree. The five millions left would have been ample for redemption purposes, with his right to replenish that fund.

Now, Mr. President, this bill is a partial relief, but we are entitled to something better than this bill. We are entitled to something that shall release not only the money that is in the Treasury called the current funds, but that great big treasure of $150,000,000 that is there for no more useful purpose than if it was in the sea. The Secretary can make all needful redemption without it and it is not needed to strengthen the credit of the Government.

Will any man in this Chamber say that the Government of the United States needs to pile up in its Treasury $150,000,000 to convince the people that when I go to the Treasury with a Treasury note or with a greenback I can get the gold on it if I want it? Mr. President, there is at all times there unused an abundance of gold in the Treasury independent of this reserve fund. The bill is defective because it does not deal with that question.

There has been much criticism of the deposit of this money in the national banks by the Treasury Department. That is not the fault of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is the fault of the condition that we have created by law. It is because the Government can not use this money to pay its debts, and therefore it must use it in some way that it may get into the circulation of the country, or else it must keep it locked up there to the detriment of the business interests of the country.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to ask the Senator if he thinks we could keep bonds at par with an option reserved to the Government to pay the bonds at the will of the Government?

Mr. TELLER. You could have reserved the right to call the bonds on some terms. I do not say that you would not have to give some premium, but you might have provided what that should be. We could to-day take this money out of the Treasury and pay it on our debt if we had reserved that right, and we ought at all times to be in such a condition that when we owe a debt if we wish to pay it we can pay it, either with a premium or without, which premium should be fixed when the bond is created.

Mr. SPOONER. Two per cent was considered at the time a very low rate of interest.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, Mr. President, I am frank enough to say that if the Government had reserved the right to call these bonds in a short time it would not have been able to have sold them at 2 per cent; but it would have been better for us to have provided that we might call those bonds and as to what sort of a premium and under what conditions at the time we issued the bonds than to have waited twenty-five or thirty years to pay them.

Mr. President, this bill is more dangerous for what may be done under it than for what is actually in it. The Secretary of the Treasury has the right to select the banks in which he will put this money. I do not mean to say there has been any favoritism in putting money into banks; that is a matter that I do not care now to discuss; but I do say that it would be a most remarkable thing, with this large amount of money to be deposited in banks, if there were no favoritism. That would be just as true if one party were in power as if the other were in power. I am not making complaint that the party at present in power would be any more liable to show favoritism than any other party.

It is almost impossible for the Secretary of the Treasury not to have a preference for the class of men with whom he comes in contact and whom he regards as most friendly to him and to the Administration under which he is holding office. We do know, for we have had the statement made here on the floor, that the predecessor of the present Secretary was appealed to by a gentleman in New York to make a large deposit of Government money in the bank over which he presided, on the ground that his bank and its directors had contributed liberally to the campaign fund of the party then in power. I need not mention the name of the bank nor the name of the bank officer, but everybody here, I think, will remember the circumstance.

Mr. President, I have never had but one application since I have been in the Senate from a bank in Colorado to have Government money deposited with the bank. I do not know what were the political opinions of those bankers, and they did not express them. I sent their note to the Secretary of the Treasury, stating that they were reputable people and that I understood the bank stood well. The Secretary then sent some money there. That is the only Government money that I have any personal knowledge of ever having been placed in a bank in Colorado.

I do not think Colorado has any special interest in this matter. It may be that other banks have had Government money lent them; but, if so, I am not aware of it.

Here is $143,000,000. Now, when this bill is enacted into law and these securities are taken, there will be more than that amount, and it is a question whether it would not be better to have this money put into national banks with proper security than it would be to keep it locked up in the Treasury. Of the two methods I believe it would be better to put it in circulation. When I say that, I do not mean to say that I approve of this bill. What I object to is the lack of what is not in the bill more than to what is in it. The vice of this bill is what has not been placed in it more than in what has been put in it.

But, Mr. President, suppose the Secretary of the Treasury should conclude to show favoritism and put the money all in New York or some other one place. I should hardly imagine that he would put it all in one place; but suppose he should put a larger amount in one section of the country than in another, would it not eventually breed complaints? Is it not possible in enacting a law of this kind to put some regulation upon the Secretary of the Treasury?

I tried to do that in committee, as some members of the committee will recollect, but failed to satisfy the committee, and I am free to say I could not satisfy myself as to exactly what ought to be done to put a proper restriction on the Secretary of the Treasury; yet I believe it can be done, and it ought to be done, and if we were in the beginning of the session I have no doubt we would be able to do it.

Mr. SPOONER. I was going to ask the Senator if he does not think that by enlarging the security, which confessedly is good and safe under the provisions of this bill, there is much less liability for the charge of favoritism and a much wider scope in the distribution of money throughout the country than there is now, when it is limited to national bonds?

Mr. TELLER. I am inclined to think that the Senator is right about that.

Mr. SPOONER. There are banks all over the United States which can not, through correspondents or otherwise, obtain national bonds, but they can obtain county bonds, State bonds, and city bonds, and if such bonds are made securities, I have thought—and that is one thing which commended this bill to me somewhat—that it would lead to a larger distribution of money throughout the country.

Mr. TELLER. I think that is one feature which in some measure reconciles me to the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the Senator's attention been called to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, which is now pending?

Mr. TELLER. I understood there was some proposition pending, but I do not know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is understood at the desk that that amendment was accepted by the Senator from Rhode Island, and agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think I did agree to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And it is a part of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes. I should like to have that provision read.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1 the following provision was inserted:

That, as far as practicable, the Secretary of the Treasury shall fairly distribute the deposits herein authorized throughout the country.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, that will at least indicate what is the legislative mind on the subject, although it seems to me that any man who was fit to be Secretary of the Treasury would do that without any provision of law. It will not entirely cure the evil of which I am complaining, but it may minimize it somewhat.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, one element which gives value to the Government bonds and which has led to their appreciation in price is that whenever the Secretary of the Treasury gives a notice of his desire to purchase them the bankers buy them at a premium through their correspondents in order to send them in as a basis of security for their circulation.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, Mr. President, I understand that has been the case. I think it will enable the Government, if it sees fit to call in these bonds—I mean to become purchasers of them—to secure them at a fairer rate than it can now. If I could see any such disposition on the part of the Administration to pay off these bonds by buying them, I should feel very much better about this bill, but I see nothing of the kind. I hear of no proposition to reduce the bonded debt.

Mr. SPOONER. If my friend from Colorado will allow me, I think he will agree that in almost every instance in late years where the Secretary of the Treasury, having money on hand with which to buy bonds, has sought to put out that money in order to relieve the money stringency, the price of bonds was put up so rapidly that he had to cease purchasing them.

Mr. TELLER. I think that is true, and great evil has been inflicted upon the country because no provision was made for buying bonds before due if the Government had the money to buy them.

Mr. President, I want to say a word as to what I think is one of the dangers of this bill, and then I am going to content myself with voting against it. I am of the opinion that the passage of the bill may afford some relief, but it is not the full relief that we ought to have. If we were in the beginning of the session I should insist that this bill should not be voted on until some further effort was made to bring it up to what I think is requiried.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, I want to ask him a question. Do I understand the Senator to mean by that that the bill should go further and repeal any part of the redemption act, and thereby lessen the redemption fund in the Treasury?

Mr. TELLER. I think, Mr. President, that at least $140,000,000 ought to be taken out of the Treasury and put into circulation. We know, and everybody knows, that while the circulation has increased the business activity of this country has increased much faster than the circulation. That is why the Secretary of the Treasury came here last summer and said that more currency was required. He said he was afraid of a panic. I do not suppose there is anybody who would disagree with me if I should say that if the Government were to withdraw that $143,000,000 from the banks and put it in the Treasury there would be a panic. If the proposition were made to take $50,000,000 of it, put it in the Treasury, and lock it up, there would be a panic not only in the city of New York, but in all the great financial centers of this country.

Mr. President, is the system a good one which puts in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury the power to discriminate in favor of one class of banks, which may be controlled by his political adherents, as against those which may be controlled by those whom he may regard as his political opponents? Is it a good system which enables the Secretary of the Treasury to say that Eastern securities shall be favored above Western securities, and that he will put these deposits all east of the Alleghenies or west of the Alleghenies, if he happens to think that better?

Should there not be some method by which, in proportion to their wealth and their ability to pay, if the people of one section wanted the use of money, that they should not be crowded out by reason of favoritism to another section? Should there not be in this case some restriction as to how much should be deposited in one bank? Should there not be some restriction upon the way that this money should be called from the banks? If the Government can not call this money without danger to the public interest, ought there not to be some provision to regulate the manner in which it should be turned back into the Treasury by the banks? Should there not be some restrictions imposed upon them as on the Government?

Mr. President, I saw to-day a letter written by bankers to a member of this body, in which they declared that if this bill shall pass the item of interest alone would require the banks who could not make money under it to send their money back to the Treasury in large quantities. If that is done under this bill, there will be a financial stringency, which will be taken advantage of in this country to bring on a general panic.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Does the Senator not think that this requiring banks to pay interest on deposits is without the legitimate domain of banking? Ought Congress to encourage a policy of that kind?

Mr. TELLER. I understand what that provision was put in the bill for. That was put in by our friends who got up this bill because they knew there was a complaint on the part of the public against having, in round numbers, $150,000,000—for it is practically that—of the people's money in the banks, which the banks are paying no interest upon and lending out to citizens of this country at rates of interest in some places at least very high. That was a sop thrown to the complainers by the ingenious draftsmen of this bill.

I had some years ago some connection as an attorney with a bank and a little as a bank president for a few years. I have contended always that no ordinary bank ever ought to pay a dollar of interest on its deposits. It should keep the money that is deposited there for the people; and when it has to pay interest on it it will loan it even if the loan is not the best. In such cases there is danger that the bank, in its anxiety to get back the interest that it has paid, will make improper loans.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado, while he is on that point, whether or not it is his construction of this bill, on page 3, lines 8 to 14, inclusive, that it is a mere loan of money on interest? It is called a deposit; but it is a loan of money, because it bears interest at a fixed rate. If that is so, I want to ask the Senator whether he has considered, or whether the Senator in charge of this bill or any other Senator has considered, in this connection, section 5489 of the Revised Statutes, which I will read. That section provides:

SEC. 5489. If the Treasurer of the United States, or any assistant treasurer, or any public depositary, fails safely to keep all moneys deposited by any disbursing officer or disbursing agent, as well as all moneys deposited by any receiver, collector, or other person having moneys of the United States, he shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement of the moneys not so safely kept, and shall be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than ten years, and fined in a sum equal to the amount of money so embezzled.

That provision in regard to embezzlement would apply to the national banks if this bill should become a law.

Mr. TELLER. What section is that?

Mr. MORGAN. Section 5489 of the Revised Statutes. If that embezzlement section applies to the national banks that are depositaries, then this bill relieves them from the personal penalty of this section, by converting the deposits into loans. I fear that is the object of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I presume if this bill passes it will be regarded as a repeal pro tanto of that section.

Mr. MORGAN. Then that ought to be so expressed, because we change the nature of the obligation from that of a Government depositary to that of a loanee. The person who borrows money has the right to do with it as he pleases, but here is a personal penalty put upon every depositary, and this bill proposes to relieve that depositary from the obligations and penalties which this section of the Revised Statutes imposes.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, my attention had never been called to that point, and I do not care at this late hour to open up that question, because I only want to say a few words more, and then I shall yield the floor.

I was saying that I thought national banks ought not to pay interest. I was about to say that in a town with which I am somewhat familiar, where I go up and down the street occasionally, there is a bank which advertises that it pays 4 per cent interest. If I had a million dollars I would not put a dollar in that bank. More banks have been broken by their attempts to pay interest and thus to secure large deposits than by almost any other cause. Safety is what you want in a bank, and that is what we do want in this case.

We can excuse ourselves for putting money in a bank only upon one ground; that is, that we have no use to which we can properly put the money. If that is the intention with which you deposit money in a bank, then you may put it there without any interest, to show to the public you put it there because it is to their interest that you shall put it there instead of locking it up, and because there is no other way of getting it out to the public. What are you going to say about this $150,000,000 which you lock up?

Are you going to tell the people of the United States that you do that because somebody has doubts of the credit of this Government of ours, that paid a bigger debt in less time than any nation in the history of the world ever paid, and is better able today to pay its debt dollar for dollar and on quick time, if it has the authority to do it, than any nation in the world?

It is true that the Government statement shows that we owe $2,000,000,000, in round numbers. We owe a little more than $1,500,000,000. The greenbacks we need not count, because the people are not calling for them, but if it was necessary to pay our bonds we could raise the money in a short time and pay them off without any distress to the people of the United States.

There was a time when I hoped to have lived to see the national debt paid. I have lived under the Government when it practically owed nothing, and I wanted to live long enough to see the great debt incurred by the efforts to keep these States together paid. I have seen the time under the auspices of the party now in power when I had reason to believe that hope would be realized. I have seen them paying it at a rate that no other Government had ever paid its debt, and that, too, without a burden upon the American people. But the system changed, and from a general anxiety to pay the public debt there became an anxiety to perpetuate the public debt.

I have had many and many a man say to me that we ought to increase the public debt. For what reason do you suppose that some of these men say we ought to do that? They tell us that the people who own the public debt will have a greater interest in this country than if they did not. If the time ever comes in this Republic when we shall have to make a debt to attach the people to the Government of the United States it will be time to abandon our present form of government. There is not any necessity for that now, and I trust there never will be. We ought to go on and pay the public debt as rapidly as possible.

When you get this money in the banks how are you going to get it out? If you get it out all at once, then you create a financial depression, or worse than that, perhaps, a financial revulsion of such a character that it will sweep millions and millions of values away.

When you put the money in the national banks, two or three hundred million dollars, as you will under this bill—for we are now raising a surplus of at least $50,000,000 a year more than we can or ought to use, and that surplus will be greater in the next year than it was in this if prosperity continues in this country—when you have added two or three hundred millions, the very fact that these banks hold this money will prevent you from making any proper arrangement for putting this money to the use that the taxpayer has a right to demand you should put it, and that is to discharge the debts of this Government or to pay the current expenses thereof.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator agree at the next session of Congress to cooperate with the majority to reduce the revenues of the Government? I hope he will. We certainly shall make the effort, and I hope the Senator will be found cooperating with us in that direction.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island speaks by authority of his party. So far as I know it is greatly disturbed on that question. One Senator tells us that you must "stand pat" and not do anything; another one of the financial organs of the Republican party said the other day that the tariff did need some revision, but he said it needs revising upward, and not downward.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was talking about the question of the revenues of the Government, and not as to how they should be reduced.

Mr. TELLER. The revenue of the Government is derived in two ways. One is by internal taxes upon the people, and the other is by a tax upon imports, which of course I think, although I am a protectionist, we pay, and nobody else.

Mr. President, I will be happy to cooperate with the Senator from Rhode Island and all the Senators on the other side, as will everybody, I believe, on this side of the Chamber, in reducing the tariff schedules to a reasonable rate, and that, too, whether it is upon sugar or upon the manufactures of Rhode Island. But we will hardly be prepared, either then or now, to allow the reduction of the revenue to be made at the expense of the men who live on the farms in the West.

Mr. ALDRICH. I trust the Senator from Colorado and I will agree upon the methods of reduction. I am inclined to think we shall. I think he will agree with me that a reduction of the tariff, if effective, would increase the revenue rather than reduce it. But that, of course, is a question which is not here now and is not a practical one. I have no doubt, however, the Senator from Colorado and I will find ourselves in agreement upon that matter.

Mr. TELLER. I am not a free trader. I have not been since I left school. I was then.

My judgment is we can reduce the tariff and reduce the revenues and hold our markets. I am not going to admit that a reduction of tariff will bring excessive imports here to compete with the products of our people, because you have a tariff now, and you have had it since the McKinley tariff was adopted, that is higher than it ought to be.

Standing on this floor when the McKinley tariff was being discussed, I declared that it was not a Republican tariff; that it was way beyond the Republican idea as we understood it in the early days of the party, when the tariff was put on to protect the American laboring man and the American capitalist, to equalize conditions between the European laborer and the European capitalist and the American laborer and the American capitalist. The tariff ought to be revised; and if the friends of it will not revise it, then opponents of the tariff will.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me that I may present a conference report?

Mr. TELLER. I will.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16842) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 15, 17, 18, 22, 33, 34, 35, 43, 49, 51, 54, 56, 58, 59, 60, 61, 68, 70, 79, 86, 87, 89, 94, 96, 98, 99, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 112, 117, 121, 122, 123, 124, 127, 128, 131, 134, 136, 137, 139, 140, 141, 143, 144, 145, 146, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 158, 161, 163, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 180, 181, 182, 185, 190, and 191.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 12, 13, 14, 16, 23, 25, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 52, 53, 55, 57, 63, 66, 67, 71, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 80, 81, 82, 85, 91, 100, 101, 113, 114, 115, 118, 119, 120, 125, 126, 129, 130, 132, 133, 142, 156, 157, 159, 160, 162, 164, 165, 167, 177, 178, 179, 184, 187, 188, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, and 205, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "two civil engineers or computers, at $1,500 each;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "clerk, $1,000; clerk, $900;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$74,664;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "temporary clerk hire, $500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$42,600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,200;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$19,280;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$160,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,100;" and on page — of the bill, after the word "dollars," in line —, insert the following: "to be expended for paving Vermont avenue from R to T streets, New Hampshire avenue from V to W streets, and V street from Seventeenth to Eighteenth streets;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$29,900;" and on page 15 of the bill, in line 19, after the word "avenue," insert the words "except as herein specified;" and on page 15 of the bill, after line 23, insert as a separate paragraph the following: "Hereafter the Commissioners, in submitting the schedules of streets and avenues to be improved, shall each year arrange said streets and avenues in the order of their importance, as determined by them after personal examination of said streets and avenues;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For Rhode Island avenue, Florida avenue toward First street, pave, $10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$141,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$90,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$209,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said Senate amendment insert the following: "And during the fiscal years 1903 and 1904 the price prescribed by Congress for lighting each street lamp in the District of Columbia with gas or oil shall be construed to include the cost of the illuminating material used in lighting and extinguishing lamps, repairing, painting, cleaning, purchasing, and expense of erecting and maintaining lamp-posts, street designations, lanterns, and fixtures;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$28;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$80,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$80;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: ": Provided further, That the amount for which a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such material and work as may be necessary for prosecuting the work on said slow sand filtration plant, and for each and every purpose connected therewith to final completion within the shortest practicable time, or within which the materials may be purchased and the work done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, is hereby increased from $2,768,405 to $3,468,405;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$953,975;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$17,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 135, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "45;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 138, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$749,940;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 148, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 149, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$13,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$68,360;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 166, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$21,090;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 183, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$28,356;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 186, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 189, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$16,552;" and the Senate agree to the same.

"SEC. 3. That until and including June 30, 1904, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to advance, on the requisition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, made in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary from time to time to meet the general expenses of said District as authorized by Congress, and reimburse the Treasury for the portion of said advances payable by the District of Columbia out of the taxes and revenues collected for the support of the government thereof: Provided, That all advances made under this act and under the acts of February 11, 1901, and June 1, 1902, not reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States on or before June 30, 1904, shall be reimbursed to said Treasury out of the revenues of the District of Columbia from time to time within five years beginning July 1, 1904, together with interest thereon at the rate of 2 per cent per annum until so reimbursed: Provided further, That interest on advances made prior to June 30, 1902, in the accounts of the District of Columbia with the United States shall be computed for the fiscal year 1903, and paid immediately after the close thereof from the revenues of the District of Columbia, and the same rule of computation and payment shall apply to all advances made for the fiscal year 1903 and subsequent fiscal years: Provided further, That the Auditor for the State and other Departments and the auditor of the District of Columbia shall file annually a report of the amounts of such advances, stating the amount for each fiscal year separately and also all reimbursements made under this section, together with the balances remaining, if any, due the United States: And provided further, That nothing contained herein shall be so construed as to require the United States to bear any part of the cost of street extensions and of advances heretofore or hereafter made for these purposes made by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be repaid in full from the revenues of the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to same.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16970) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 7, 13, and 14.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$34,165;" and the Senate agree to the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5437) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of officers in the Army.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16656) regulating the importation of breeding animals.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17046) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HEMENWAY, Mr. LITTAUER, and Mr. MCRAE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17046) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the request for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PERKINS, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. TILLMAN were appointed.

ORDER FOR RECESS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to renew the request for unanimous consent that the Senate meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow morning, solely for the purpose of hearing eulogies upon deceased members of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. DOLLIVER. What is the objection to the hour of 11 o'clock?

Mr. ALDRICH. None whatever, if that is more satisfactory.

Mr. DOLLIVER. There are four Representatives in whose memory services will be held.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will modify my request and make it 11 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that to-night a recess be taken until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, in order that eulogies may be delivered on deceased members of the House. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. No other business to be transacted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the understanding that no other business will then be transacted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; that no other business shall then be transacted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16970) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 2987) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Rittenhouse;

A bill (H. R. 3100) providing for the conveyance of Widows Island, Maine, to the State of Maine;

A bill (H. R. 7433) granting an increase of pension to Byron C. Knapp;

A bill (H. R. 7864) to pay John F. Lawson $237.96, balance due him for services as United States mail carrier;

A bill (H. R. 8149) granting an increase of pension to James B. Martin;

A bill (H. R. 10175) granting a pension to Mary R. Bayly, formerly Mary S. Redick;

A bill (H. R. 15461) for the relief of Daniel F. Lee;

A bill (H. R. 15985) to confirm certain forest lieu selections made under the act approved June 4, 1897; and

A bill (H. R. 16888) to extend to the port of Niagara Falls, N. Y., the privileges of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

RESTORATION OF THE WHITE HOUSE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a report by the architects, with accompanying pictures, regarding the work of repairing and refurnishing the White House and the erection of the Executive office building.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 28, 1903.

ISLE OF PINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Relations with Cuba, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of February 16, 1903, requesting the President "if, in his judgment, the same be not incompatible with the public interests, to inform the Senate as to the present status of the Isle of Pines, and what Government is exercising authority and control in said island, what instructions, if any, regarding said island were given at the time when the military occupation of Cuba by the United States was terminated; and what action, if any, has been taken for the protection of the interests of citizens of the United States who have purchased property and settled in the Isle of Pines," I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of War.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 28, 1903.

LAND HELD BY EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith reports by the Secretary of State, Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of War, Attorney-General, Postmaster-General, Secretary of the Navy, Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of Agriculture, and the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, in compliance with the following provision of the sundry civil bill approved June 28, 1902.

The President is hereby requested to cause to be prepared and submitted to Congress at the commencement of its next session a statement showing what lots or parcels of land, other than public lands held for settlement under the public-land laws, are owned by the United States and held by the several Executive Departments or other branches of the public service, the area of each, the purposes for which each is held or occupied, in what State, Territory, or country, and in or near what town or city each is located.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 28, 1903.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate resume the consideration of the immigration bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada said to me that he had filed a notice under the rule adopted this morning (I do not know whether the Senator is in the Chamber) that he wished to be present when the bill was further considered. I hope he is in the Chamber, I will say, for I am quite willing that the consideration of the bill shall be proceeded with.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I must say I had no notice of that. The Senator from Nevada did not indicate any such desire to me, and he knew that for the time being the bill is in my charge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada left word at the desk with the clerks that he desired to be present when the bill was taken up.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, does that preclude taking up the bill upon motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given that the bill should be taken up.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I beg pardon. I did not hear the announcement by the Chair of unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate. It is in the Senate, and the pending amendment is, on page 3, line 19, to strike out the words which the Secretary will report.

The SECRETARY. After the word "prostitution," in line 19, page 3, section 2, it is proposed to strike out—persons whose migration has been induced by offers, solicitations, promises, or agreements, parole or special, express or implied, of labor or work, or service of any kind, skilled or unskilled, in the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. The word "and" should be added, and a semicolon.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Following "the United States?"

Mr. GALLINGER. Following "the United States." That should be included in the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON and Mr. FAIRBANKS addressed the Chair.

Mr. BACON. I will not interfere if the Senator from Indiana has an amendment to offer.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. On behalf of the committee, I send to the desk certain amendments, which I ask to have considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Section 23, page 19, line 24, after the word "charges," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Commissioner-General of Immigration may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, whenever in his judgment such action may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of this act, detail immigration officers for temporary service in foreign countries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 18, page 15, line 18, after the word "Treasury," it is proposed to insert:

The United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service shall be reimbursed by the immigration service for all expenditures incurred in carrying out the medical inspection of aliens under regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ELKINS. Will the Senator from Indiana explain the amendment?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It explains itself.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not understand it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Then I will present a letter from the Treasury Department to the chairman of the committee that explains it fully. I ask that it be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF PUBLIC HEALTH AND MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE,
Washington, February 28, 1903.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
Chairman Committee on Immigration, United States Senate.

SIR: Referring to H. R. 12199 and to the amendment providing that the United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service shall be reimbursed by the Immigration Service for expenditures in carrying out the medical inspection of aliens, etc., I have to state that by law the medical inspection of immigrants is imposed upon this service, requiring the detail of officers for this purpose; that there are 9 medical officers at Ellis Island, N. Y., detailed for this work exclusively; also 1 stationed in Canada, and 4 officers stationed, for like work exclusively, at four other ports in the United States.

The salaries of these officers are paid out of the marine-hospital fund, and it is manifest that this expense is a proper charge against the immigration fund, and the amendment provides the only means of securing this reimbursement. The amendment has had the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Commissioner-General of Immigration.

Respectfully,

WALTER WYMAN,
Surgeon-General.

[Memorandum in case this information is desired.]

In round numbers, the expenditures for immigration work pure and simple from the fund of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service is $40,000 per annum.

The medical inspection is one of the most important factors in the execution of the immigration law, since it not only excludes contagious and loathsome diseases, but demonstrates infirmities which make the immigrant liable to become a public charge.

WALTER WYMAN,
Surgeon-General United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service.

FEBRUARY 28, 1903.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. If there is no other amendment, I have an amendment which I wish to submit in the shape of two sections to come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as new sections the following:

SEC. —. That no person who disbelieves in or who is opposed to all organized government, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching such belief in or opposition to all organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, shall be permitted to enter the United States or any Territory or place subject to the jurisdiction thereof. This section shall be enforced by the Secretary of the Treasury under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe: Provided, That no such person shall be allowed to enter as an immigrant.

That any person who knowingly aids or assists any such person to enter the United States or any Territory or place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or who connives or conspires with any person or persons to allow, procure, or permit any such person to enter therein, except pursuant to such rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned for not less than one nor more than five years, or both.

SEC. —. That no person who disbelieves in or who is opposed to all organized government, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching such disbelief in or opposition to all organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or who has violated any of the provisions of this act, shall be naturalized or be made a citizen of the United States.

All courts and tribunals and all judges and officers thereof having jurisdiction of naturalization proceedings or duties to perform in regard thereto shall, on the final application for naturalization, make careful inquiry into such matters, and before issuing the final order or certificate of naturalization cause to be entered of record the affidavit of the applicant and of his witnesses so far as applicable, reciting and affirming the truth of every material fact requisite for naturalization. All final orders and certificates of naturalization hereafter made shall show on their face specifically that said affidavits were duly made and recorded, and all orders and certificates that fail to show such facts shall be null and void.

That any person who purposely procures naturalization in violation of the provisions of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000, or shall be imprisoned not less than one nor more than ten years, or both, and the court in which such conviction is had shall thereupon adjudge and declare the order or decree and all certificates admitting such person to citizenship null and void. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the courts having jurisdiction of the trial of such offense to make such adjudication.

That any person who knowingly aids, advises, or encourages any such person to apply for or to secure naturalization or to file the preliminary papers declaring an intent to become a citizen of the United States, or who in any naturalization proceeding knowingly procures or gives false testimony as to any material fact, or who knowingly makes an affidavit false as to any material fact required to be proved in such proceeding, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not less than one nor more than ten years, or both.

The foregoing provisions concerning naturalization shall not be in force until ninety days after the approval hereof.

Mr. ELKINS. The bill has been so amended, and the amendment just offered is so complicated and so long that I ask that the bill and amendments be printed, to come up on Monday.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from West Virginia will not press that request. It is, of course, manifest that if granted it would kill the bill. If any Senator is unadvised as to what the bill is it is certainly not the fault of the committee.

The bill is a codification mainly of existing laws. It embraces, among other things, very important and necessary administrative features. There is not a bill which has passed this Congress that has had more careful consideration than that which has been given to this bill. The amendments which have been proposed to-night are brief and definite. They are not complicated, they are not abstruse, and no Senator who sat in his seat and heard them read needs time to deliberate on them in order that he may understand them.

Mr. President, I undertake to say that there has been passed by this Congress no measure that is of equal importance with this. I know very well there are strong influences at work against the enactment of this or any similar measure.

There have been objections against several features of the bill. They have been considered, and amendments have been made where amendments were proper and necessary to strengthen it. I do not mean that the objections which have been made have been for other than the best of purposes. I do not mean to say that. Many of the objections which have been made have resulted in improving and in benefiting the measure. Such is the usual experience in considering measures of large importance.

There are those, Mr. President, who are against all immigration legislation. There are those who do not believe that there should be a restriction of immigration. There are those who have been opposed in season and out to the enactment into a law of this bill or any other measure similar in character to it.

One of the chief objections made against the bill was made to the provision for an educational test. I realized that there was sharp and honest difference of opinion with respect to that provision. The committee, appreciating the purpose of those who opposed it and not wishing to jeopardize the many other very important features of the bill, consented that that provision should be stricken out.

What is there in the bill as it stands now that is not found in some form upon the statute books to-day? The larger part of it is essentially a codification of existing law.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator briefly explain just what changes have been made in existing law? I do not want a synopsis, but I want a general outline of the most essential alterations, if there are any. Now, if this is a mere codification, it is not necessary.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will say——

Mr. TILLMAN. I want those essential changes. Of course I know there is a head tax, which is not the present law.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes; that is increased from $1 to $2.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. There are no essential changes from the present law. There was a very important change proposed by the application of an educational test, but, as I have stated, an amendment has been adopted striking out that provision. That was a very essential change from the existing immigration laws. There are no radical or substantial changes in the bill from the existing laws which are found scattered through many volumes of the statutes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator tell me about the inspection feature? I can not find it. I have been looking for it. Where is the inspection held?

Mr. LODGE. The inspections are held at the ports of entry.

Mr. TILLMAN. After the immigrants get here?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. What is the present law?

Mr. LODGE. That is the present law.

Mr. TILLMAN. They are not inspected on the other side?

Mr. LODGE. No; there is no inspection there.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is no certification in regard to the class of immigrants, paupers, and all that sort of thing?

Mr. LODGE. Certification from whom?

Mr. TILLMAN. From the consul.

Mr. LODGE. We can not have consular certification. That has been gone into with the utmost care. That was tried years ago. That scheme was brought up, and we found that other countries would not permit consular certification.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator mean to say that there is no such thing now as consular certification and examination?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not. There never has been.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It has been proposed several times.

Mr. LODGE. It has been proposed several times. It was found that other countries, one country particularly, which it is needless to name, objected to having their citizens go before a foreign consul, and also the people themselves desiring to emigrate objected to it. It was found utterly impracticable. The matter was gone into with the utmost thoroughness by the Senator from New Hampshire at that time, Mr. Chandler, and myself and others.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from South Carolina will permit me, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if there is not some form of examination in foreign countries at the present time?

Mr. LODGE. The steamship companies make some examination of their own. That is done in order to comply with the law and save themselves from bringing improper immigrants, but there is no official inspection. Of course they have to make a manifest.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. They make the ordinary manifest, but that is all the business of the steamship company.

This bill, if the Senator from Indiana will allow me for a moment, is, as he has said, a codification of existing law. That which to my mind was really the only very valuable part of the bill, the educational test, has been dropped out. What remains is an arrangement of the law which will improve its administration, and even that is resisted and fought.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would rather vote for a bill that contained the educational qualification for immigrants.

Mr. LODGE. So would I, very much.

Mr. CULLOM. I supposed it was in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. It has been withdrawn and it is not in this last bill. We can save the administrative features, which are of great value, and which the Department desires because it improves the method of administration. That is all that remains in the bill.

Mr. CARMACK. Has the educational qualification been left out of the bill?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It was taken out last night.

Mr. LODGE. It was withdrawn. It is a House clause and it will have to be settled in conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it. The ayes have it; and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask for the yeas and nays. ["No!" "No!"] Let us see if enough want the yeas and nays.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator knows what that would mean at this time. I hope the Senator——

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator will not press that demand. If it is pressed I shall have something to say about what has been done against this bill.

Mr. ELKINS. I am asking if enough Senators want the yeas and nays to second the call.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator can not experiment with it in that way.

Mr. TILLMAN. The only way the Senator can determine that is to call for a quorum.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not want to call for a quorum, but I want to have the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. I am inclined to think the bill had better go over.

Mr. LODGE. It can not go over without everything else going over.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I trust that the Senator will allow us to vote upon it this evening.

Mr. CULLOM. I was going to move an executive session.

Mr. LODGE. We will call the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPOONER. I am in favor of this bill, and I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not be inexorable about it. Here is a little bill, a House bill——

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to be inexorable at all, but I should like to have this bill disposed of. It has been before the Senate the whole session. We have made concessions to meet the wishes of the Senator from West Virginia. We have made concessions to meet the wishes of the Senator from New Hampshire. It was understood that these amendments were satisfactory, and that we could get the bill through without further objection. Of course, if the bill is to lead to debate and voting at this late stage of the session it will be lost, which I think will be a great misfortune to the good administration of the law.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a word to say. I am not going to be influenced one particle by either the rather severe language of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] or the threat I heard from the lips of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I am quite willing that the people whom I try to represent should know precisely my attitude on this bill. I thank the Senator from Indiana for conceding to me the privilege of having taken from the bill the words that I called attention to on yesterday.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. In what I said I had no reference, directly or indirectly, to the honorable Senator's attitude upon the bill. That always has been frank, straightforward, and entirely consistent with his duty. I had no reference whatever to him.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not at any time felt the least inclination to prevent a vote on this bill. I quite agree with what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] said to-day—that if the business of this session had been conducted, as I believe it ought to have been conducted, we would have had a vote on a certain other measure and would have had ample time to have considered all these great questions which are thrust upon us to-day and which we are told must be pushed through because of their great importance.

This bill as it came from another body was an utterly vicious bill. It was either purposely or otherwise aimed at the interest of the section of the country I try to represent. We have had taken from the bill in the limited time we have had to debate it, to consider it, many of those objectionable features. I hope they will not appear in the bill again after the conference has been had, and I want to say here and now that if they do I shall take an opportunity to express my views upon the conference report.

Mr. SPOONER. At length?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; not necessarily at length; but I shall at least enter my protest.

Now, Mr. President, there is one other amendment that I want to have made to this bill. In the first section, for the first time in legislation, an attempt was made to hold the transportation companies, equally with the steamship companies, responsible for the transportation of aliens across the border. These provisions have been taken from the bill, but in turning to page 25 I find a proviso, commencing on line 9 and ending on line 12, which I feel sure ought to be taken from the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Page 25, section 33. The section reads as follows:

That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe rules for the entry and inspection of aliens along the borders of Canada and Mexico, so as not to unnecessarily delay, impede, or annoy passengers in ordinary travel between the United States and said countries, and shall have power to enter into contracts with foreign transportation lines for the same purpose.

That is all right. Then comes the proviso:

Provided, That any such transportation line shall agree, as far as practicable—

I want to emphasize those words—

That any such transportation line shall agree, as far as practicable, to assume all the obligations imposed by this act on the masters, agents, and owners of vessels bringing aliens to ports of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, when an alien applies for passage to the agent or owner of a steamship company in Europe, there is time to examine that passenger; there is a system of examination and inquiry; and if a steamship company takes a passenger, the steamship company does it at its own peril, and if the passenger is deported, the steamship company is punished for transporting an undesirable immigrant into the country. But if the immigrant applies on the border line of Canada to take a train, there is no way of determining the question whether that immigrant should be conveyed or not by that transportation company, and to say that the transportation company should be held to make an arrangement that "as far as practicable"—whatever that means in law, I do not know; as a layman, I think it is an absurdity—"as far as practicable to assume all the obligations imposed by this act on the masters, agents, and owners of vessels bringing aliens to ports of the United States," is to my mind something that ought not to be in the bill.

I move, Mr. President, to strike out those words.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is an entirely reasonable amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to strike out the words which he has read.

Mr. GALLINGER. The proviso.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To strike out the proviso. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, a single further word, and I am done. I have had no disposition to obstruct the passage of this bill, but I have wanted to say a great deal more about it than I have said. I have been opposed to many of its features. More than six years ago, I think eight years ago, the country resounded with declarations concerning a bill which received, I think, the approbation of the American people, known as the Lodge bill. That was the bill requiring an educational test. I committed myself to that bill to my own people, and I have never since changed my mind about it.

But this bill goes to conference, if it goes to conference at all, with that wise provision, as I think, eliminated from it, and as I understand—I think I am not giving away any secrets when I say that—there is a tacit understanding that that provision of the bill shall remain out of the bill. I am fearful that the provisions which I have succeeded in getting out will reappear. We all know how these things are done in conference. We know how, when a Senator is anxious to get a bill through at half past 6 o'clock in the evening, when we ought to be at home eating our dinners, that he will agree to let amendments be adopted, and slip from under them very readily in conference. We have all had experience—I have—and so I say, Mr. President, that while the Senator from Indiana insists that this bill has had such careful consideration, the fact remains that in the closing hours of this session, when we have had but a few moments to discuss it, four or five important matters have been taken from it and several important matters have been added to it.

I hope that the bill, Mr. President, if it becomes a law will be a just law; I hope it will not be oppressive to any section of our country. With that single observation, I shall dismiss the matter, only adding the hope that the elimination of these matters, after they have been taken from the bill on my motion, may be insisted upon on the part of our conferees.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I have a few bills which I think are of importance, and I do not see why this bill, though important, should take precedence of all other bills. I could dispose of mine in half the time that this bill has consumed.

I made a reasonable request of the Senator from Indiana to have this bill, with the amendments which have been made, reprinted, so that we can understand it, and then take a vote upon it on Monday.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this bill was brought up at the very beginning of the session, and was made the unfinished business, until it had to give way to the statehood bill by the agreement made at the last session. It was considered here for days; it was reprinted two or three times, and it got through the Committee of the Whole into the Senate. In order to save the bill, these concessions have been made by those who believe in the provisions which have been eliminated as strongly as I do.

I want to say to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that if I should be one of the conferees on the bill, where I have agreed, as I have with him, on the removal of certain sections, I shall feel bound in honor to stand by the removal of those sections, because the bill goes through, as I understand it, only on those conditions.

But, Mr. President, after all these concessions have been made, after the bill has been agreed, as I understand we have agreed upon it, now to kill the bill in this way at the last moment seems to me a very hard measure.

We could have pressed the bill at other times; we could have insisted on the clause to which the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] objects more than any other—the educational clause—because he thinks it will deprive corporations of a new supply of cheap labor. We could have insisted on that at any time; but to save the administrative features of the bill, we withdrew that in good faith, believing that if we made these large concessions we should be allowed to pass the bill and save its administrative features. If the bill goes over until Monday, it is perfectly well known that in these last two days the chances of saving it are almost nothing.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I find that section 7 of this bill is incorporated in the alien contract-labor law, and I want to ask the chairman of the committee—and that is the reason why I wanted to have the bill reprinted—if that section is stricken out?

Mr. GALLINGER. The alien contract labor provision is stricken out.

Mr. ELKINS. I refer to section 7, on page 8.

Mr. LODGE. That is the contract-labor law as now existing.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not see the necessity of reenacting laws already on the statute book. I understand this is literally the same.

Mr. LODGE. If we are to strike out the contract-labor law, that is a pretty large issue and would deserve to receive a good deal of discussion.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is one of the settled policies in the legislative history of the Government.

Mr. LODGE. I will say frankly there will be no yielding on that so far as I am concerned. I am not going to consent to modify the contract-labor law.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The committee is unanimous about that. If the bill is to be defeated because of opposition to the contract-labor law now in the closing hours of the session, we would rather have the bill defeated and appeal to another session of Congress.

Mr. ELKINS. I think that would be much the wiser course. I have asked a simple question, and Senators seem to differ as to what the bill means.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If there is one thing which the people demand above another it is that our citizenship and our labor shall not be degraded by bringing people from abroad under contract to labor. Those who come upon their own volition make the best citizens, and those who come because they are hired to come to displace American labor are not desired by us. We must shut the door against them and hold it fast.

Mr. LODGE. We do not differ. That is the contract-labor law now on the statute book. If the Senator wants to go to the country on a modification of that law, I should be delighted to do it with him.

Mr. ELKINS. This thing of going to the country, and legislating about the country, and talking to the galleries——

Mr. LODGE. I am not thinking of the galleries, but I am thinking of the country and something else besides the interest of corporations.

Mr. ELKINS. I know how the Senator occasionally speaks about corporations, but that need not enter into this debate. I am not opposed to corporations as much as the Senator seems to be and I am not particularly in love with them, but that ought not to influence my judgment as to this bill and its effect on immigrants coming to the country.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Does the Senator doubt that this is the contract-labor law as it now stands?

Mr. ELKINS. To be candid about the matter, I can not understand this bill, and I do not know anybody who does. [Laughter.]

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I am not speaking of the bill, I am speaking of section 7.

Mr. LODGE. It does not follow, because the Senator from West Virginia does not understand it, that the rest of us do not understand it.

Mr. ELKINS. Do you understand it?

Mr. LODGE. We have explained it, but we can not make the Senator understand our explanation. That is the trouble.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator explain the section to which the Senator from West Virginia is referring—section 7?

Mr. GALLINGER. If I may be permitted, I would say, in answer to the Senator from Mississippi, that it is not an exact reproduction of the present alien-contract-labor law, but it is essentially the same.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. It is in substance the same.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is in substance the same. Certain words have been added, such as "and any alien coming to this country in consequence of such an advertisement," etc. Those words are not in the existing law.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Does the Senator desire to repeal the contract-labor law?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all. I have made no issue on that. I was simply saying that this provision is not an exact reproduction of the contract-labor law, but it is substantially the same.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator from West Virginia will find, in the report made by the committee, a compilation of all the laws upon immigration respecting the prohibition of contract laborers, and he will find those laws in columns parallel with the provisions of this bill. From that he will be able to see the origin of the provisions of the bill before the Senate.

Mr. ELKINS. The Senator does not want me to take that book [exhibiting] and read it? That is the report of the committee, I understand. Any bill that needs a report of 425 printed pages to explain its provisions and make them understood should put Senators on inquiry and require Senators in charge to make proper explanations when asked.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the distinguished and honorable Senator has not read the report of the committee, which was prepared for the information of Senators, he must not charge the committee with any dereliction of duty in not supplying him with information.

Mr. ELKINS. Who would read that book when the statehood bill is up? [Laughter.] I doubt whether any Senator of the committee has read it. I ask the Senator, candidly, if he has read it?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Every member of the committee has read it and is thoroughly familiar with every provision in it.

Mr. ELKINS. Then I do not see how you had time to oppose the statehood bill. [Laughter.]

I heard the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] say that if he were on the conference committee he would adhere to the Senate's interpretation of what this bill ought to be if enacted into law, but I have not heard the chairman of the committee make any expression about it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. With respect to which of these amendments? What amendment does the Senator desire to be informed about?

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to have all the amendments retained in the bill just as the Senate adopted them.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is rather a general request. Does the Senator have any specific point about which he wishes to inquire?

Mr. ELKINS. The amendment insisted on by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the one taken out a while ago, and the one providing for the educational test. There are two others. Like the Senator from New Hampshire, I shall be satisfied if we can get from the chairman of the committee the same assurance that the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] gave, because he might not be on the conference committee, and the chairman of the committee undoubtedly will be.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am not the chairman of the committee. I am only acting in the absence of the chairman, who is detained from the Senate. But, speaking for myself, I say that the Senator needs no assurance from me or from any other member of the committee who will be on the conference committee that absolute good faith will be observed.

Mr. ELKINS. I know, but good faith might mean the striking out of every one of these amendments.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I do not think that would be good faith.

Mr. LODGE. We do not construe good faith in that way.

Mr. ELKINS. I had hoped, and I still hope, to hear from the other conferee. I should like to hear from the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] if he would adhere to these amendments. Since the Senator from Massachusetts has volunteered to state as to how he would act in conference, I should like to hear from the others if they will volunteer and declare their intentions. [Laughter.]

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I do not know that I shall be on the conference committee, but I will say, if I am, I will act in perfect good faith.

Mr. ELKINS. Good faith, like charity, may cover a multitude of sins.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Yes, sir; but good faith, in my judgment, would be that no Senator would be justifiable in abandoning any amendment that was made a condition of the passage of this bill, and I, for one, would not abandon any amendment that was made a condition for the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. I am not sure that I can maintain it as a question of order, but I think that I ought to be able to do so.

I do not believe that we have a right to send Senators into a conference with the conferees on the part of the other House and exact pledges in advance from them as to what they are to do as conferees.

We were very indignant, indeed, a year ago when the other House undertook to give an instruction of that kind. If there is anything that can be more objectionable than that, it is to ask gentlemen to get up and pledge themselves as men of honor that they will not go into a free conference. It may be that the members of the House on that conference will present to every one of that committee reasons for abandoning or modifying a particular amendment of the Senate, and if they do, it will be the duty of our conferees to report to the Senate that they think those reasons are good and state them to the Senate when the conference report comes in, so as to allow the Senate to judge of them.

I submit that it is a violation of the rule of order of the Senate and a most disorderly and improper proceeding to ask members of this body to get up and pledge themselves as to what they will do in conference. I do not make the question as a formal question of order, because I do not want that trouble; but I think on this statement my friend from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], who is the very essence of propriety always, as he is of wisdom, of duty, and of good nature [laughter], will abandon it right here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendments be ordered to be engrossed?

Mr. ELKINS. I want one word more, if the President will allow me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ELKINS. Before the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] made his very proper remarks and then withdrew the point of order, it so happened that the Senator's colleague [Mr. LODGE] did volunteer the statement—and I never would have asked for the statement I did but for that fact—that the committee of conference would do so and so. I thought it was a crucifixion of all the proprieties myself [laughter], but I thought at the same time if they were all ready to make a declaration in the presence of the Senate, it might help us when the bill went into the committee of conference.

I am in favor of this bill as it stands, if we can keep it as it is; that is, if I understand the bill at all. I have not had time to examine it with care, though I have tried to do so. If I were to undertake to read this report made by the committee, it would keep me at home three or four days, and I could not attend to the sessions of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. The conferees will have to report their agreement or their disagreement to the Senate. This is not the last of the matter.

Mr. ELKINS. I know; but conference reports generally get through.

With the assurances I have had, Mr. President, although it is against the proprieties, decorum, good order, and the rules of the Senate, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], I will not make any further objection to this bill, but will take my chances on the action of the conference committee, giving notice that if these amendments be struck out, I shall try to delay the passage of the bill just as long as I can.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I asked the chairman of the committee a while ago if this was a mere codification of existing law what was the necessity for such a hurry about the passage of this bill, and the Senator from Massachusetts assured me it was merely to save the administrative features of the law.

I hold in my hand the report of the Committee on Immigration of the United States Senate, in which there is a comparison between this bill and the old law, and there is one very essential feature here, to my mind, which has been changed; and I want to ask the chairman of the committee why it has been changed? The old act of March 3, 1893, provides:

SEC. 2. That the immigrants shall be listed in convenient groups, and no one list or manifest shall contain more than 30 names. To each immigrant or head of a family shall be given a ticket, on which shall be written his name, a number or letter designating the list, and his number on the list, for convenience of identification on arrival. Each list or manifest shall be verified by the signature and the oath or affirmation of the master or commanding officer, or of the officer first or second below him in command, taken before the United States consul or consular agent at the port of departure.

This says the consular agent's certificate at the port of departure, whereas the proposed act says "at the port of arrival." In other words, you get these people across, the steamship companies make the money that is involved in their transportation, and then they are turned loose after they get here.

Mr. LODGE. That has been changed for the better enforcement of the law, at the request of the Department and on their statement that they had no control over those lists; that they were passed without any examination and without any inspection by the consular agent, wholly and solely on the manifest of the ship. It was done for the better enforcement of the law. At the port of arrival we can control those lists and we can examine the immigrants to see whether they correspond, but on the other side we have no proper way of controlling or corroborating the lists. The change was made as a great improvement in administration, to enable the lists to be examined here; and it was done at the request of the Commissioner of Immigration.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator will give me some information on another point. I can not find the section now, but I had it a few minutes ago; and in reading it I found these steamship companies were required to transport these people back "if practicable."

Mr. LODGE. No; that was in the clause in regard to transportation of aliens by railroad companies over the border.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; by steamship companies "if practicable." I can find it if I have the time.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is mistaken. It was a proviso called to our attention by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which said the same obligation should be imposed on railroad companies.

Mr. TILLMAN. Wait a minute. I just happen to have put my eye on the provision. Section 20 of this bill reads:

That all aliens brought into this country in violation of law shall, if practicable, be immediately sent back to the countries whence they respectively came on the vessels bringing them.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; on the vessels bringing them, if it is practicable to do so on the same vessel, but if not, then on another vessel.

Mr. TILLMAN. And "if not practicable" to return them on the same ship they are turned loose while waiting for another ship.

Mr. LODGE. They can not get loose between the ships, for they are kept at Ellis Island; but they may be detained a longer time than if they went back on the return voyage of the same ship.

Mr. HOAR. Would the Senator from South Carolina have them sent back if it is not practicable?

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts is always getting off some joke, and thinks it is very smart. He is very learned and very smart sometimes, but these little "ifs" and "ands" and "buts," as we all understand, have frequently changed the meaning of a statute.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think I have got off or attempted to get off any joke.

Mr. TILLMAN. What, then, did the Senator mean?

Mr. HOAR. I did not mean to throw ridicule on the Senator from South Carolina at all. I only proposed to point out that what he said was ridiculous.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator thinks it is ridiculous, that is all right, but I do not think it is ridiculous, because if the inspection is as rigid as it ought to be, and we have the sworn statement that the inspection is thorough, the improper immigrants will be discovered, and they will be sent back on the return voyage instead of being held until they get a chance to sneak away.

Mr. LODGE. The only purpose of that clause is to get them back on the same vessel, if possible. It may be impossible to conduct the necessary examination in the interval, and then they go back on another vessel of the same line.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not find any such provision here.

Mr. LODGE. There is such a provision, as the Senator will find if he examines the bill. The companies are obliged to pay the cost of the maintenance of the immigrants on land.

Mr. TILLMAN. Section 20 provides that:

The cost of their maintenance while on land, as well as the expense of the return of such aliens, shall be borne by the owner or owners of the vessels on which they respectively came.

Mr. LODGE (reading):

And if any master, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessels shall refuse to receive back on board thereof, or of any other vessel owned by the same interest——

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have a vote.

Mr. SPOONER and others. "Vote!"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendments be ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WISCONSIN CENTRAL RAILROAD, ETC., GRANTS.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11572) for the relief of certain settlers upon Wisconsin Central Railroad and The Dalles military road land grants.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I move in lines 17, 18, 19, and 20, on page 2, to strike out:

, but no patent shall issue upon any such entry except upon proof of residence upon and improvement and cultivation of the land so entered for at least one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, BLACK RIVER, OHIO.

Mr. HANNA. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 14384) to establish a life-saving station at the mouth of Black River, at or near the city of Lorain, in the State of Ohio.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will give me time to pass the bill I had up this morning.

Mr. CARMACK. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will yield.

Mr. KEAN. Certainly I will.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Maine objected——

Mr. KEAN. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill referred to by the Senator from South Carolina is not here. It has been sent down to be printed. It has been sent for.

KENSEY J. HAMPTON.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a bill of only nine lines. It will take but a moment. It is the bill (H. R. 15243) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Kensey J. Hampton captain and quartermaster in the Army.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment in line 3, after the word "discretion," to insert "and upon such examination as he may prescribe;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States in his discretion and upon such examination as he may prescribe be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint Kensey J. Hampton, late captain and assistant quartermaster, United States Volunteers, to the grade of captain and quartermaster, United States Army, to fill the first or any subsequent vacancy in said grade in the Quartermaster's Department occurring after the passage of this act.

Mr. BATE. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that it be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN NATIONAL INSTITUTE AT PARIS.

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina to call up the bill which was read this morning.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7368) to incorporate the American National Institute (Prix de Paris) at Paris, France.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to know just how the bill stands, because the Senator from Maine insisted on two other little amendments which I wish to offer now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move to strike out section 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move to strike out section 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seventeen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, the understanding being that no legislative business of any character whatever shall then be transacted and that the meeting of the Senate is only for the purpose of delivering eulogies on the deceased members of the House, of which notice has been given.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Sunday, March 1, 1903, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 28, 1903.

[Continuation of legislative day of February 26, 1903.]

The recess having expired, the House, at 11 o'clock a. m., was called to order by the Speaker.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in a Republican House we can not do any business without a quorum, except to turn out a member! I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first count, to see whether there is a quorum present or not. [After counting the House.] One hundred and seventy-eight members present—a quorum.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Of course, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will suspend to receive a message from the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 17288. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6139) to provide for the organization of private corporations in the district of Alaska.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. R. 169. Joint resolution providing for the placing of bronze tablets on the custom-house and post-office building in Savannah, Ga.;

S. 7390. An act to ratify and amend an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, in South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry same into effect;

S. 6599. An act to provide a government for the island of Guam, and for other purposes; and

S. 7054. An act to provide a government for the island of Tutuila and the islands adjacent thereto within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 16573. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across St. Francis River at or near the town of St. Francis, Ark.; and

H. R. 16885. An act to extend to the port of Niagara Falls, N. Y., the privileges of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 16656. An act regulating the importation of breeding animals; and

H. R. 16775. An act establishing United States courts at Duncan, Maryetta, and Comanche, Ind. T.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 17202) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 16910) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. BATE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 16990) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MASON, Mr. PENROSE, and Mr. CLAY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 16970) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. ALGER, and Mr. PETTUS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the naval appropriation bill with Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the amendments of the Senate to said bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if the report was read in full?

The SPEAKER. The amendments were read in full. The question is, Will the House disagree to said amendments en bloc and ask a conference with the Senate?

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand a division.

Mr. SHERMAN. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 253, nays 0, answered "present" 6, not voting 92; as follows:

Until further notice:

Mr. DOUGLAS with Mr. GLASS.

Mr. CONNELL with Mr. REID.

Mr. COOMBS with Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.

Mr. STEWART of New York with Mr. JETT.

Mr. HASKINS with Mr. LAMB.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey with Mr. WILSON.

Mr. WACHTER with Mr. NORTON.

On this vote:

Mr. NEVIN with Mr. NEWLANDS.

Mr. MINOR with Mr. MUTCHLER.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD with Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN.

Mr. JACK with Mr. FEELY.

Mr. CANNON with Mr. MADDOX.

Mr. BLACKBURN with Mr. SCARBOROUGH.

Mr. BULL with Mr. BALL of Texas.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa with Mr. SULZER.

Mr. LOVERING with Mr. POU.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota with Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana.

Mr. BLAKENEY with Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FOSS, Mr. DAYTON, and Mr. TATE.

AUTOMATIC COUPLERS AND SAFETY APPLIANCES.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 8560) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement.

[For text of the conference report and statement, see page 2674.]

During the reading of the conference report,

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee said: Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, through the Chair, if this report has not been published in the RECORD?

Mr. WANGER. It has; oh, yes, published several days ago.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. On what page?

Mr. WANGER. It is published on page 2824 of the daily RECORD.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the conference report and statement.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for me to add anything by way of explanation of the agreements of the conferees to what is set forth in the report and statement. The material matter of agreement is that we withdraw from the House amendment the provision authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission, upon application, for a stated limited period to reduce the number of cars which must have their air brakes used and operated on every train. It is needless for me to add that the House appeared to desire that change. I say appeared to do it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. WANGER. I yield to my colleague for a question.

Mr. ADAMSON. I wish to ask if it is the purpose of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to have debate upon this report?

Mr. WANGER. I know of no occasion for further debate. I understand that those who voted with me against the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama accept the conclusion reached, and make no further controversy.

Mr. ADAMSON. If it is the purpose of the gentleman to debate it, we ought to have some arrangement as to the time. I have talked with gentlemen who desire to be heard, and the gentleman from Alabama, and it is my desire——

Mr. WANGER. The gentleman from Alabama generally takes care of himself.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania is going to debate the report, there ought to be two sides.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to my friend I desire to ask for recognition in my own right, so as to have time.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WANGER. Certainly.

Mr. CANDLER. Will you kindly state the effect of the agreement of the conferees as it affects the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Alabama upon which we voted the other day? What effect has the report of the conferees on that proposition?

Mr. WANGER. If the gentleman will tell me what the purpose of the gentleman from Alabama was, or if he will allow me to read what it was, I will endeavor to give him information.

Mr. CANDLER. I would be very much obliged.

Mr. WANGER. The resolution of the gentleman from Alabama was "to instruct the conferees on the part of the House to recede from that portion of amendment numbered 2 which seeks to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission power to reduce the minimum number of cars to be handled." That subject was not in the bill at all. But the supposition was that the intention was that the law should provide that the minimum number of cars in every train which must have their air brakes used and operated was 50 per cent, and the action of the conferees——

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WANGER (continuing). Brings about that result when the law goes into effect.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WANGER. I ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask for a division. I was so sure the noes were in the majority; I did not think it necessary to ask it at once.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not running that part of it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And no other part.

Mr. WANGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 155, nays 88, "present" 8, not voting 100, as follows:

So the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.
The following additional pairs were announced:
Until further notice:
Mr. ACHESON with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.
Mr. BLAKENEY with Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN.
Mr. JOY with Mr. SULZER.
On this vote:
Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. BELLAMY.
Mr. CANNON with Mr. COOPER of Texas.
Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana.
Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. SHEPPARD.
The result of the vote was announced as above stated.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider that vote and lay that motion on the table.
Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that that it is clearly dilatory.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it expedites the bill to the engrossing clerk, and I therefore insist on the motion to reconsider and to lay that motion on the table.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is perfectly manifest that where only three gentlemen out of 250 have voted in the negative, a motion to reconsider is dilatory.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. But, Mr. Speaker, it has been done in this House on the unanimous vote.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 17288) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, had asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. TILLMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORGANIZATION OF PRIVATE CORPORATIONS IN ALASKA.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged resolution which I wish to submit.
Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged motion.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But there is one already on the table.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.
Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a conference report on Senate bill No. 6139.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois submits a conference report.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But, Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is out of order.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But the Chair recognized me to offer my privileged resolution.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Illinois had taken the floor to present a conference report.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But the Chair recognized me, and I sent the resolution to the Chair.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Tennessee has a privileged resolution, the Chair will recognize him after the gentleman from Illinois. The Clerk will read the conference report.
The Clerk proceeded with the reading, but was interrupted by Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, who said: Mr. Speaker, I want to raise the question of consideration on this report, and I want to raise that question now, before it is read.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill S. 6139, "An act to provide for the organization of private corporations in the district of Alaska" having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

Page 2, line 3, strike out "one" and insert "two;" line 20, after "elected," insert "or appointed."

Page 3, line 3, after "ordinance," insert "to declare what shall be a misdemeanor and;" line 8, after "tax," insert "not to exceed $2 each;" line 9, strike out "sixty" and insert "fifty;" line 13, after "dogs," insert "not exceeding $2 a year on each dog;" line 17, after "tax," insert "for municipal purposes;" line 22, strike out all after "that," to and including "public," in line 23, and insert "all;" line 24, strike out "church" and "public;" line 25, strike out "worship" and insert "educational, or charitable purposes shall be exempt from taxation."

Page 4, line 2, after "tax," insert "for municipal purposes;" line 17, strike out "such" and "as;" line 20, after "be," insert "uniform and shall be."

Page 5, line 17, strike out "and."

Page 6, line 19, before "court," insert "district;" and in line 20, strike out all after "by" to and including "same," in line 21, and insert "said clerk."

Page 7, line 10, strike out "and" and insert "shall be;" and line 11, strike out "shall be" and insert "and."

Page 9, line 15, strike out "trustees" and insert "directors;" line 17, strike out second "the" and insert "its;" and line 18, strike out "are" and insert "shall be."

Page 22, line 1, after "salaries," insert "severally."

That the title of said act read as follows; "An act amending the civil code of Alaska, providing for the organization of private corporations, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

V. WARNER,
HENRY R. GIBSON,
F. A. McLAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

KNUTE NELSON,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
T. M. PATTERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the conferees was read, as follows:

The committee on conference of the House and Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon Senate bill 6139, entitled "An act to provide for the organization of private corporations in the district of Alaska," have reached a full and complete agreement, as set forth in the accompanying report.

The greater number of amendments agreed upon by the conferees are changes in phraseology.

Section 2 is amended to require of plaintiffs in divorce actions two years' residence in Alaska, instead of one year.

The amendments to section 3 more specifically define the powers of municipalities and prescribe their limitations respecting taxation for municipal purposes.

Sections 5 to 23, inclusive, are amended to more effectually regulate private corporations and to insure greater degree of publicity.

V. WARNER,
HENRY R. GIBSON,
F. A. McLAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee raises the question of consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We ought to consider the supply bills and not these little matters. Appropriation bills ought to be passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House consider the report?

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call for a division.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 219, nays 22, answered "present" 11, not voting 99; as follows:

So the House decided to consider the conference report.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota with Mr. BROUSSARD.

Mr. ADAMS with Mr. HOOKER.

Mr. CANNON with Mr. COOPER of Texas.

On this vote:

Mr. LITTAUER with Mr. POU.

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That the statement filed by the conference committee does not comply with the requirements of rule 29, which provides:

> And there shall accompany such report a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measure to which they relate.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that that comes too late, after the House has resolved to consider the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then I desire the gentleman from Illinois——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. WARNER. I do not yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then I make the further point that there is no quorum present in the House.

Mr. PAYNE. That is dilatory, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Within five minutes there have voted 251 members, so the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We are under the five-minute rule now, and not the hour rule, as we were the other day. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. That is funny, but not true.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report of the conferees of both Houses. The bill as amended provides for the appointment and election of election officers in municipalities in Alaska. It authorizes municipalities to levy and collect taxes there.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I insist on order. I believe I am in favor of this bill, if I can hear the gentleman's statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order.

Mr. WARNER. It provides that 50 per cent of the licenses collected outside of incorporated towns shall be devoted, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to educational purposes, and it authorizes the formation of corporations in the district of Alaska. If it passes to-day it will be the first legislation passing both Houses providing for publicity in relation to the formation and conduct of corporations.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask the gentleman if he proposes——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, the time is too precious to waste in further debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman propose to occupy the time of this House and leave nothing to be said by the other side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question being taken. on a division (demanded by Mr. HAY) there were—ayes 101. noes 81.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demand tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly evident that the minority have not learned anything in the last two days. I demand the yeas and nays. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is not even funny.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 136, nays 93, answered "present" 7, not voting 115; as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HANBURY with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. PIERCE.

Mr. PARKER with Mr. LESTER.

Mr. HULL with Mr. SNODGRASS.

On this vote:

Mr. MUDD with Mr. BREAZEALE.

Mr. JENKINS with Mr. RHEA.

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. MCCULLOCH.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin with Mr. CALDWELL.

Mr. BROWN with Mr. BENTON.

Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. BARTLETT.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Speaker, am I recorded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. SPERRY. I wish to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman listening when his name was called and failed to hear it?

Mr. SPERRY. I was at lunch.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can not vote.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be marked "present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. MAHON. I was not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can not be recorded on this call.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. FLOOD. I was not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can not vote.

Mr. DICK. I was not present. I desire to be recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can not be recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

An act (H. R. 16069) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain lands therein mentioned.

PUBLIC PROPERTY IN WHITE HOUSE.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have a privileged resolution I desire to have read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee presents a privileged report, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution No. 456.

Resolved, That the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds be, and he is hereby, directed, in conformity with the act of April 17, 1900, to cause to be prepared an inventory of all the public property in or belonging to the White House, giving the cost of each article; its condition, if still in use; the final disposition of such articles as have been removed, sold, or otherwise disposed of; the prices at which each article was sold; how, by whom, and to whom each article was sold or otherwise disposed of, and the disposition of all the proceeds of such sales, including also all articles that are or were deposited there as a gift or loan or otherwise, whether public property or the property of some person, bringing such inventory and report up to this date, and transmit the same to this House as early as practicable at this session of Congress.

Mr. PAYNE. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to discharge the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds from the consideration of the resolution just read and to consider it in the House, and the gentleman from New York moves to lay that motion on the table. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am astonished that the gentleman from New York should let this unwarranted and improper action go on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 107, noes 70.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Tellers.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, to save time, I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

[During the division Mr. GAINES of Tennessee undertook to address the House, amid cries of "Order!" and was ordered by the Speaker pro tempore to take his seat.]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 78, answered "present" 7, not voting 127; as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

IMPORTATION OF BREEDING ANIMALS.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore recognized Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 16656) regulating the importation of breeding animals, and to concur in the Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments of the Senate.

The amendments were read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers having reported,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: On this question the tellers report ayes 100, noes 33. A second is ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The last roll call, only two minutes ago, disclosed the presence of 224 members—47 more than a quorum; and not a single roll call since the opening of the session to-day has failed to disclose a quorum. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is recognized as entitled to the floor for twenty minutes in favor of the motion to suspend the rules, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] as entitled to twenty minutes in opposition.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced in the House of Representatives to meet a result that grew out of a ruling by the Treasury Department upon the subject of the importation of breeding animals. After a uniform construction of the rule which had been in force for a number of years, there was a change of the law as a result of a ruling by the Treasury. A ruling was made by a collector of one of the ports of the country and was sustained by the Treasury Department, and finally by one of the courts of the country. The difference between the law as it now stands and the law that is proposed to be brought about by the enactment of this legislation I will endeavor to explain. This legislation has been asked for by the great organizations of stock growers throughout the country and the agricultural communities of the country.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, if the chairman of the committee will permit an interruption, I would ask him this question: Would not a vote against the passage of this bill be equivalent to saying, by the man who casts that vote, that he was not in favor of admitting high-bred animals for breeding purposes free of duty?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly it would be.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I understand, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state exactly what the difference is between the present law and the proposed legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. This is absolutely free trade on these articles, I understand.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is absolutely free trade on these articles. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] The gentleman makes no point on that. In the Dingley bill it was provided that any animal imported specially for breeding purposes should be admitted free, and the gentleman from Illinois voted against it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Not against that. It was other parts of the bill that I could not stand for. I was in favor of this particular part of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, I would like to have the gentleman explain his inconsistencies. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.] By a ruling of the Department it has been held that the law, as it is to-day, applies only to the importers, the result of which is that the farmer or stock raiser can not have the benefit of this free importation unless he imports the animal himself. Now the proposition of the bill is to add the words "whether intended to be so used by the importer himself or for sale for such purpose." In the general law upon the subject there is the fullest guard against any imposition upon the Treasury by proof that must be made that the animal is pure bred and is imported for no other purpose than for breeding purposes. That is the whole of this law. The bill was passed by unanimous vote of the House. It was reported here by unanimous vote of the Committee on Ways and Means, went to the Senate, and there were put into the bill, by the Senate, two amendments, one of which is "by a citizen of the United States," so as to exclude from the privilege of free importation a citizen of any other country than our own, and the second amendment is to the effect "that the provisions of this act shall apply to all such animals as have been imported and are in quarantine," which come within the provisions of the statute.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman takes his seat, I would ask him if he would tell us about how much the revenues have been in the last year, or in any year, upon this class of animals?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Almost nothing.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How long ago was the decision made which makes this law necessary?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It was made, I think, in November.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What was the purpose of the gentleman in delaying the passage of this bill until the last hours of the last days of the session? It might have been passed two or three days ago.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman has not delayed the passage of the bill. The bill was not introduced until about two weeks ago, and in that time it has come from the Ways and Means Committee, gone to the Senate, had a unanimous vote in the Senate, as I understand, and is back here for us to concur in a couple of amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I know of no objections to the bill, I will say.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to know if the gentleman from Ohio approves of the Senate amendment in reference to the importation by a citizen of the United States. If the object of the bill is to introduce and put into the hands of the farmers of the country these valuable imported animals, what difference does it make whether they are imported by a citizen of the United States or somebody else, so long as the object is to improve the breed of our stock?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the citizens of the United States will take care of the question of importing thoroughbred stock into this country, and I would give the benefit of this exception to our own citizens as against the citizens of a foreign country. I do not consider that the amendment is one which appeals to very broad statesmanship. I would not have voted to put it in in the first place, but I shall vote to concur rather than have defeated a bill which is of so much importance and which is demanded of Congress by such a large and responsible body of men as those who petition for its passage.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. ROBB. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In further answer, I will say that there is more confidence to be put, possibly, in the willingness and the assurance that our own citizens will not import diseased animals and will comply with the regulations of the Treasury than possibly might be the case if we turned open the field to all the world—not some of the world but all of the world.

Mr. ROBB. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. ROBB. Under this bill who is to determine whether these animals to be imported are hybrids or not?

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is a provision in the law, to which this is a mere amendment, that requires absolute proof of the character and pedigree of every one of these animals to be furnished by the shipper and importer.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I should like to ask the gentleman, and if necessary I will ask unanimous consent to extend his time an hour——

Mr. GROSVENOR. There will be no trouble about the time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Did the committee investigate far enough to determine whether this is a case in which the foreigner pays the tax or not? [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. With the gentleman from Illinois on the floor of the House, it was unnecessary to have any further investigation upon that question. [Laughter.]

If there is no further time to be used, I ask for a vote.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Ohio gets through I should like to take the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio reserves the balance of his time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to discuss the merits of this bill, but it is with a feeling of deep humiliation that I ask leave to speak to another matter that should deeply concern every patriot. It is with no partisan feeling that I refer to it, far from it; but having taken some pains to get at the facts as far as they could be ascertained on the outside, I feel impelled to call the attention of this House and of the country to the astounding fact that the mahogany sideboard presented to Mrs. Hayes while she was the mistress of the White House is now located in the Washington Brewery, the property of Mr. Joseph Frank. I saw it there myself yesterday. Sick as I was, I traced it down and identified it as well as it can be identified under the concealment maintained by those who ought to know.

I was informed yesterday by a friend where I might find it, and I called upon the very accommodating proprietor, or his representative, who seemed to be proud of his priceless acquisition. He had other articles bought at the sale, but this was the object of my search. It presents a splendid appearance, being a richly carved mahogany sideboard, perhaps 12 feet long and 3 feet deep and 9 feet high, surmounted by an eagle, carved. I found on the back the name "H. L. Frey, Cincinnati, Ohio," in two places, and this served to identify it later, as I will show.

I was informed by the young man in charge that Mr. Webb Hayes, the son of the late President, had called and recognized it as the sideboard presented to his mother, and that he had offered several hundred dollars to redeem it.

To made it further certain I sent the following telegram at my own expense.

Mr. MANN. Why didn't you use a frank?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not use franks or passes. I say I sent this dispatch:

FEBRUARY 28, 1903.

CINCINNATI ENQUIRER, Cincinnati, Ohio:

Located in a brewery to-day sideboard recently sold from White House, said to have been given to Mrs. President Hayes when an inhabitant of the White House. On sideboard is carved these words: "H. L. Frey, Cincinnati, Ohio." See him, wiring me description, cost, and names of donors. Was informed that Webb Hayes identified it as particular article in question.

JNO. W. GAINES.

To that I received this reply:

JNO. W. GAINES, Washington, D. C.:

Story is correct. See Enquirer of February 27, first column, last page.

ENQUIRER COMPANY,
J. R. McLEAN.

I have been informed that Hon. John R. McLean, out of respect, in part, to the women of Ohio who presented Mrs. Hayes this splendid piece of mahogany, called upon its present owner and offered him several hundred dollars in vain. Mr. Frank, of the brewery, paid for it at the auction sale of the discarded White House furnishings $85. He knew the value of his find, for I was shown there a clipping from the Post stating that Mrs. Bellamy Storer, the wife of the present minister to Austria, and Mrs. Governor William Taft, when they were young ladies and members of an "Ohio art association," presented it to Mrs. Hayes in recognition of her orders forbidding the serving of wine at the President's table.

Now, Mr. Speaker, going back to one of the old statutes, passed in 1857, we find it provided:

The steward of the President's household shall, under the direction of the President, have the charge and custody of, and be responsible for, the plate, the furniture, and other public property of the President's Mansion, and shall discharge other duties, as the President shall authorize him.

So it appears that plate is here recognized in the statute as something distinct from furniture—a distinct part of the "public property," because both words are used.

Now, I do not know whether the gentleman who took this property and sold it has done so ignorantly or negligently; but the fact is that he has sold these relics from the White House, some of them. What else he has sold we do not know. I have by resolution tried to find out, but you have laid it upon the table. My ulterior object was to have Congress immediately—to-day or to-morrow or Monday—appropriate enough money to buy all the relics that may have been sacrificed, and restore them to that hallowed place where they were placed by former Presidents and their wives, and by the distinguished daughters of some of those Presidents, and by other great and noble people who have honored the pages of our national history.

We can at least place them in the Smithsonian Institution. I would have those relics placed back, for the sake of preserving the sentiment that has made our Republic what it is and in deference to the wishes of a noble people, who love our heroes and heroines. This is not a mere question of destroying the contents of the White House, the physical contents, but it is a question of doing violence to our love of country, our patriotism, in thus permitting these old relics, which are as dear to the hearts of true patriotic American people as is their own lifeblood, to be carried within the shadow of the Capitol to the auction shop and sold from our sight forever.

Ah, Mr. Speaker, this occurrence indicates the terrible commercial spirit of the times. It evinces the lamentable decay of the proper spirit of citizenship. It is an awful revelation to us, that any man would have the temerity, unless compelled to do so, to take those relics which, no matter who put them in the White House, were White House property to a junk shop and sell them to anybody on God's green earth. My countrymen, I shudder at the thought, and so may you. We have enough ruins in our dear old land without making one of the White House and its relics.

Think for a moment of the enormity of such a thing; something never done before in the history of this country; and so particular has Congress been since 1857 in regard to these relics that it has ordered an inventory to be taken every year of the things in the White House and the things taken out of the White House, and their disposition. [Loud applause.]

The Thirty-ninth Congress, first session, on July 23, 1866, provided that—

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a steward of the President's household, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,000, and said steward shall have the custody of the house, and shall give a bond to the United States in such sum as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem sufficient, and to be approved by him, for the faithful discharge of his trust.

There can be no question in the world, sir, about it. I have not time to read the whole article, which I hold in my hand, but I will ask leave to put it in the RECORD. It is very respectful, and gives the history of it.

A MEMBER. Read it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then I will read it if you will give me more time. I will not stop to criticise. I want the relics back "at home." I do not want to reflect here on anybody. I want to get these articles back if Congress can be induced to appropriate money to restore them.

FATE OF SIDEBOARD PRESENTED TO MRS. HAYES BY TEMPERANCE ADVOCATES.

In a Washington beer garden stands the magnificent sideboard which the young ladies of Cincinnati made and presented to Mrs. Lucy Webb Hayes when she was mistress of the White House, as a token of their approval of her action in barring wine from the menu of the Presidential dinners. The sideboard which remained wineless during the Hayes Administration is now filled with siphons, bitters, decanters, and liquor bottles. On the top shelf there is ranged a row of fine old German beer steins.

The sideboard was put up at an auction of discarded White House furniture last week, and was knocked down to the proprietor of a beer garden for $85, which is much less than the material cost. The young ladies of Cincinnati who did the inlay work—Mrs. Bellamy Storer, wife of the present ambassador to Austria, and Mrs. William Taft, wife of the present civil governor of the Philippines, both of whom were then unmarried—were among those who contributed to the decorative work on the sideboard. After the gift was tendered Mrs. Hayes it was decided that it would be best for the President to accept on her behalf, and this was done. During several Administrations the sideboard was a conspicuous article of furniture in the White House, although it was by no means always as free from wines as it was for four years after its installation.

Soon after it was auctioned off Mr. John R. McLean, of Ohio, learned of its resting place in the beer garden. He offered $850 for the sideboard. It was refused. Col. Webb Hayes, son of President Hayes, has been in Washington for several days. He, too, went to the beer garden, but he came away without the sideboard when the proprietor informed him that if anyone desired to preserve the traditions of the sideboard from violation he could have it for $3,000.

Rightfully or wrongfully, a mirror was sold, a distinguished lawyer of this city told me. You know I have been sick for the last three or four days and could not be here. He told me that he bought a mirror from the White House and it had carved, as I remember, on one side Count Rochambeau's face and on another Lafayette's and on another Washington's and on another that of another distinguished person. It was sold as junk, and he bought it.

I turn here and read where Colonel Bingham, I suppose, sold candelabra:

Two candelabra, 5-foot gilded bronze, 12 branches in 2 horizontal planes of 6 each; 1 central projecting branch; tripod bases. Said to have been a present from General Patterson, of Philadelphia, to General Jackson.

I suppose this was sold as junk. This is said to have been presented, says this war report, by General Patterson, of Pennsylvania. Now, sir, I know of my own personal knowledge that the grandchildren of General Patterson, members of the D. A. R., whom I met here a few days ago, have been here in this city for a week canonizing heroes like General Patterson and Jackson, and talking about the things that they had done for you, for me, for our flag, for our country. [Applause.]

They supposed that these relics were in the White House, and yet when these children came here they found that they have been ruthlessly sold as junk. My God, think of it! Such a sentiment, Mr. Speaker, would drag angels down! A land without ruins is a land without memories, but a land without relics—what a land! What else, Mr. Speaker? I have not time to go over this whole affair. If Colonel Bingham sold this magnificent sideboard, if they have sold this mirror, if they have sold the things that General Patterson presented, my God, what did they not sell? What would they not sell? The question is, What have they sold? I do not know, neither do you.

Now, what has been done with these relics? No public report has been made. Of course a report has been made by the gentleman—the auctioneer—to the officer, Colonel Bingham, who had it in charge. We have none. We want and need it.

The following advertisement, taken from the Post, indicates that Colonel Bingham made this sale, and he should be able to enlighten Congress on all these matters:

AUCTION SALES.

Lot of furniture, chandeliers, billiard table, decoration marble and wood mantels, and a variety of other effects, lately in use at the White House, to be sold at public auction, within our rooms, 1407 G street (second floor), Wednesday, January 21, 1903, at 11 o'clock a. m. On public view Tuesday, January 20, 1903.

NOTE.—Some of the heavy or bulky articles, such as doors, sash, mantels, etc., will be sold at the Government storehouses, Fifteenth and C streets SW., on the same day, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. Terms cash.

By order of Col. Theo. S. Bingham, United States Army.

Now, gentlemen, here is a great list in the report of the "contents" of the White House. The law requires that list to be published. The law of 1857, the law of 1866, the law of 1872, and the law of 1900. But not one single solitary thing do we find indicating that they sold anything. I can find none. I have industriously looked for it. There has been no such report made; there is no report made of the proceeds. I do not mean to say that they have been wrongfully appropriated. But no report has been made of sales. I do not know anything about the money received for these relics.

The point I want to bring to your attention, and I hope to touch the heart of the members of this House and my fellow-countrymen, is the duty that devolves upon Congress to buy these relics before they are sent out of Washington. I understand, indeed, I have been told by the best authority, that it is the intention of some person who bought many of these White House effects to furnish a White House saloon at the St. Louis Exposition and equip it with the paraphernalia that he bought at the White House of our country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How much more time does the gentleman want?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want about five minutes more.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker, I deny that there has been any law authorizing the sale of those "relics" of the White House. I mean "relics," not furnishings that Congress buys and puts there. There is a steward under the law appointed to take care of the relics. This is an old law. In one of the reports here I find that General Bingham says that "furniture" will have to be sold.

Are these mirrors, is this historic sideboard, are these ancient candlesticks, and is a mahogany table bought "in 1800" and carried to the White House, as this report states—my God! my countrymen, is that "furniture?" Can you for a minute treat that as "furniture?"

Mr. LAMB. Do you believe in putting the prices up so that we can not buy them?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not know what the particular prices are. But I dare say any one who has bought one of these relics would not dispose of it for anything short of an enormous sum of money, and possibly lose his own life in defending it. And yet, Mr. Speaker, the White House, as it were, is "stripped" of these things. I do not know how many of these relics have been sold. What can we presume was done with the balance? Now, I say we should take care of these relics. They should not have been sold at all, and if there is any law for it I do not know it, and have not been able to find it. [Loud applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] whether he expects to close the debate with more than one speech?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; so far as I know.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care to use the balance of my time at all, unless——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Nobody is asking any time on this side; but I shall close the debate. I want to reply to some remarks that have been made.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will then reserve the balance of my time for the present.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, no; I will close the debate myself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand, then, that the gentleman intends to close the debate?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to the bill before the House. I think it a very meritorious measure. I think it is a bill that the Republican party should congratulate itself on bringing before the House. It is a bill in the interest, not only of the farming classes—the persons engaged in breeding animals for the promotion of the agricultural interests of this country—but in a small way——

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to know whether the gentleman from Alabama is in favor of this measure; and if so, by what right he has assumed to control the time in opposition and prevent those who are opposed to the bill from so expressing themselves. It looks to me as if it were a trick that ought not to be tolerated.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The point comes too late.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I have some objection to some features of the bill; but I intended to vote for it as a whole. If the gentleman desires any time in opposition to the bill, I will yield. [A pause.] Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent that twenty minutes may be allowed to the gentleman from Iowa for the purpose of opposing this bill, if he desires to do so.

Mr. SHATTUC. I object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Chair put my request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa be allowed twenty minutes in opposition to the pending bill.

Mr. SHATTUC. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio objects.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am willing to yield whatever time I may have to my genial friend from Iowa. [A pause.] Well, if I can not give away my time—if I can not get the gentleman from Iowa on the floor—then I will try to continue my remarks.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my congratulations to the Republican party for bringing this measure before the House are not only because it is in the interest of the agricultural classes of the country, but that it is doing something which a Republican Congress has not dared to do within the last eight years. It has brought in a free-trade bill. You are voting for free trade in reference to certain breeding cattle and stock. Of course it does not go very far; it does not reduce the revenues very much; it is only a very small drop in a very large bucket of a very large surplus. But in view of the fact that this Congress is rapidly coming to an end; in view of the fact that the Treasury is overburdened with millions of dollars wrung by taxation from the people of this country; in view of the fact that some of the great leaders of the Republican party in Congress now are earnestly contemplating a way by which they can loan the public funds to the banks of this country, in order that the bankers may loan back to the people of the United States their own money, wrung by taxation, charging rates of interest in order that the great banking monopolies may make blood money out of the people—in view of these facts, I think this hour is a good one for the Republican party to wake up to the fact that the people of the United States are entitled to some legislation looking toward a reduction of taxation; and although, as I say, this particular bill reduces the burden on the backs of the people only a very few thousand dollars, yet well may the Republican party be congratulated on the fact that at last, in the closing hours of Congress, they have brought in this small pittance in the right direction, and we might hope with this light breaking on us that, if an extra session of Congress were called—if the new Congress were called together here immediately after the expiration of this Congress—with this change of heart and change of sentiment on the part of the Republican side of the House, the people might at last get justice and that we might have a bill substantially reducing taxation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Tennessee has misconceived the character of this bill and that his speech is not germane to the subject-matter. This is a bill about stallions and not about sideboards. It is a bill in regard to animal boars and not human bores. [Laughter.] It is a bill that relates to rams and not corkscrews. It relates to male animals of fine breed and has nothing to do with bar fixtures that I know anything about. I do not believe the stories that are being circulated in regard to the looting of the White House.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the gentleman to say that this bill limits free importation to male animals?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No. We usually import all sorts of fine animals, but I would not talk about the other sex. [Laughter.]

I have the utmost confidence in the President of the United States. I believe he is a gentleman of sterling honesty and absolute purity of personal character; and the charges that have been made in regard to this matter are charges directly and necessarily against him, for it is impossible to believe that any such conditions of things could have taken place without his personal knowledge. I therefore pay no attention to those stories which have been coming through the newspapers. I should like to know, however, incidentally to the transaction, why the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was presenting Mrs. Hayes with bar fixtures. [Laughter.] I have heard a good deal about that. I had a very pleasant and intimate acquaintance with the White House family during the Administration of President Hayes, and I never saw any bar fixtures there nor, indeed, anything that would fit into a bar. I never have believed any of these stories.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], who is not in his seat, stated that he had been personally down and seen the sideboard, and he designated the place and the city. It is here in this city.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman kindly give me the name of the place?

Mr. PADGETT. It is at a brewery. The gentleman from Tennessee named it here. That brewery is situated in the city of Washington. Now, upon that statement, does the gentleman still say that he does not believe that the sideboard has been sold and that it is at that place?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, I have no doubt the brewery may have bought a sideboard. There are a great many sideboards.

Mr. PADGETT. But this one was sold by the officers at the White House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No doubt.

Mr. PADGETT. And it was the one which was presented to Mrs. Hayes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Ah, there comes the point. I do not believe that.

Mr. PADGETT. Well, if the gentleman will not believe the personal testimony, is he not willing to have it investigated?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] It comes under the rule of de minimis. I would like to have the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] pursue his investigations, because it seems to be very attractive to him, but I do not want to have anything to do with it.

Mr. PADGETT. It seems that the gentleman from Ohio is unwilling to have an official investigation of it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. And contents himself to say that he will not believe.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is exactly where I stand. [Laughter.]

Mr. PADGETT. I presume that the gentleman thinks it is much safer to say "I will not believe" than to take the results of an investigation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is a presumption of the gentleman, but it has no effect upon me.

Mr. PADGETT. I notice that the opinion of the gentleman can not be affected by anything that will expose his political party.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am profoundly affected now. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I am profoundly affected by a statesman who wants to follow back along the historical line of a lot of second-hand furniture to see if some of it has got misplaced. It is statesmanship of the most profound character! I do not believe that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union ever presented bar fixtures to Mrs. Hayes either. Mrs. Hayes was a temperance woman and did not drink and did not furnish anything to drink while she was in the White House.

Mr. PADGETT. A sideboard is not a bar fixture.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is it?

Mr. PADGETT. It is a dining room piece of furniture; but it is now lodged in a barroom.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It seems to fit in now. There is nothing in the story; but what has that got to do with a bill that relates to bulls and rams and boars? As to the bores, there is no doubt about them.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Tradition says that many years ago, when Madison was President, the east room of the White House being then in an unfinished condition, the mistress of the White House used to cause the weekly washing to be hung in the east room. My God, what has become of the clothesline! [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, Mr. Speaker, you see how widely these things distribute themselves when you get onto points of this character.

Great God, on what a slender thread hang everlasting things—

On a clothesline. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a simple proposition that has always been a part of the policy of the Republican party. I want to reply to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who seems to have got into confusion about this question of free trade and taxation. I am glad to see that he has got back into the Democratic party again since his speech in opposition to any changes in the tariff law that he made some weeks ago.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I never made any speech against changing the tariff. I have always been in favor of a reduction of the tariff.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Have you?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now and always.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, this proposition is in conformity with the whole policy of the Republican party. We do not tax any article that is produced in a foreign country and which we do not produce in this country, unless it is a luxury. Now, we believe that this fine stock may be found in Arabia, in Egypt, in France, and in other countries of the world, such stock as we are not producing in this country, and therefore we import it free of duty into this country. So that this is exactly in keeping with the Republican policy all along the line. It has been our policy, and the principle is now in the law of the country, and the bill which I am now in favor of and which the gentleman is in favor of only supplies a defect in the wording of the original proposition in the Senate bill.

Mr. Speaker, I desire a vote upon the question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and taking the bill H. R. 16656 from the Speaker's table and concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the same.

The question being taken,

Mr. UNDERWOOD demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 234, nay 1, answered "present" 3, not voting 113; as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3560), an act to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, and amended April 1, 1896.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 16775) establishing United States courts at Duncan, Maryetta, and Comanche, Ind. T.

UTICA, N. Y., A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. PAYNE, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the bill (H. R. 15924) constituting Utica, N. Y., a port of delivery; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

JUNEAU, ALASKA, A CUSTOMS COLLECTION DISTRICT.

Mr. DALZELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the bill (H. R. 17330) providing for the removal of the port of entry in the customs collection district of Alaska from Sitka, Alaska, to Juneau, Alaska; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNTS OF OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following bill:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5437) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of officers of the Army.

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, directed, in the settlement of the accounts of disbursing officers of the War Department, arising between the 21st day of April, 1898, from which date war with Spain is declared to have existed, and the 8th day of July, 1901, inclusive, the date on which the last organization of the Volunteer Army was mustered out of the service of the United States, to allow such credits for payments and for losses of funds, vouchers, and property as may be recommended under authority of the Secretary of War by the heads of the military bureaus to which such accounts respectively pertain.

SEC. 2. That the accounts of military officers, whether of the line or staff, for Government property charged to them, shall be closed by the proper accounting officers whenever in the judgment of the Secretary of War it will be for the interest of the United States to do so: Provided, That such accounts originated subsequent to April 21, 1898, and prior to the 9th day of July, 1901: Provided further, That no settlement shall be made by the officers of the Treasury under this act of the accounts of any officer whose combined responsibility for public money and Government property shall exceed the sum of $5,000, and only of such officers of the Army in whose accounts there is no apparent fraud against the United States: And provided further, That this act shall remain in force for two years from and after its passage, and no longer.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. HAY. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered, to which request the gentleman from Virginia objects. The Chair will appoint to tell the House the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The House divided; and tellers reported—ayes 144, noes 0.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HAY. I presume I have twenty minutes.

Mr. HULL. I will yield the gentleman twenty minutes if he desires it now, reserving twenty minutes if necessary.

Mr. HAY. I suggest that the gentleman had better explain the bill.

Mr. HULL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to giving an explanation. The bill simply provides for permitting the War Department to adjust the accounts of officers of the Army. This includes volunteer quartermasters, commissaries, and paymasters whose accounts are held up in the Treasury Department on technical grounds. No cases of fraud are alleged—no doubt as to the honesty of the officers that are to be considered under the provisions of this bill. The amount is limited and small in each case. There are volunteer quartermasters, commissaries, and paymasters and disbursing officers whose accounts the War Department is unable to adjust because of a ruling of the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What are the technical objections that the Treasury Department urges?

Mr. HULL. The objections are various, under the different bureaus. If anything is destroyed by fire, it does not relieve the officer. If anything has been stolen, it does not relieve the officer. If he should pay off a regiment at San Francisco, and it is afterwards found there is a small discrepancy in the accounts, the paymaster is liable for it. He can not delay the paying off of the troops and wait and get the Comptroller's decisions on these matters. The Dockery bill allows, in time of peace, the disbursing officers to hold up accounts and get an opinion of the Comptroller before paying. If this man's regiment is being paid off at San Francisco and a question comes up affecting a few hundred dollars which he has to refer to the War Department, he is compelled to go on with the paying off of his regiment, as he can not hold the regiment until he can get an opinion from the Comptroller. Decisions have been had from the Comptroller's office on 150 different questions, but it is impossible to have an opinion which would apply to the whole, as they follow varying lines.

And this follows just the same line as the cases that came to Congress following the close of the civil war, and it will be the same case with the paymasters and other officers in any other war that we may have in the future. There is not a paymaster that is not affected by it. Yet there is no charge of wrongdoing by any of these officers.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. How does this affect the pay of the civil assistant surgeons of the Army?

Mr. HULL. It does not involve the assistant surgeon. He is under contract. If there is any error in his accounts it affects the paymaster who paid him, for the assistant surgeon is out of the service.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. As I understand the law, the surgeon is entitled to the rank of captain, and if he got paid as an assistant surgeon, what as to his claim against the Government?

Mr. HULL. It will not affect that at all. This affects the paymaster. I have here a brief statement from some of the disbursing officers which I will include in my remarks:

The sole intention of S. 5437 is to relieve disbursing officers of disallowances in expenditures of public moneys made:
In good faith.
Under orders of competent superior authority.
Under a fair interpretation of legislation that was new between April 21, 1898, and July 8, 1901, but which, long subsequent to payments, was differently construed by the Comptroller.
Through lack of proper facilities in the field for the necessary orderly calculation of amounts due on pay accounts of officers, discharged men, and muster rolls.
Through misleading and erroneous statements on accounts of volunteer officers and men, which could not be corrected, and omissions thereon which could not be supplied by responsible officers prior to muster out.
Because of the unusual pressure and confusion of business, both in the field and in offices, attendant upon a state of war.
Because of the impracticability of paymasters obtaining accurate travel pay distances for settlement of travel pay allowances of discharged officers and enlisted men, without delaying payments and entailing hardships.
Because the separation from regimental and company records of many organizations which were precipitately embarked for hostilities in Cuba required paymasters to either decline payment or accept for their guidance the statements and certificates of officers, made in good faith, but which were subsequently shown to be erroneous.
So far as this office is concerned, it is not the intention of the Paymaster-General to recommend removal of suspensions under this act in any case where the paymaster had before him information for correct payments, or where such relief is not considered just and reasonable.

PAYMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE, February 11, 1903.

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 11, 1903.

The class of cases affected by Senate bill No. 5437, so far as relates to the Quartermaster's Department, are for losses of public funds by theft or fire, or while in transit; loss of vouchers or other papers necessary for the completion of an account; overpayments to creditors which can not be recovered, and made in good faith by the disbursing officer; irregular payments made under orders of superior authority and contrary to a subsequent interpretation of law or regulations. It is not intended that any cases shall receive relief under this act where the disbursing officer shall have been guilty of negligence or carelessness in handling or accounting for public funds.

CHAUNCEY B. BAKER,
Captain and Quartermaster, United States Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSARY-GENERAL,
Washington, February 11, 1903.

SIR: The class of accounts in this office that can be adjusted under S. 5437 includes losses by theft, fire, storm, and flood.

There are also cases where officers, although not at fault, are prevented by unavoidable conditions from furnishing the necessary documentary evidence to relieve them from responsibility.

Very respectfully,

J. F. WESTON,
Commissary-General.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE MILITARY COMMITTEE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The object of the measure is to provide for little accounts of this kind which have accumulated in the payment of the different regiments, and which have arisen from loss of supplies by fire or theft.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I will try to acquaint members on this side of the House with the features of this bill.

The Committee on Military Affairs—

I am reading from the report—

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5437) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of officers of the Army, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

This act passed the Senate on February 7, 1903.

As a very full report was made on this act in the Senate by Senator COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, said report is herewith submitted and made a part hereof.

The passage of this bill has been recommended by the Commissary-General, the Paymaster-General, the Surgeon-General, the Chief of Engineers, the Chief of Ordnance, the Chief of the Signal Corps, and the Secretary of War.

This bill is almost identical in language—

says Senator COCKRELL in his report—with the act of June 23, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the settlement of accounts of officers of the Army and Navy," the difference being that the bill under consideration refers only to the Army and does not embrace the Navy It seems simply a measure of justice and right, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the amendment recommended by the Commissary-General.

The bill was accordingly passed.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Has the gentleman read the "very full report" which the House committee states was made in the Senate?

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir. This is our report, supplemented by the Senate report.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. What do the Quartermaster-General and the Paymaster-General have to say about the bill?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to read the letter of the Commissary-General, which I will proceed to do:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Washington, May 5, 1902.

Respectfully returned (through the Paymaster-General of the Army) to the honorable the Secretary of War.

This bill, though limited to disbursing officers of the War Department, has evidently been drawn on the lines of the act entitled "An act to authorize the settlement of the accounts of officers of the Army and Navy," approved June 23, 1870 (16 Stat. L., 166), which was limited in duration to two years, but which was extended for an additional two years by act of June 7, 1872 (17 Stat. L., 262), and for a further term of two years by act of June 18, 1874 (18 Stat. L., 79). It is to be observed, however, that it makes relief by the accounting officers mandatory when recommended by the heads of military bureaus of the War Department in cases covered by the bill.

In order to make perspicuous the meaning of the second proviso of the second section of the bill, I recommend that in place of the word "which," in the tenth line of that section, there be inserted the words "of the accounts of any officer whose combined responsibility for public money and Government property."

With this amendment I recommend the bill for favorable consideration.

J. F. WESTON, Commissary-General.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SMITH], in order that he may read the letter of the Acting Paymaster-General.

[Mr. SMITH of Kentucky addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 224, nays 0, answered "present" 5, not voting 122; as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16970) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments a bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. 17046) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 17046, the fortifications appropriation bill, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

During the reading,

Mr. UNDERWOOD said: Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point that that can not be done under the rule, and the further point that it is obviously dilatory.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Under what rule?

Mr. PAYNE. Under the special rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is this a House bill with Senate amendments?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood it was a conference report. I misunderstood what it was.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the point of order and the Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House disagree to said amendments en bloc and ask a conference with the Senate?

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD demanded a division.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 220, nays 1, answered "present" 8, not voting 122; as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
The SPEAKER (having resumed the chair) announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. HEMENWAY, Mr. LITTAUER, and Mr. MCRAE.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:
On February 27, 1903:
H. R. 16. An act to provide for the erection at Washington, D. C., of statutes to the memory of Brig. Gen. Count Pulaski and Maj. Gen. Baron von Steuben, of the Continental Army; and
H. R. 17192. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to the city of Buffalo, Wyo., for certain tracts of land.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I call up a conference report.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up conference report on the Military Academy appropriation bill, which will be read by the Clerk.
Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the statement only be read in lieu of the report.
Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee objected.
The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will read both the report and the statement.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We desire to raise the question of consideration. I want to raise it now or after the reading, which ever the Chair decides is proper.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report and the statement now.
The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16970) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:
That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 7, 13, and 14.
That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, and agree to the same.
Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$34,165."

J. A. T. HULL,
RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
Managers on the part of the House.
F. E. WARREN,
R. A. ALGER,
E. W. PETTUS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The conferees on the part of the House on H. R. 16970 submit the following report:
Amendment No. 1 makes an addition to the corps of cadets now authorized by law of one cadet from Porto Rico. The House recedes.
Amendment No. 2 increases the pay of the librarian at the Military Academy by $500 a year, and the Senate recedes.
Amendment No. 3 is the total for civilian employees, and the Senate recedes.
Amendment No. 4 is for cleaning public buildings (not quarters), and the House recedes.
Amendments Nos. 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, and 11 are verbal changes in regard to the band library, and the House recedes.
Amendment No. 7 relates to music folios, and the Senate recedes.
Amendment No. 12 relates to an additional amount of $219 for the purchase of a boiler for the cadet laundry, and the House recedes, being merely a verbal change from the House provision.
Amendment No. 13 makes an appropriation for the replacing of crockery used in the cadet mess, and the Senate recedes.
Amendment No. 14 relates to worn-out tablecloths, napkins, etc., and the Senate recedes.
Amendment No. 15 relates to the total for incidental expenses, and the Senate recedes.
Amendments Nos. 16 and 17 are verbal changes in the appropriation for wiring hospital, and the House recedes.
Amendment No. 18 makes the appropriation for wagon road from the railroad station immediately available, and the House recedes.
Amendment No. 19 relates to appropriation for gas and electric-light fixtures for the new building for officers' mess and quarters, and the House recedes.
Amendment No. 20 is for relaying the terrace platform, and the House recedes.
Amendment No. 21 relates only to the total for buildings and grounds.
Amendment No. 22 corrects an error in the act to increase the efficiency of the Army, which act made the Chief of Artillery a brigadier-general and reduced the number of other brigadier-generals to 14, whereas 15 are required to command the brigades made by the 45 regiments of cavalry and artillery. This amendment restores the number required for that purpose and reduces the colonels of artillery by one. The House recedes.

J. A. T. HULL,
RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I raise the question of consideration.
Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that that is dilatory at this stage in the proceedings of the session.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee raises the question of consideration; the gentleman from New York makes the point of order that that is a dilatory motion. The right to raise the question of consideration is not one given by the Constitution, but by the rules of the House. The rules of the House also provide that dilatory motions shall not be entertained by the Speaker. Therefore that motion is governed by the dilatory rule. It is perfectly plain to the Chair, and possibly to the gentleman making the motion, that this is a dilatory motion. At least the Chair is perfectly conscientious in so holding, and sustains the point of order.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. From that I respectfully appeal.
The SPEAKER. The Chair classes that with its mate—that it is dilatory, and declines to entertain the appeal. [Applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I concede under the rules that it is in the power of the Chair.
Mr. HULL. There has been but very little real change in the bill as it passed the House. While the gentleman who represented the minority in conference was absent, the gentleman from Virginia, a member of the Military Committee, and the gentleman from Tennessee, also a member of the Military Committee——
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I rise to a point of order.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The point of order is that under the rule debate is out of order.
The SPEAKER. It is impossible to hear the gentleman. The gentleman from Mississippi will state his point of order.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The point of order is that the gentleman is out of order in discussing or debating the matter now before the House.
The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then I make the point of order that this debate is dilatory.
The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman from Iowa will proceed.
Mr. HULL. As I was just saying, the reason that the report was not signed by all the members of the conference committee is because the gentleman from New York appointed to represent the minority on the conference was absent from the city. Two members of the minority were present and participated in the conference, and I think I am violating no rule in saying that the agreement reached was satisfactory to them and all the members on the conference. Mr. Speaker, there is no part of this, in my judgment, that needs explanation. I do not think that anybody desires one, and if there is, I will be glad to answer any question.
Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?
Mr. HULL. I do for a question.
Mr. SLAYDEN. With no desire to delay the proceedings of the House at all, but in perfect sincerity, I would like to know the changes that have been made in the bill since it left the House and went to the Senate and what amendments put on the bill by the Senate have been agreed to by the conferees.
Mr. HULL. The first amendment added a cadet for Porto Rico and provided that he should be a native. The House has agreed to that. It makes an additional cadet at West Point, to be appointed by the President, for Porto Rico. Another amendment disagreed to was to increase the salary of the librarian from $2,500 to $3,000. That amendment the Senate receded from and left the salary the same as the House passed it—at $2,500.
Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand the gentleman. Do I understand that the salary of the librarian has been raised to $3,000?
Mr. HULL. I say that was disagreed to by the House, and the Senate receded, leaving the salary of the librarian the same as now fixed by law. The item for electrical fixtures for the new building for officers' mess and quarters should have been put upon the deficiency bill, but it was supposed that it had passed the Senate, and it could not be placed there, so it was allowed to remain here. The proposition for relaying the terrace platform at memorial hall was agreed to by the House conferees. It was understood by the Military Committee of the House when that question was before us that that would be put in the bill in the Senate, for the reason that they did not have sufficient estimates when before the House committee to know what ought to be given, and it was left over for the Senate to take that up. So that was agreed to.

The only amendment affecting in any way legislation in the bill that was allowed to remain is that part in regard to the amendment to the act increasing the efficiency of the Army. When that bill passed we made the Chief of Artillery a brigadier-general and reduced the number of brigadiers to 14. The Secretary of War sends a letter calling attention to the fact that when we passed the bill for the organization of the Army we provided there should be a Chief of Artillery with the rank of colonel—this in addition to the 13 colonels. And then we passed a provision making the Chief of Artillery a brigadier-general, and we cut down the brigadier-generals to 14, complying with the organization prescribed by law. We by this amendment increase the brigadier-generals to 15, so as to provide for the number required by law to command the brigades, and reduce the colonels of artillery to 13 to comply with the organization provided by law for the Artillery Corps.

There are 45 regiments, and it requires 15 brigadier-generals to command them, and we do it because the militia bill provides that the militia must be organized as the Regular Army, and it makes an harmonious organization.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman takes his seat, I would ask if he will not yield us three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; I could not do that.

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, then, yield half an hour.

Mr. HULL. I am satisfied that under any other conditions the gentleman would not want the time.

Mr. HAY. I want it now, under these conditions.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he intends to close without granting this side any time?

Mr. HULL. Yes. You do not want any time except to kill time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion?

Mr. HULL. No; I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call for a division.

Mr. HULL. Well, Mr. Speaker, we may as well have the yeas and nays. I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 78, answered "present" 10, not voting 120; as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. MERCER. I move to suspend the rules and pass, with the amendments of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, Senate bill 7414.

Mr. MANN and Mr. UNDERWOOD demanded a second on the motion.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must not be impatient. The Chair has not stated the motion. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] moves to suspend the rules and pass, with the amendments of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the bill which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 7414) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demand a second on this motion.

The SPEAKER. The demand is made prematurely. The gentleman knows that the bill must first be reported.

The bill, with the amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to enable the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to give effect to and execute the provisions of existing legislation authorizing the purchase of sites and the erection thereon of public buildings in the several cities hereinafter enumerated, the limit of cost heretofore fixed by Congress therefor be, and the same is hereby, increased, respectively, as follows, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the completion of each of said buildings within its respective limit of cost, including site, hereby fixed:

SEC. 6. That section 7 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902, be amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell the old custom-house building and the site thereof, at the corner of Ninth and Walnut streets, in the city of Kansas City, State of Missouri, at public or private sale, at such time and on such terms as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States, but at not less than $260,000, to execute a quit-claim deed to the purchaser thereof, and to apply the proceeds of the sale of said property toward the enlargement and improvement of the post-office and court-house building in said city, the total cost of which enlargement and improvement, complete in all respects, shall not exceed the sum of $400,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts to the full limit of cost for such extension and improvement hereby fixed, subject to future appropriations to be made by Congress."

SEC. 7. That so much of the provisions of section 1 of the Act of Congress entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902, as relates to the United States post-office and court-house at Lincoln, Nebr., be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed, upon lands now belonging to the United States, adjacent to the United States post-office and court-house at Lincoln, Nebr., a suitable building, with fireproof vaults and elevators therein, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, customs service, and other Government offices in said city, at a total cost, including said vaults, elevators, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, of not to exceed the sum of $350,000: Provided, That the building when completed shall be unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet on all sides, including streets and alleys.

"When said new building is completed and occupied the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to sell to the city of Lincoln, Nebr., to be used for municipal purposes only, the present United States post-office and court-house building in Lincoln, Nebr., together with such portion of the site on which the same is located as may not be needed by the United States, but not exceeding the south 85 feet extending east and west along the south side of the block or square of ground between Ninth and Tenth streets in said city, at such time and upon such terms as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States, and at a price not less than $50,000: Provided, That the net proceeds of such sale shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt derived from the sale of public property: Provided further, That when the city of Lincoln, Nebr., ceases to use the building and site above described for municipal purposes the same shall revert to the possession and ownership of the United States Government."

SEC. 8. That section 18 of public act numbered 146, approved June 6, 1902, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 18. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to dispose of the present post-office and custom-house building in the city of Burlington, State of Vermont, on the best terms obtainable, and to cause to be erected on the site thereof a suitable, commodious, fireproof building for the accommodation of all the branches of the Federal service in said city, at a total cost, including heating and ventilating apparatus, fireproof vaults, elevators, and approaches, of not to exceed $200,000; and for the purpose of providing suitable quarters and accommodations for the use of the various branches of the public service in said city, pending the removal of the present Federal building, and the erection and completion of the new building hereinbefore authorized, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed, ready for occupancy, a temporary building for said purposes, on the south 80 feet of the Federal building site in said city, at a total cost for said temporary building of not to exceed $10,000, including the expense of moving the various branches of the public service into said temporary building, said amount being additional to the limit of cost hereby fixed for the erection of the permanent building hereinbefore authorized. That after the completion and occupancy of the new permanent building hereinbefore authorized the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell, at such time and upon such terms as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States, said temporary building, together with the strip of land on which the same is situated, not to exceed 80 feet in width on Church street, with a depth of not to exceed 254 feet 6 inches, and to deposit the proceeds in the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt."

SEC. 9. That so much of the provisions of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902, as relates to the United States post office, court-house, and custom-house at Richmond, Va., be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"United States post-office, court-house, and custom-house at Richmond, Va., from $516,628.08 to $591,628.08; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized in his discretion to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the Shafer property adjoining the present post-office site in Richmond, Va., having a frontage of 60 feet on Main and Bank streets and a depth of 160 feet from Main to Bank streets, containing about 9,600 square feet, within a limit of cost of $75,000, hereby fixed, unless a higher value, not exceeding $202,350, be fixed in the condemnation proceedings hereinbefore authorized."

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, additional ground to the south of the present site of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including heating and ventilating apparatus and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the laundry and stable of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized to erect upon the site now occupied by the laundry and stable buildings of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, situated to the west of the main building, an addition to the present Bureau of Engraving and Printing building consisting of two stories and basement, approximately, 47 feet in width by 248 in length, for the use and accommodation of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The total limit of cost for additional ground and buildings herein mentioned, including removal of laundry and stable of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, shall not exceed the sum of $215,000.

SEC. 11. That so much of the provisions of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902, as relates to the United States post-office, court-house, and custom-house at Atlanta, Ga., be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, in the city of Atlanta, Ga., a site upon which to erect a United States post-office, custom-house, and court-house building, said site to consist of an entire block or square of ground, bounded on each side by a street, the limit of cost of site to be $200,000."

SEC. 12. That section 8 of the act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and to contract for the erection and completion thereon of a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office in the city of St. Louis and State of Missouri, the cost of said site and building not to exceed $700,000: Provided, That the site selected shall consist of an area of not less than 75,000 square feet, and shall be located as near as possible to the union railway station in said city."

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to secure, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the entire square No. 324 in the city of Washington, D. C., bounded by C street on the north, by Eleventh street on the east, by Twelfth street on the west, and Government reservation on the south, and to reserve the said square as a site for an addition to the post-office building in said city, including space for the mail-bag repair shop.

SEC. 14. That the law (Public, No. 146) entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public puildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902, be amended so as to transpose the provision for a United States post-office at Oklahoma City, Okla., from section 2 to section 3 of said act.

SEC. 15. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase or cause to be taken for public use, by condemnation or otherwise, as a site for a hall of records, the whole of the land embraced in square 143 in the city of Washington, D. C., containing 157,711.35 square feet of ground, having a frontage of 402.08 feet on F street, the same on E street, and 392-½ feet frontage on Nineteenth street, and the same on Eighteenth street, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress a full statement showing size and public cost of building to be erected upon said square as a hall of records.

SEC. 16. That the law (Public, No. 146) entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902, be amended so as to transpose the provisions for a United States post-office at Owosso, Mich., and Louisiana, Mo., from section 3 to section 4 of said act; and the limit of cost for site and building in each of said cities is hereby increased from $35,000 to $40,000: Provided, That the limit of cost of site in each of said cities shall be $5,000.

SEC. 17. That section 14 of Public act No. 146, approved June 6, 1902, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a suitable site in the city of Toledo and State of Ohio upon which to erect a building for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other governmental offices in said city: Provided, That the site selected shall consist of an entire block or square of ground, bounded on each side by a street, and shall consist in area of not less than 70 square feet, within a limit of cost of $300,000, hereby fixed: And provided further, That if the Secretary of the Treasury shall be unable to obtain a site as above described, then and in that case he is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a tract of land fronting on St. Clair street, immediately adjoining the present post-office site, having an area of 14,400 square feet, said tract of land being 120 feet square, within a limit of cost of $32,000, hereby fixed. When the Secretary of the Treasury has acquired either an entire block of ground or the tract of land adjoining the present site, as herein provided, he shall make a report to Congress, stating the location, dimensions, and cost of the land so acquired, and recommend to Congress the character and size of building that should be erected thereon and submit an estimate of the cost of said building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches."

SEC. 18. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall require all owners or agents of sites in each city mentioned in this act, where sites or additions to sites are to be purchased, to submit offers of sale in writing, and no payment shall be made to any owner or agent of the property involved on account of the land proposed to be sold or purchased and no plans shall be drawn or money expended for a building upon a donated site until a written opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States shall be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury in favor of the validity of the title of the land agreed to be purchased or donated. And in case a site or addition to a site acquired under the provisions of this act contains a building or buildings the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to rent until their removal becomes necessary such of said buildings as he may deem desirable at a fair rental value, the proceeds thereof to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and a report of the proceedings to be submitted to Congress annually: Provided, That each site selected under the provisions of this act shall contain not less than 15,000 square feet of ground space, and shall be bounded upon at least two sides by streets.

SEC. 19. That if condemnation proceedings are necessary to acquire land within the District of Columbia, such proceedings shall be in the manner prescribed for providing a site for an addition to the Government Printing Office in so much of the act approved July 1, 1898, as is set forth on pages 648 and 649 of volume 30 of the United States Statutes at Large.

SEC. 20. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. MANN demanded a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. MERCER. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. MANN. It is very obvious that if I do not object to that proposition nobody else will, so I object.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. MERCER and Mr. MANN.

Mr. RODEY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, for leave to amend the bill.

The SPEAKER. The House is proceeding under another order. The tellers will take their places.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 167, noes 11.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] to control the time in favor of the bill and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in opposition.

[Mr. MERCER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized.

Mr. MANN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have no expectation of throwing any impediment in the way of the passage of this bill. It is going to pass. The boys are all provided for.

Several MEMBERS. Not all.

Mr. HEPBURN. But I do want to make a suggestion that I think is timely; not that I think it will affect this legislation today, but it may affect the minds of some gentlemen, so that on a future occasion we may adopt a better plan than that figured out in this bill. And right here, while I am passing, I want to say that I think the city of Chicago has been pretty well cared for. Within the last thirty years the Government erected a building there that cost four and one-half million dollars. That building was torn down because it was said to be unsuitable for a great city like Chicago. All sorts of lies were told about the unsafety of this building.

Commission after commission was fixed up and dragooned into making uncanny reports, and at last it was condemned; but when it was sought to be taken down they had to blow it down with dynamite. There never was a better building, probably, in the city of Chicago than this one that was ruthlessly destroyed in order to make way for this one that we are now erecting. Now, we have appropriated $4,000,000 to build that building on a $6,000,000 lot, and here is the proposition to add, perhaps, a million dollars more, for what? For interior decoration. That is what it is for, I am told, for the interior decoration of this $4,000,000 building. And I warn you, gentlemen, that before we get through with it another million dollars will be necessary.

Now, I think a better plan than that could be adopted. It would be very much better to take $3,000,000—a million and a half in a lot and a million and a half in a building—to erect a modern business building such as they are in the habit of building in Chicago. That would give us nearly an acre more of floor space than this one will give after it is completed. That is what we ought to do. Then we would save $9,000,000. With that $9,000,000 I would build 900 $10,000 buildings for third and second class post-offices all over the United States. [Applause.] That would be a practical and sensible way to do. We expended, perhaps, $20,000,000 a year or two ago. Here are $6,000,000 more. If we would adopt this plan, build no extravagant, expensive buildings for the purpose of illustrating art—if we are going to preserve art and spend money for art, let us do it in our capital city—and build business buildings for the other cities of the United States, we should do better than we are doing now.

If I had the opportunity to do it I would move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with instructions to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and substitute therefor provisions requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to erect in each city or town in which there is a third or second class post-office, and where the citizens donate to the United States a site free of cost, a building for the use of the post-office at a cost not to exceed $10,000, said committee to report forthwith.

Now, that is the course I would pursue. We might have to build some much larger buildings, but there are 3,000 post-offices in the United States where a building costing $5,000 or $10,000 would meet every demand—probably there are 4,000. There are now about 5,000 first, second, and third class offices. If we built a $10,000 building for each of the 4,000 second and third class offices it would cost only twice as much as the legislation of last year authorized. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, under the order just made by the House, those of us who would be glad to offer amendments to the bill are cut off. This bill, as it passed the Senate, increased the limit of cost for the public building at Jacksonville, Fla., $200,000. The House committee have proposed an amendment, and under the rule adopted that amendment will go with the bill, cutting out that appropriation. I simply want to say that that was unjust, and the item ought not to have been cut out of the Senate bill by the House committee.

The public building in Jacksonville is far too small to accommodate present demands. The city has grown; its business has grown; the uses for this building have multiplied; and it was wrong and improper for that item to have been stricken out. It is wrong that those of us who would be glad to offer amendments to the bill are cut off by the order just made by the House. Reports made by the officials and occupants of the present building show its insufficiency and inadequacy. The Treasury Department recommends an increase in its size, and in justice to the people of that enterprising and growing city I enter my protest against this bill. Only two minutes have been given me to enter this protest. If I had had time I wanted to say something, too, for the important South Atlantic port of Fernandina, where there ought to be a public building, but I shall be heard on that proposition in the future.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman from Nebraska to occupy some of his time—or will he occupy more except to close? [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. MERCER. I would prefer the gentleman to use his time now.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing, but I prefer not to have three or four speeches made after I conclude.

Mr. MERCER. What will be said will be in explanation; and I do not think it will be an argument against what the gentleman from Illinois has said.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it certainly is not with any degree of pleasure that I oppose this bill. My opposition to the bill might be considered as a criticism upon the action of my colleagues from Chicago, who favor the bill; but no one would be more loth to criticise their conduct than myself. I recognize the fact that they are as sincere, as earnest, and as honest as I can claim to be. I doubt, also, whether my opposition to the bill will meet with the approval of most of my constituents, because it has come to that pass in the country—probably always was—that it is considered legitimate for the representatives of a particular locality to get out of the public Treasury all the money they possibly can for the benefit of, or expenditure in, their particular locality. I do not expect that my opposition to the bill will have any effect in the House upon its passage. Forty-one States are interested in the passage of this bill. Appropriations for public buildings are authorized by this bill in 41 different States, and most of the representatives of those States have joined in a combination to secure the passage of the bill.

The pork packers of Chicago have proposed to organize one great company to control the packing industry, but their combination will never be as powerful and as monopolistic as the present combination in this House to distribute the "pork" contained in this barrel.

My Democratic friends, who so loudly inveigh against the combination of the Chicago pork packers, are very willing and anxious to join in the combination which gives them their share of the different brand of pork contained in this bill. Many of the items in the pending bill would fail to receive favorable consideration by this House if it were not that this combination exists here to pass the entire bill as it stands with the amendments proposed by the Public Buildings Committee.

I propose, Mr. Speaker, to address myself particularly to the question of the $790,000 increase for the Chicago post-office. I would like to see in my own city the most magnificent structure which can be or could be erected by the National Government. But I feel, in the conscientious discharge of my duty, I ought to state to the House some facts which have come to my notice.

I have no personal feeling in what I say. I have no personal acquaintance with any of the contractors or bidders on the Chicago building. I have had no personal dispute or quarrel in any way with any of the officers or contractors engaged on this building. I have no personal motive in opposing the proposed appropriation. Because there had been unseemly delay in the construction of the Chicago building I felt it my duty to make some investigation of the causes of delay, and in that investigation I came to know certain facts which caused me to look further into the matter.

I do not believe from my investigation that there is any necessity for a present increase of cost for the Chicago building. I do believe that under the present limit of cost the building might receive the very best finish which has been proposed by anyone.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] has stated here that the reason for increasing the limit of cost was because the price of materials and construction has increased in the country. The limit of cost of the Chicago building was first fixed at $4,000,000, exclusive of the ground. It is proposed by this bill to increase the limit of cost to $4,790,000.

In his testimony last March before the Committee on Appropriations the special architect for the Chicago building stated that there was no increase of cost demanded for this building on account of any increase in the cost of materials or construction. He said:

> The big contract for the general construction was probably let at the cheapest time that has been since the time the building was talked of. That was in 1898, and I do not think that steel has been as cheap as it was then, and steel is a very large item. I know granite has not, before or since. In other words, there was a peculiarly fortunate time when that contract was let.

This statement was made in regard to the contract given to Mr. John Peirce for the exterior or superstructure. And then notice what the architect said further at the same time in reference to the interior work:

> As to the remainder of the building, it can be let now just exactly as cheap as it ever could have been.

The excuse, therefore, that there has been an increase in the cost of materials and construction is shown to be false by the testimony of the special architect himself. Remember that the architect of the Chicago building is not the regular Government Architect. There is a special architect employed upon the building on entirely different terms from those of the Government Architect's office.

Why, then, is an increase asked for? I will tell you. It is a dishonest request. There is no need for an increase of money. It is a collusion between the special architect and the man to whom the contract has been let.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me an inquiry?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to know what will be the additional compensation of the architect who recommends this new appropriation if it should be granted?

Mr. MANN. So far as the architect's fees are concerned, there will be no increase. The architect is paid $4,500 a year, and the only increase he would receive in that way would be by the extension of time required. How much he may receive otherwise I can not tell, but I have no doubt that the amount will be very large indeed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MANN. My time is very limited.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is along the line of the gentleman's argument. I understood him to say that the architect will receive an additional sum to the amount of his salary. Now, does he receive that lawfully?

Mr. MANN. He would not receive it lawfully.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How, then, could he receive it? I do not understand.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I stated that there was in my opinion collusion between the special architect and the man who now has the contract, and if I can have a few minutes without interruption I think I can give the reason for my belief.

Bids were received for the interior work and completion of this building in September last. The lowest bidder was Mr. John Peirce, who bid on the work provided for by the specifications $1,478,500. The next lowest bidder at that time was about $400,000 above the bid of Mr. Peirce. Mr. Peirce was the contractor for the exterior or superstructure. When these bids were received, the first intention was to accept the bid of Mr. Peirce for the interior work on the ground that he was the lowest bidder. There was money enough then available under the original limit of cost to have accepted this bid.

In a written statement dated March 8 last, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of this House, the special architect on this building stated that after the completion of the superstructure there would remain out of the original limit of cost $1,721,181.91 available to complete the building. There were four sets of bids advertised for and received last fall, in order to complete the Chicago building in every respect. One was for the heating system, one for drainage, plumbing, and gas fitting, one for electric work and wiring, and the other was for interior work and completion. The contract for the heating system has been let at $99,346; the contract for drainage, plumbing, and gas fitting has been let at $62,590; the contract for electric work and wiring has been let at $69,838; and if the bid of Mr. Peirce for interior work and completion of the building at $1,478,500 had been accepted, this would have made a total cost of $1,710,274, for which, according to the written statement of the special architect in March last, there was available $1,721,181.91, besides the large sum of penalties due from Peirce for delay.

But, Mr. Speaker, the Peirce bid for the completion of the building was about $400,000 lower than the next lowest bid; and his bid was rejected on the recommendation of the special architect made to the Secretary of the Treasury, and on the ground that there was not money enough within the limit of cost of $4,000,000 to finish the building. The special architect thereupon readvertised for new bids on precisely the same specifications, with this exception: The original specifications were 458 in number and covered more than 40 pages of fine print. The exception consisted in a statement of certain omissions made in the blank form of bid and consisting of omissions named as omissions "A" to "R," inclusive. The omissions are stated in general terms and cover less than a page and a half in the same print. The bidders were asked to bid on the original specifications, basing their bid upon these omissions "A" to "R," inclusive, stated in the bid, and were also requested to make bids for the restoration of each item of omissions.

Mr. Peirce bid on the work, leaving out the omissions, $997,500, and bid on restoring the omissions amounts equal to $730,665. The second bid of Mr. Peirce, therefore, for the total work covered by the original specifications was $1,728,165. The second bid of Mr. Peirce was dated November 2, 1902. This was for precisely the same work upon which he had bid in September $1,478,500. His bid of $1,478,500 was rejected in October on the recommendation of the special architect, and the contract was let to him in November on his second bid on precisely the same work and on the same specifications for $1,728,165—a clear present to him of $249,665 on the same specifications for the same work without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i."

Under this motion to suspend the rules I have not the time, in the twenty minutes allotted to the opposition for debate, to go into this matter at length. But I call your attention to the bids for the restoration of these various items of omission.

The contract for the interior work and completion of this building has been let to Mr. Peirce on his second bid. That contract provides for the restoration of the items of omission if the pending bill passes.

Under the contract with Pierce he is to receive for the restoration of item "B" of omission, $6,368. The next lowest bidder to Peirce bid on this same work $1,500. For item "C" of omissions Peirce receives $39,446. The next lowest bidder bid $17,500. For item "E" of omissions Peirce gets $27,883. The next lowest bidder bid $20,000. For item "H" of omissions Peirce gets $39,865. The next lowest bidder bid $21,500. For item "J" of omissions Peirce gets $40,471. The next lowest bidder bid $21,500. For item "O" of omissions Peirce gets $39,053. The next lowest bidder bid $20,000. For item "Q" of omissions Peirce gets $13,530. The next lowest bidder bid $1,500.

And this is only a beginning of the facts which I might state to you if I had the time. Under the Peirce contract he will receive an extra sum of $156,860 if the ornamental metal work, etc., is changed to a solid bronze instead of electroplated work. The next lowest bidder offered to make this change for an increase of only $110,000—a gift to Mr. Peirce of $46,860.

Under Peirce's contract he is to receive an extra sum of $14,300 if the decorations in the wood trim be made of real wood carving instead of composition. The next bidder offered to make this change for $4,900.

I have not the time to go much further into the matter now. On one item here there is a difference in Peirce's favor between $50,000 and $135,000 between his contract and the next bidder.

The contract with Mr. Peirce for the interior work is on his bid of $997,500, but the extras provided in that contract, as stated by the special architect in his recent letter to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, amount to $943,337.58; main contract, $997,500; extras, $943,337.58. The highest prices are on the extras.

Mr. Speaker, I am as anxious as anyone to have the Chicago building finished in a fitting and noble manner. I have not the slightest doubt but that it will be so done in any event. There is no danger of a poor finish in the building. A poor finish is not provided for by any of the specifications or plans, and no one has ever expected that the building would be finished in accordance with the Peirce bid of $997,500. The building will be properly finished.

But how much prouder the people of Chicago can be if, after the building is finished, they can say "It is not only beautiful, but it was built honestly."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

[Mr. MERCER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak very briefly in reference to the item for the Chicago building, simply for the sake of correcting some misapprehension on the part of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and some misconceptions which may have been given to the House by the remarks of my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

I must say at the outset that I entertain nothing but sentiments of the greatest friendship and esteem for my colleague, but I can not refrain from saying that he has given to the House in his brief remarks—and perhaps owing exclusively to the brevity of his argument—a misconception in reference to the contracts for this building. Now, the gentleman from Iowa, who spoke first in opposition to this measure, opposed the Chicago item solely, so far as I could gather it, on account of the rapid growth of the city of Chicago and the demands of the post-office building.

I sincerely trust that our city will never grow too large or our citizens feel too proud of its size and the beauty of its structures to extend always a cordial and hospitable greeting to our neighbor and friend from Iowa, and when he comes to Chicago, as all good people do, after this appropriation has been made and embodied in this building, I will undertake to show him the most beautiful and best adapted building for transacting public business in the world.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa said that he did not feel like spending $790,000 on interior decorations, and something in the remarks of my colleague may also have led the members of this body to imagine that this appropriation was to be used for decorative purposes. Let me state briefly the actual facts. The contract has been let for the interior finish of the Chicago post-office building in alternatives. One of the bids was for what I shall call, for the purposes of this argument, an inferior finish. The other bid was for a superior finish, costing, in round numbers, $800,000 more.

What is the difference between this inferior and this superior finish? As near as I can describe it to members here by reference to buildings with which they are familiar, the inferior finish is the finish that was used in public and business buildings some ten or fifteen years ago, an inferior finish similar to that of the Chicago Opera House Building in Chicago, similar to that of the Maltby Building in this city, and other buildings of that class.

The superior finish called for in the alternative bid, and requiring the small sum of $800,000 in addition, is a finish that will make the Chicago building in its interior similar to the Pittsburg building, the Philadelphia building, the New York Life Building in the city of Chicago, the Marquette Building with which many of you are familiar, and other modern buildings of the first class, substituting a noncorroding metal such as bronze for the iron work, substituting marble in the wainscoting for cement, and substituting stones and tiles and mosaic for wood and plaster.

The imperative necessity for this superior finish is the character of the atmosphere in our city. The increasing use of bituminous coal makes it absolutely necessary that in all buildings of a permanent character the interior finish must be such that it can be cleansed at all times and by vigorous means. Such a finish is used in the public library building in Chicago. That is the finish used in the Marquette Building. That is the finish used in the Monadnock Building.

Now, one word in reference to this amount. The Chicago building is the largest public building in the United States, excepting the War, State, and Navy building in Washington. The post-office business of the city of Chicago is larger than that of any other city except New York. This building is not to be a temporary building, to be replaced even with the future growth of Chicago. This building has been designed for the use of the United States courts, the custom-house, the internal-revenue offices, and for the central administrative offices of the post-office for all time to come.

As the business of the city increases and as the city grows in population no new central building will be needed, but the business will be done through separate buildings in other parts of the city. And my distinguished colleague [Mr. MANN], recognizing the march of events, has already introduced a bill in this Congress providing for such a building in the city of Chicago in his district, and I hope to vote for such a bill at the next session of Congress, and for a similar building in the west town of Chicago, and for another building in my own district.

Mr. SIMS. So this one will not do. You want more!

Mr. BOUTELL. We shall want more to meet the increasing business of our city. Now, in closing, if you ask me why I introduced the bill giving Chicago a million dollars more, and why I favor this superior finish for the Chicago building, I will not attempt to answer. The building itself is an answer. Anyone of you who, passing through our city, will glance at the graceful and magnificent proportions of that structure will admit that it is entitled to the best finish which the art of the craftsman can devise.

I do not know the contractor for the building. I never saw the man, and I never heard of him except as a man of honorable character. I do not know that he has any arrangements, private and recondite, with the architect. I do, however, know the architect, and have known him for many years as a man of the highest character and integrity in my community and here. [Applause.] And I know further, Mr. Speaker, that all the contracts for these buildings are let under the supervision of the fellow-statesman of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] who has opposed this bill; and if there is collusion in this Chicago contract between the contractor and the architect that collusion must have been had with the connivance of a man who, I think, stands as high for honesty, integrity, and business judgment as any man in this Republic, Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, of Iowa, the Secretary of the Treasury. [Applause.]

And so I say again, if you ask me why we need this superior finish, look once at this structure and ask yourselves if it does not demand it. The architect was not a mere mechanic who devised and designed that structure. He was an artist. He caught for a moment the fleet angel of inspiration and received from her the conception that has given to my city and to the nation the most graceful, beautiful, and majestic public structure in the country outside of our capital city. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, under all these circumstances, considering the nature of this contract, already let in the alternative, in view of the character of the interior finish which this building demands, considering the character and the keen conscience of the Secretary of the Treasury, under whose scrutinizing eye this contract has been let and will be enforced, I submit, sir, that the comments and strictures upon the administration of his office are uncalled for and unjust, and this item, as it now stands in the bill, is an item which should receive the generous and cordial approbation and support, not only of every member of this House, but of every citizen of the United States. [Applause.]

[Mr. MERCER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. RODEY. I ask unanimous consent to amend the bill so as to give New Mexico a site for a building.

Mr. MERCER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken on suspending the rules and passing the bill; and the Speaker announced that in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds had voted in the affirmative.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I call for a division.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, without further count I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 204, nays 26, answered "present" 14, not voting 107; as follows:

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I move to amend by striking out Sunday and inserting 11 o'clock Monday. We ought not to sit on Sunday.

Mr. PAYNE. I demand the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks for the previous question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Would it be in order to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The previous question is demanded. If the previous question is voted down, that may be in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the previous question is voted down, I want to offer an amendment making it 11 o'clock Monday.

The SPEAKER. That will be in order when that comes.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Division, Mr. Speaker.

SENATE.

SUNDAY, March 1, 1903.

[Continuation of legislative day of Saturday, February 28, 1903.]

At the expiration of the recess, 11 o'clock a. m., Sunday, March 1, 1903, the Senate reassembled.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE OTEY.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution of the House of Representatives concerning the death of the late Representative OTEY be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 23, 1902.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the Hon. PETER J. OTEY, late a member of this House from the State of Virginia, and in pursuance of the order of the House heretofore made, the business of the House be now suspended to enable his associates to pay fitting tribute to his high character and distinguished services.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect at the conclusion of these exercises the House do adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I ask leave to offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia offers resolutions, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. PETER JOHNSTON OTEY, late Representative in Congress from the Sixth Congressional district of Virginia.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended that proper tribute may be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the Senate will, upon the conclusion of these memorial exercises, adjourn.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, this hour has been set apart by the Senate in order that proper tribute may be paid to the name of a distinguished citizen of Virginia, Maj. PETER J. OTEY, who died while serving in the House of Representatives. It becomes my sad duty to contribute a few words in honor of the memory of my deceased friend.

I became acquainted with Major OTEY about the time I reached years of manhood. Our acquaintance afterwards ripened into friendship. From the year 1885 to the time of his death our relations were of the closest and most intimate character. I never knew a purer or better man, a more loyal or patriotic citizen, or a more faithful and efficient Representative in the halls of Congress.

Major OTEY was born in the city of Lynchburg on the 22d day of December, 1840. He was educated at the Virginia Military Institute, at Lexington, Va., an institution of high order, modeled after the West Point Military Academy, graduating from that institution on the 1st day of July, 1860. During the brief period intervening between his graduation and the commencement of the war between the States Major OTEY was employed as a civil engineer in the work of railroad construction. At the very commencement of the war he entered the Confederate Army, and served to the end as an officer, first in the infantry and then in the artillery branch of the service. He was wounded at the battle of Newmarket, in the Valley of Virginia, in the spring of 1865. He was captured at Waynesboro, Va., by the Federal Army on the 2d day of March, 1865, and was a prisoner at Fort Delaware when the war ended. His career as a soldier was without a blemish in any respect, and was characterized by a spirit of self-sacrifice, by a devotion to duty, and by a courage which endeared him to his comrades, and placed his name high on the rolls of distinguished soldiers produced in the great Commonwealth of Virginia. When hostilities ceased Major OTEY returned to the duties of private life with the earnestness, energy, and zeal always characteristic of him. At one time in the insurance business, at another the cashier of the leading bank in his city, and at another the president of the Lynchburg and Durham Railroad Company, which was planned and organized by him, he always commanded the respect and enjoyed the confidence of the best business interests in his State.

While engaged in the active pursuits of business, and seeking no political preferment for himself, his devotion to his State and his unfaltering conviction that the interests of his country would be best promoted by the principles of the Democratic party, he contributed generously of his time, his thought, and his means to the State and national campaigns of his party. In 1894, for the first time, he became a candidate for an office. He announced himself a candidate for Congress in the Sixth Virginia district, and was easily nominated and elected. He served in the Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, Fifty-sixth, and Fifty-seventh Congresses, and died after a very brief illness in his native city on Sunday the 4th day of May, 1902.

In his Congressional work he was essentially practical. No detail was too small to be worthy of his attention; no problem was so complicated or so profound that he did not aid in its elucidation and solution. He was one of the wisest and most reliable and conservative counselors in his party.

He was not an orator in the ordinary acceptation of the term, but he was an able debater, a strong, forcible, and logical speaker, and able to use, and in the habit of using, on proper occasion, most effectively, not only the embellishments of rhetoric, but wit, humor, invective, and anecdotes. He was a man of marked ability and of great usefulness in the public service. In his death, not only his friends, but his State and the country suffered an irreparable loss.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my acquaintance with Mr. OTEY was not intimate, but I knew him well enough to respect him highly, and to regard him as a very valuable member of the House of Representatives. He was a kind-hearted, cordial, sympathetic man, whose companionship was delightful, and whose friendship was well worth possessing. He seemed always to look on the bright side of life, and was full of anecdote and charming reminiscence. To him sunshine was better than cloud, and laughter more desirable than gloom. He was the kind of man who stands for what is best in life, intent upon leaving an impress for good on the community in which he lived.

Others who knew him better than I will tell the story of this man's life. Military student, soldier, engineer, railroad man, banker, and Representative in Congress, he acted well his part in the varied positions which he occupied. A successful business man, he brought to the discharge of his duties in Congress the same industry, method, and executive ability which made him successful in business persuits, and thus he achieved success as a legislator and endeared himself to his constituents by promptly and cheerfully responding to the multitudinous calls that in these busy days come to men in public life.

Mr. President, I shall never forget the large concourse of people that gathered in the church in the beautiful and picturesque city of Lynchburg on the occasion of the funeral of Congressman OTEY. It was not a gathering of people attracted by curiosity or of those who perfunctorily responded to what might seem to them a neighborly duty. Rather it was an outpouring of men and women who were anxious to pay the last tribute of respect to a man whom they deeply respected and loved. There were many eyes wet with tears in the assemblage, and a solemn hush fell on all when the good priest, in simple words, told of the generous qualities and kindly deeds of the deceased. He said that Mr. OTEY had left to his family the heritage of a noble life, which was infinitely better than stocks and bonds or silver and gold. How fortunate will it be if, when the final summons comes, the same thing can truthfully be said of us.

Mr. President, I need not say more. This man illustrated in his life the thought that Ruskin has burned into the very souls of many of his readers: "Think you," says Ruskin, "that judgment waits till the doors of the grave are opened? It waits at the doors of your houses—it waits at the corners of your streets. We are in the midst of judgment—the insects that we crush are our judges—the moments that we put away are our judges—the elements that feed us judge as they minister, and the pleasures that deceive us judge as they indulge. Let us, for our lives, do the work of men while we bear the form of them, if, indeed, those lives are not as a vapor, and do not vanish away."

PETER J. OTEY lived up to high ideals. The world was the better because of his having lived in it; and so to-day those of us who knew him gladly pay tribute, however humble and incomplete it may be, to the memory of a loyal friend, a true man, and a faithful public servant.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, the State of Virginia is more than the mother of Presidents. It has reared and sent forth into public life so many other men of the highest intellectual attainments and moral character that it seems to me it has as much reason for pride in that fact as it has in that it has placed so many distinguished men in the seat first occupied by Washington. Of these natives of the Old Dominion PETER J. OTEY was one, and his death presents the opportunity to give voice to that acknowledgment of the high qualities with which he was indorsed, that is, I fear, neglected too often during the life of those we respect and love.

Mr. OTEY possessed in a notable degree those ingrained Virginian qualities of courage, loyalty, and devotion which have always been the distinguishing marks of the sons of that great State. He was educated in her schools, and in her military institute received that training which in after years enabled him to win distinction on the field of battle. When the civil war arose, he abandoned all private business and entered the ranks of the defenders of the Southern cause. Throughout that great struggle he devoted all his strength, all his energy, all his time, and all his means to the great movement to which he had given his heart. There was never a sign of faltering or weakness. He went on to the end with that indomitable courage which characterizes the true soldier. But when the end came, he recognized it to be the end, and that his work on battlefields was done. Not one of the hundreds of thousands who accepted the solution of the great struggle was more sincere than he. He had given his love and loyalty to a union of a part of the American States; but when it was determined that there could be no dividing line, this love and loyalty embraced the whole; and after the smoke of battle had cleared away, there existed no man ready to dare more for the United States of America than PETER J. OTEY. Though he had broadened his allegiance, however, and had buried forever the cause for which he fought, he did not forget his old comrades in arms. Brave men who have fought side by side in war must ever stand shoulder to shoulder in peace.

So it was that when Mr. OTEY entered public life there were behind him the men who had, in times of stress, learned to know what manner of man he was. That they judged correctly that he would act as a legislator as he fought as a soldier is known to all members of the House of Representatives who served with him. In his capacity of Representative from Virginia he manifested the same courage, the same tenacity, the same kindness, consideration, and manly affection that had endeared him to his soldiers. No one who knew him well could escape the recognition of these gentler qualities. They showed themselves in the dry routine of legislation, where there was a chance to give the benefit of a doubt to the weaker party. They showed themselves in the consideration of measures affecting the material interests of sections or of individuals. They were ever manifest in his relations with his colleagues, and their sincere sorrow at his death is the measure of his worth as a man.

With all his seriousness of purpose, his devotion to duty, and his unwearying labor he possessed a lightness of heart and a fund of humor which kept him young and in sympathy with the present and all that the present holds. None of those who were fortunate in his companionship will forget the mirth and joy which he so often caused. And in the House itself not infrequently his genial humor brought back to a reasonable basis a discussion that earnestness and passion had carried beyond bounds. His wit was of that rare kind which, though sure of its mark, never left a rankling wound, but rather soothed and pacified. It was a gift which had not a little to do with the personal affection with which he was regarded by all those who knew him, and which commanded the respect of those who were not within his intimate companionship.

While Mr. OTEY was a most earnest and loyal member of his party, none of his political opponents have ever been able to charge him with any of the questionable acts which sometimes are laid at the doors of public men. He secured and held the respect of Republicans as well as of Democrats, and the former as well as the latter in his Congressional district were proud to be represented in Congress by him. In his work for his constituents he was indefatigable, and his sincere desire to serve them in whatever way was proper made him one of the hardest working of the members of the House of Representatives. It was his greatest pleasure to secure some measure of relief or some little benefit for a worthy and needy constituent, for his sympathy went out to such as had missed much of the good fortune of the world. Hence his loss was felt among his constituents as a personal loss, and when his body was taken to its last resting place there was evidence that he had attained the supreme honor of a successful life—the sincere and unselfish love of his people.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, shortly after I became a member of the Senate I formed the acquaintance of Hon. PETER J. OTEY, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Virginia. I often met him and conversed with him up to the time of his death. But a short while before he died I enjoyed a most pleasant and agreeable conversation with him in this Chamber. Apparently he was in good health, and I was shocked when I heard of his death. I had no personal acquaintance with him until after he became a member of Congress, but often saw him and conversed with him during his public career. I can scarcely now realize that he has passed forever from our fellowship. Conversation with the distinguished dead convinced me that he was a man of thought, and that his abilities were directed in advancing the best interests of his country.

Reared and educated at the Virginia Military Institute, from which he graduated in 1860, he early acquired that breadth of mind and honesty of purpose which so well equipped him for the duties and responsibilities of life. He never held a public office until he was elected to Congress, taking his seat upon the assembling of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and was reelected to the Fifty-fifth, Fifty-sixth, and Fifty-seventh Congresses. Had he lived, doubtless he would have been renominated without opposition and reelected to the Fifty-eighth Congress, for he was highly esteemed and greatly beloved by the people of his district. The deceased was a brave Confederate soldier, gave four years of his life to this service, and his record as a soldier is without a blot or blemish. He fought under Breckinridge, Longstreet, and Early, and his companions in arms testify that he was always found in front of the battle discharging faithfully and courageously the duties of a soldier.

When the civil war ended he accepted the result in good faith and went to work to rebuild the fortunes of Virginia and to bring about a fraternal feeling between all sections of our common country. He soon demonstrated that the success which he had achieved as a soldier was destined to mark his career as a business man. He won the confidence and the esteem of the good people of the city of Lynchburg, where he resided, and was nominated and elected to represent his district in Congress. The distinguished dead never lost his devotion and enthusiasm for his companions in arms and was universally loved by them at the time of his death.

My limited acquaintance with the deceased convinced me that he was an industrious and thoughtful legislator, a tender and loving husband and father, a kind, just, and considerate neighbor, a broad-minded and patriotic American citizen, always ready and anxious to discharge, in an intelligent way, his public duties, keeping in view the preservation of our free institutions, hoping to advance in every honorable way possible his country's good.

He was incapable of cherishing malice, and charity was one of his crowning virtues. He worked constantly and effectively for the people of his district and was candid, courageous, honest, and full of sympathy for his fellow-man. As a friend he was interesting and delightful, always carrying with him sunshine and happiness.

Those who knew him as a student, as a soldier, as a private citizen, as a husband and father, as a member of Congress, bear testimony that he was faithful in the discharge of every duty. He was just such a Representative as might be expected from the Commonwealth of Virginia. No State in the Union has done more to give to the world the best Government ever established for the liberty and happiness of man than this great Commonwealth. On Virginia's soil and through the influence of Virginia's sons opposition to British tyranny was first planted. It was the immortal Patrick Henry who kindled the flame that united the American colonies in favor of American independence.

It was Thomas Jefferson, Virginia's distinguished son, who drafted the Declaration of Independence, uniting the colonies and constituting a Republic that in a little more than a hundred years has outstripped all the nations of the earth. Nowhere among the family of nations will be found that happiness and liberty and equality of rights which the American citizen enjoys. The Declaration of Independence which Thomas Jefferson drafted, separating us from the mother country, brought to the infant Republic a revolution that lasted for eight years, and which threatened our extermination. Our chieftain in this sanguinary struggle, which resulted in American independence, was Virginia's son. When the Federal Constitution was under discussion it was Mr. Madison who was its ablest champion, and he will always be accorded in history the place he deserves in connection with the formation of our fundamental law. When we seek to know the origin and history of the Monroe doctrine, that no foreign government should cross the waters and establish governments on the Western Continent, we find this doctrine came to us through one of Virginia's distinguished sons.

It is not necessary to trace the birth, the education, or the private life of our dead friend in order to estimate his pure worth.

The fact that the people of Virginia, of the Sixth Congressional district, elected him to Congress for four consecutive terms is the highest evidence that he was a man of ability, possessing the highest integrity, the broadest patriotism, the kindliest nature, a lover of liberty and constitutional government. Virginians are a brave, chivalrous, and gentlemanly people, and are proud of the records made by their public servants. They watched with pride the career of our dead friend. They loved him, they trusted and honored him, and he was in every way worthy of that trust and honor which they so freely bestowed upon him.

In his intercourse with others he was always considerate, even tender with the lowly and the humble. He was a sincere friend of the poor, a man of unswerving integrity, and all who knew him bear testimony to the goodness of his heart in all of his relations with his fellows. We can only judge a man by the life he lives. His everyday walk preaches the most forceful sermon. Deeds and acts are more forceful than words. Those who knew him pay beautiful tribute to his memory—that PETER J. OTEY lived a life of integrity, benevolence, and charity, and he taught these virtues to all with whom he came in contact. His manly qualities of heart and mind made him universally popular with his colleagues in the House regardless of politics.

I have often heard it said that he never at any time failed to remember the slightest wish of any of his constituents; always plain, modest, unassuming, loyal, and friendly.

He died in the very prime of his usefulness and while his influence was widening and increasing, and his death was a serious loss to the public, as it was a source of irreparable grief to his large circle of friends; but the example which he left us will long be remembered for the instruction and encouragement of those who now survive him. The benedictions of those who knew him intimately and who loved him so well, and who were the recipients of his many generous acts, will keep his memory fresh and unfading forever.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, the commemorative exercises that are now transpiring had been appointed for yesterday afternoon. When the hour approached the pressure of the public business of the Senate was such that those who had charge of it appealed that it might be given the right of way. The friends of the late PETER JOHNSTON OTEY believed that had he been alive he would have been the first to waive any personal consideration for the affairs of the country, and, acting as they believed the living would have acted, they consented that these exercises should be postponed until to-day.

The late PETER JOHNSTON OTEY was the Representative of the Sixth Congressional district of Virginia. He was born in Lynchburg, Campbell County, Va., on the 22d of December, 1840, and he died there on May 4, 1902. His death occurred in the house of his birth, whose roof had sheltered his lifetime and five generations of his ancestors and their descendants.

This old homestead erected by his maternal grandfather in the early part of the nineteenth century is a large, substantial brick structure of the plain rectangular fashion so common in Old England and in the Atlantic coast States of the American Union. In its dignified simplicity and solidity it is typical of the sterling people who erected and lived within its walls, and while modern architecture presents many features more alluring to the fanciful, I doubt if there be any specimen of it that presents so striking an ideal of durability or worth or kindles so readily the associations of family and of home.

John Otey, the grandfather of PETER JOHNSTON OTEY, was a soldier of the Revolution of 1776, and long represented the county of Bedford in the general assembly of Virginia. His father, Capt. John Mercer Otey, was a soldier of the war of 1812, and locating in Lynchburg when the war ended, he became a leading citizen, the president of its common council, an officer of a bank, and a successful business man whose judgment was much sought and always respected by his neighbors and his friends. He was a man of majestic personal aspect and of character and ability befitting his appearance, and he had that commanding intelligence and influence to which men bend by instinct. Had you looked upon him without knowing who he was you would have surmised from his sagacious face and commanding form that he was some great public official, such as Secretary of the Treasury or Chief Justice of the United States.

Capt. John M. Otey was wedded early in life to Lucy W. Norvell, whose family, like his own, had made its mark in the Colonial and Revolutionary days of our State, and she was as remarkable for intellectual, social, and executive abilities as was her husband. She identified herself with religious and charitable works. During the civil war she herself established and superintended a hospital in the city of Lynchburg for the wounded and sick soldiers. She directed its administration with an efficient energy that was universally recognized and with a sweet heartedness and charity that made her name as proverbial in our community as that of Florence Nightingale is throughout the world.

When our sectional troubles became acute in 1860 the Otey family, of the old Whig stock—and, indeed, a large majority of the Lynchburg people—identified themselves strongly with the cause of the Union. The whole State of Virginia was similarly disposed, giving its electoral vote to Bell and Everett, and still later, after secession was organized, Lynchburg and a majority of the Virginia constituencies sent Union representatives to the State convention. There, led by Alexander H. H. Stuart, Jubal Anderson Early, Robert E. Scott, Robert Y. Conrad, John B. Baldwin, Samuel McDowell Moore, and others not less able and distinguished, they fought a sturdy fight to avert the disaster of dissolution and civil war.

When President Lincoln called on Virginia to furnish men to march against the seceding States the sentiment of the body instantly changed. This was war, call it by whatsoever name you will, and while Virginia was opposed to secession, she still less favored the idea of forcing States by the bayonet into unwilling political association. It was against the teachings of those of her founders whom she most revered and against the legendary and traditional principles of her people. The Union localities in Virginia indorsed this view, and the Otey family and all their neighbors fell into the ranks of forming war. The Hon. James G. Blaine, in his Twenty Years in Congress, and, more recently, Gen. Charles Francis Adams in a memorable essay, have eloquently referred to the history and integrity of Virginia's convictions and to her stern obedience to her faith.

I am relating a fact of our history and not discussing it, for the discussion has long since eventuated in tragedy and in restoration after tragedy. The fact simply illustrates that when revolution comes it sweeps in its headlong currents those who are opposed to it in common with those who favor and advance it, and our domestic experience, conforming to that which all history confirms, utters its warning against those of any and of every side who kindle the sparks of sectional strife.

The children raised by Capt. John M. Otey and Lucy W. Otey were eight in number. The eldest, a daughter, Mrs. Lucy Walker, alone survives. This noble matron is the widow of a brave soldier, Maj. John Stewart Walker, who fell in the battle of Malvern Hill. The rest of those children were sons. They all volunteered when war came, and were noted for their modest valor and their patriotic spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion.

One of them, Capt. Van Rensselaer Otey, who had been a lieutenant in the Mexican war, served on the staff of the famous cavalry general, J. E. B. Stuart, until ill health necessitated his assignment to post duty.

Lieut. Dexter Otey, another, was injured, as the war began, by being thrown from a horse and disabled from military duty.

Col. Kirkwood Otey commanded the Eleventh Virginia Infantry, a regiment of ironsides, and was wounded in Pickett's charge at Gettysburg and again at Drurys Bluff.

Capt. George Gaston Otey commanded a battery of light artillery and was mortally wounded at Lewisburg.

Walter Hayes Otey was adjutant of the Fifty-sixth Virginia Infantry, and bravely shared the dangers and hardships of protracted war.

John M. Otey became colonel and adjutant-general for Gen. P. G. T. Beauregard.

PETER JOHNSTON OTEY was the youngest and the last survivor of this brave brotherhood, a race of manly men whose breasts were little stirred by the vanities of ambition or the ostentations of life, but rather by the finer impulse to render manhood's true account.

I knew this man of whom I speak to-day, and his memory is dear to me. From his earliest childhood we were neighbors, kinsmen, comrades, and friends, and I know of no man who more adequately met all the obligations which life imposed upon him, who attempted more things and better did them, and none who at the age of 62, at which he died, could look back upon a life more honorably or more usefully spent, or could have less in its record that he would wish to regret.

Graduating at the Virginia Military Institute in 1860, he entered at once upon his chosen profession as a civil engineer. He was scarcely initiated in it when the war drums were sounding. He volunteered, of course, and served for a time as a lieutenant in the Virginia forces, and fired, it is said, the first cannon shot of the war on Virginia soil, from Sewells Point, near Norfolk. We find him again soon in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and presently he becomes a major in the Thirtieth Virginia Battalion of Infantry. His war service was arduous in Tennessee, west and southwest Virginia, and in the Shenandoah Valley, and especially during the last year under Breckinridge and Early.

At Newmarket, in May, 1864, he was stricken down with a broken arm in a charge upon a battery which withered the assaulting line, when General Breckinridge, the Confederate commander, sent to the rescue his only available reserve in the battalion of cadets of the Virginia Military Institute, where Major OTEY had been educated. These boy soldiers of the corps to which he had belonged swept the field with a precision, steadiness, and compactness of movement that won the admiration of both armies, passing over OTEY'S fallen body, accomplishing their purpose, and winning a reputation which remains a glorious reminiscence.

Curious it might seem, and yet it is consonant with the best things in human nature and with the invariable character of a sensible and magnanimous people, that soldiers of the Union Army who witnessed the exploit of these boys in action have sent their sons to the Virginia Military Institute to be educated, because they saw its worth tested in the test of fire, and a just return is found to-day by our reunited country in the fact that many of its younger Army officers have been drawn from the graduates of this excellent academy and who are sons of both those who wore the blue as well of those who wore the gray.

The wounds of youth soon heal, and OTEY was soon back with his soldiers. He commanded his brigade at Cedar Creek. His character as a fearless fighter became more and more established. The War Records attest it by the frequent complimentary notices made of his gallantry and skill by his superior officers, and had the fortunes of war gone otherwise than they did, he was in close reach of the highest honors of rank that can crown a soldier's deeds. But he was not the kind of a man to ask a medal for gallantry, or stars and wreaths for his collar, and in the chance medley of war they came not to him unasked. He was content with the supreme reward of duty done.

At Waynesboro, March 2, 1865, with a remnant of his band, he was captured, and when the war ended he was a prisoner at Fort Delaware. He was ere long at home again to begin life anew, and to build up from the bottom. To one of his comrades in a similar situation Thomas Carlyle, the great writer and philosopher, wrote this advice: "Go ahead and do the thing that lies next to you." This was always Major OTEY'S intuitive wisdom, and he lived closely up to it.

A clerkship in an express office he gladly accepted. He became successively a clerk in a railroad office, an engineer of a railroad line, teller, and then cashier of a leading bank, the founder of a large insurance business that yet continues and prospers, and then the president, financier, and builder of the Lynchburg and Durham Railroad.

Never a money lover, but always scrupulous as a handler, user, and earner of money, he exercised such fine discretion and rigid honesty in all of these employments, and exhibited such rare faculties of administrative tact and skill that his fame as a successful and reliable business man spread far and wide, and he was looked up to, and justly, as a model and an exemplar.

While system and discipline were manifested in their best forms in his business practices, he had beyond them the ripe mentality of clear and just judgment. To these were added in him an automatic integrity that never debated a questionable point of honor, but instantly decided it rightly, and a firm purpose that could say "No" with alacrity, however specious, alluring, and beguiling might be the temptation to say "Yes."

It is of such mettle as this that great men are made. We often see in our American life some modest man but little known suddenly projected into great places of peace or war, and the multitude is astonished that he so readily and roundly fulfills that place with all of its complexities and responsibilities.

PETER JOHNSTON OTEY was a man of this class, and it is my conviction from an intimate knowledge of his principles, his characteristics, and his methods that there is no executive office of our Government that he would not have ably filled in a manner that would have given satisfaction to all who trusted him and redounded to the renown and welfare of his country.

Major OTEY indeed possessed a great variety of talents. He was a mathematician who could quickly solve any problem of figures, a draftsman who could give you the model of a steam engine or in a few strokes of his pen the characteristic features of a face or landscape; a musician whose ear for music made him at home touching the keys of a piano or the strings of a banjo or in leading the chorus of a happy song. With the fishing rod, shotgun, or rifle he was on easy and familiar terms, and when he dropped business no one I ever knew entered more heartily or innocently into the spirit of sport or amusement, or extracted from it more of pleasure and refreshment.

Calm and decisive in all serious affairs, he was so concentrative in his work and so imperious in pushing it to its proper result that men sometimes thought him cold and indifferent, but no man was warmer or more generous in his feeling, none responded more readily to any call of friendship, patriotism, or charity, and none was more alert to do good things for their own sake without thought of reward or regard for personal consequence.

When Major OTEY had reached the mature age of 54 years the railroad of which he was president underwent the experience usual with small interior lines and was absorbed by a great trunk line, leaving him without employment. He had never held civil office of any kind, either State or Federal, and had probably never made a public speech. His business occupations had been such as tended to withdraw him from, rather than prompt him to, political ambition. But he had always been a public-spirited citizen. He had served for years in the common council of his town, like his father before him. He had performed many other unremunerative labors as a party committeeman and as a citizen, attentive to the concerns of the common weal and of his neighbors and friends, and he had won the confidence and good will of all who knew him.

He determined in 1894 to become a candidate for Congress, and went at it with the directness which characterized all of his methods, publishing a brief card stating that candidates often stated to the public that they yielded to the solicitations of friends, and would serve if elected, to the sacrifice of personal interests; whereas in his case he was thoroughly satisfied that his own interest would be subserved by election, and he asked his fellow-citizens directly to vote for him. The people always and justly love plain candor, and this candid presentation reenforced their favorable disposition. He was nominated by the Democratic party, and elected a Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Without experience in public speaking, he rapidly acquired that art, and soon became an able and interesting advocate upon the hustings, knowing his subject in every detail, presenting his views with clearness and force, and adding to the attractiveness of his utterances by a play of natural wit, humor, and fancy that was singularly engaging.

In the House of Representatives he made his mark upon the floor as well as in the committees of which he was a member. So attentive was he to his constituents in all the details of their wants and needs that it was soon commonly said throughout the district that "Major OTEY is the best Representative we have ever had." The very humblest of them, as well as the most influential and powerful, commanded his instant attention and care. His popularity became so firmly established that no one in his party thought of opposing him, and his political rivals entered the campaigns without hope and came out with ever-increasing majorities against them.

He was successfully chosen a Representative to the Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, and Fifty-sixth Congresses, and came here as a member of the Fifty-seventh Congress, not only honored and beloved by his home people, but also with the hearty welcome of his colleagues of whatever party in the House of Representatives. Limited time forbids me to recount his services in that body, and this, indeed, has already been better done by his colleagues there.

His services were assiduous and numberless in the mass of minor measures and minor matters that make a vast sum in the aggregate, and yet are of no little importance to the localities and persons chiefly concerned, while they cut no great figure in public history. They were also important and weighty in many public questions of the first magnitude and in administrative concerns of large consequence.

So much was he esteemed that he was made a member of the State Democratic executive committee and of the national Democratic committee as well.

He was the propounder of the measure to provide dentists for our Army, which became a law, to the gratification and betterment of our soldiers in the field; and President McKinley graciously appointed, as one of the dentists to fulfill the terms of the act, Dr. R. W. Morgan, of Lynchburg, who had been a private soldier of Pickett's division, and who was wounded at Gettysburg. This gentleman had conceived the measure providing for a dentists' corps, which is now established. It had been suggested to his mind by his own experience as a soldier, and he is now suffering illness brought upon him by his service as a dentist with our forces in Cuba. This great reform is simply another instance in which the experiences of one generation redound to the betterment of another, and in which experiences sometimes acquired in hostility are woven into the web of a stronger and more enduring friendship.

It was in his home life that Major OTEY was most admirable, and it was there that he found the rich and exceeding great reward for the hardships and dangers that he had passed and of all his faithful labors. Married in early manhood to Miss Mollie Floyd, of a distinguished and intellectual family, the children and grandchildren of their union brought to them the fullness of domestic blessing. Mrs. Otey was his constant companion and helpmate; and in her good judgment and ready hand he found that genial comradeship which was to him "a very help in time of trouble," while the many friends who shared their fireside warmth and hospitality beheld the charms of domestic felicity exemplified in every form of home happiness and comfort.

In the qualities that command respect and that attract and endear friendship Major OTEY was as richly endowed as in intellectual gifts and in moral attributes. Every circle welcomed his sunny presence. He was the best of boon companions, whether in a stern fight or in a hunt or upon any scene of recreation. His disposition was that of redundant healthfulness, which makes the best of everything that is and hopes and strives for the best that may be reached for.

As no difficulty discouraged him, so no mishap cast him down or deterred renewal of endeavor. He was optimistic in all things, and his optimism sprung from the true-heartedness and clear-sightedness that realizes the unceasing endeavor of the Divine Spirit to work out all things for good.

He dealt but little in attempts to unravel and explain the mysteries of our present and future state, which, by their infinity, must be inscrutable, but he looked upward to the good God in hope, faith, and charity, with a conscience that loved right and hated wrong, and with dependence and confidence as strong as those of a child that looks trustingly into its mother's face. He put his creed into his deeds, and his life was such that any church in Christendom might have been content to point to him as a worthy and exemplary member.

To this strong, brave, good, and useful man death seemed to come all too soon, and yet it gave its forewarning. A month or so before he died he told me that he had a heart trouble which he felt might take him off at any moment. I had never suspected it, nor would anyone who looked upon him be likely to do so. His eye was keen and bright; his cheeks were rosy with the flush of health; his indomitable will and his cheerful spirit bore him along in the constant and efficient discharge of multitudinous duties. The week before he died he left Washington for his home, feeling badly. A few days later I wrote him at his home a letter, to which, by the next mail, according to his punctual custom, I received a full reply in his own handwriting. Two days later, Sunday, came a telegram stating that Major OTEY had died that afternoon.

The morning he died he called for his wife and his check book, wrote a check and handed it to her, stating that she might need the funds in the affairs of the household; then turned to sleep, and awoke only to say "Farewell" to those around him, and so his thoughtfulness of others that had been the good genius of his life threw their love-lit halo over his dying pillow.

Had he worked less than he did or thought as much of himself as he thought of others and of his duties, his life on earth might probably have been prolonged. But as it was, he died with his harness on, while all his faculties were bright, and ere infirmity had sapped the foundation of his usefulness and the happiness of his being. Who can chide that Providence which strives unceasingly for the least of evil and for the best of good?

The State of Virginia had a true citizen and soldier in the person of PETER JOHNSTON OTEY, and one who would have suffered anything and done anything that became a man to serve her.

The Sixth district had in him a Representative who followed what was highest and best in his predecessors and made himself an example of fidelity and utility for those who shall follow him, a shining example which will inspire their best ambitions and sound the bugle call to their best exertions.

The United States had in him a faithful and zealous servant, who, discounting no true instinct and no manly attribute in his breast, did render to them all that their highest ideals could dictate of a patriot's duty.

So he sleeps well and a happy memory remains in the track that he pursued, like the light that fills the sky when some serene and wholesome planet has departed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to, with the exception of the resolution relating to adjournment.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE MOODY.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions from the House of Representatives commemorative of the life and character of Hon. JAMES M. MOODY, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of North Carolina, may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 22, 1903.

Resolved, That in pursuance of the special order heretofore adopted the House proceed to pay tribute to the memory of the Hon. JAMES MONTRAVILLE MOODY, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of North Carolina.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a faithful and distinguished public servant, the House at the conclusion of the memorial proceedings shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from North Carolina will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JAMES M. MOODY, late a Representative from the State of North Carolina.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect the Senate, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do adjourn.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, JAMES MONTRAVILLE MOODY was born in Cherokee County, N. C., February 12, 1858, and died at his home in Waynesville on February 5, 1903. He left surviving him a wife and six children, the eldest, a lad of 16, inheriting his father's name.

When Mr. MOODY was 2 years of age his parents moved to Jonathans Creek, Haywood County, where he was reared and where he lived until his majority. In his youth he worked on the farm and went to school until he acquired such education as the local schools could give. Afterwards he continued to labor on the farm, using the means thus obtained to defray his expenses while attending Waynesville Academy and Candler College.

He read law under Judges W. B. Ferguson and W. L. Norwood, and was licensed as a practicing attorney by the supreme court of North Carolina at the January term, 1881, and immediately entered upon the practice of his profession at Waynesville, where he has since resided. He was mayor of Waynesville in 1885, and was elected solicitor of the Twelfth judicial district in 1886. He was the candidate of his party for lieutenant-governor in 1892. He was elected to the State senate in 1894, and was commissioned as a major in the volunteer service of the United States during the Spanish-American war in 1898, and assigned to duty on the staff of Maj. Gen. J. Warren Keifer, and by his manly bearing and conscientious discharge of duty won the confidence and esteem of the officers and men with whom he served and the lasting personal friendship of General Keifer. In 1900 he was elected a member of the Fifty-seventh Congress of the United States from the Ninth Congressional district, and at the time of his death was a contestant for a seat in the next House. Mr. MOODY was a good lawyer, and at the time of his death was quite distinguished in the criminal branch of his profession.

His life was in the main a successful one, and was wholly free from stain. Those who knew him best valued him highest. He was a son of nature, and the mountaineers among whom he was bred rallied to him in every crisis of his career by a kind of magnetic attraction. The humblest constituent felt free to address him by his Christian name, unmarked by any prefix whatsoever. Of humble extraction, he raised himself into a higher sphere without any false dignity derived from his new associations. Like Vance, Swain, Merrimon, Woodfin, and other notable men of the western section of my State, Mr. MOODY was cabin-born, and he continued to be cabin-loving after reaching preferment in another circle. Like those men, he had that intense love for his mountain home which I think distinguishes all born under such surroundings. In life and in death he continued to be of the "plain people," as Mr. Lincoln called our yeomanry, meaning it to be, as it was, the language of affection. Mr. MOODY was a man of stalwart physique, in the very noon of life, and enjoying, until recently, the fullness of health, hence his death came as a shock to his friends, his constituents, his party. He was a most devoted Republican, exhibiting at all times strong and unflinching convictions. And yet he maintained throughout repeated campaigns the respect of his opponents, and died with the good will of all men. The legislature of his native State adjourned in honor of his memory, after taking suitable action to preserve it, although a very large majority of its members were active partisans of a different political faith.

His funeral was largely attended by his friends and neighbors, who were anxious to show their respect for the memory of one whom they had known from his earliest childhood. I am told that his end was peaceful; that he faced his higher destiny with unabashed brow and saw the seals of his fate unrolled without fear. He had his faults, but against his failings he made fight, manful fight, and if he but partly won let us leave the unfinished fight, as he did, to a stronger arm and a brighter intelligence.

Mr. President, perhaps the most worthy service rendered by my deceased friend, and one with which his name will be honorably connected in the coming years, was his labor in behalf of the Appalachian Park Reserve. To that enterprise he gave the best energies of brain and body. It was nearest his heart to the day when he was stricken with the fearful summons to lay aside his work on earth. That his fondest hope in behalf of that truly national project will yet find fulfillment I have never permitted myself to doubt. The magnificent territory between the Blue Ridge and the Alleghanies, stretching through several of our finest Atlantic States, giving nurture to the streams which later become national highways, crowned with the loftiest watersheds of the East, and adorned with such flora as no other temperate zone can show, is destined under God to be the pleasure ground of half the continent.

When that reasonable and worthy hope is realized I fancy a sweeter sleep will steal over him whom we have lately laid to rest. I fancy some kind ministering messenger will be sent to give him word that his last work on earth was not wholly fruitless.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, it is a natural impulse that prompts those who, by association or observation, have learned the intrinsic merit of one who has closed a life of usefulness, to pay such tribute as can be conveyed by our inadequate powers of expression, to the memory of such a career. When Death has placed his imprimatur on the last chapter of our little earthly life story, and what we have done for good or ill has thereby become fixed forever, a part of our irrevocable and unamendable record, it is eminently proper that not only those who have the incentive of personal affection, but that those who in the casual intercourse of a strenuous existence have had occasion to note exceptional and shining traits in the character and career of one who has passed away forever, should also put in as permanent a shape as possible the results of their observation. This impulse ought to have, and generally does have, with the thoughtful, a higher and nobler inspiration than that which evolved the maxim of the ancients which enjoined nought but good when speaking of the dead. Example is the most potent of preceptors. The object lesson is the most impressive method of reaching the understanding and shaping the inclination of the young, and the oftener we can present to their plastic minds authentic illustrations of character which of itself conquers adverse environment, rises to eminence by its innate merit and wins the respect and esteem of good men and women, the greater the probability of our inspiring those who are to follow us with a zealous purpose of emulating such virtue.

The life story of JAMES MONTRAVILLE MOODY is sufficiently striking to justify us in essaying to preserve it from oblivion. Born among the mountains of western North Carolina February 12, 1858, he died one week before his forty-fifth birthday, on February 5, 1903. The illness which ended his life began here in Washington, but did not prove fatal until after his arrival at his home in Waynesville, where he breathed his last, surrounded by his wife and six children, the eldest of whom, a boy, is 16 years of age.

Like most of the people of that part of North Carolina, young MOODY'S parents, during his boyhood, were in very moderate circumstances, and for a number of years his attendance at the local school was made subordinate to his attention to farm work. As he grew older and began to develop the splendid physique which in the full flower of manhood made him a most striking figure, he worked industriously on a farm until he had accumulated means enough wherewith to pay his schooling at the Waynesville Academy for two years and to place him at Candler College in North Carolina, where he remained one year. Having thus acquired a fairly good education, he returned to Waynesville, and while maintaining himself there studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1881. In 1886 he had by his industry and ability so impressed the people of the twelfth judicial district that they elected him prosecuting attorney for that district, which position he filled for four years with credit to himself and advantage to the State.

In 1894 he was elected to the State senate of North Carolina for two years, and continued the practice of law until the beginning of the recent war with Spain, when he volunteered and served throughout that war on the staff of Gen. J. Warren Keifer as major and commissary. In November, 1900, he was elected on the Republican ticket to the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Ninth Congressional district of North Carolina, which position he was filling at the time of his death.

The characteristic feature of this brief record of his career is his purpose and unremitting effort to advance himself in obedience to the promptings of an honorable ambition. It is difficult for one unacquainted with the conditions that environed his youth to appreciate the depressing, almost insurmountable obstacles with which he had to contend in his progress upward. The region in which his youth was passed was isolated from the busy, bustling world by the rugged ramparts of the Appalachian Range, and to a certain extent was a terra incognita even to the people of other sections of North Carolina. Hard conditions and hard living were the rule, and the young men of that section who aspired to rise unaided to commanding positions in the eyes of the people of any considerable part of the State could not well exaggerate the seriousness of the undertaking. But young MOODY was of a material as rugged and unyielding as the blue-hazed mountains that, from his infancy, had shut in his horizon from the outer world. An early taste for reading had developed in him aspirations and ideals which the narrow sphere in which he moved and the hard conditions in which his lot seemed to have been cast would alone have scarcely justified. But the fever of a noble ambition was in his blood, and with eye steadily fixed upon the goal at which he aimed, he undauntedly dedicated himself to an unswerving pursuit of the difficult upward path that he had elected to follow. How well he adhered to that purpose is amply revealed by the brief recital I have given of the salient events in his public life.

Among his people those elements of character that make for strength, truth, and justice always attract attention, and when tried and proven they never fail to command general confidence and favor. Singularly modest and unassuming, of manner as gentle as a woman, and with a heart as responsive as that of a child to the griefs of others, this stalwart, kindly-eyed mountaineer grappled to that heart with hooks of steel the unreserved affection of all who came in intimate contact with him. Yet was his amiable and sympathetic nature untainted by any trace of weakness. Never self-assertive in nonessentials, he was as unyielding in the support of the principles in which he believed as the basic rocks of his native hills. It is said of him by those who best knew him that in the several heated political contests in which he actively and successfully engaged as a principal he never lost a friend nor made an enemy.

It would be strange indeed if such a character, so steadfast and true in the observance of his public obligations, should have been otherwise than a devoted husband and father. He was essentially a son of the land of the sky, and, like the eagle, he fretted and chafed when exiled from his mountain home. To him his modest home at Waynesville was the altar at which he worshiped and within its walls were enshrined the objects of his soul's adoration. It was his fondest hope to give to his children advantages which he had been denied, or which, at best, he had but imperfectly enjoyed, and without doubt the bitterest pang he experienced, when realizing that his hours on earth were numbered, was in the thought that those loved ones, so dependent in their weakness, should be bereft of his guiding hand and sheltering affection.

The spectacle of a helpless little brood, hushed and awe-stricken, in the presence of a calamity so dire, the enormity of which their understanding fails fully to comprehend, is one that we are constantly called on to witness; but witness it as often as we may, its recurrence never fails to thrill our hearts with sympathetic emotion and to cause us to marvel at the mystery of our ways—

That are never all in darkness, and are never wholly bright.

Mr. President, there exists in the minds of many worthy people an impression, little short of conviction, that active participation in political life, as we have it in this country, is essentially demoralizing, and that the man who devotes himself to the pursuit of such honors and distinction as constitute its prizes must necessarily suffer more or less moral detriment.

That, unhappily, there have been instances which those who make this contention may cite in its support will not be denied, but such cases are relatively rare, and certainly can not justly cast a smirch on the memory or reputation of the many honored names that adorn our political history.

That political life, like any other sphere in which men contend with each other, presents temptations, which embraced will produce demoralization, is undoubtedly true, but that such temptations are less successfully resisted in the political than in other fields of acute human contention is controverted by the observation and experience of every unprejudiced mind.

The life and career of the subject of this sketch is illustrative of this view. After having won all the honors for which he had striven—and his political contests were always characterized by energy and zealous effort on both sides—he remained the same kindly, unaffected character, the same frank, honest, and outspoken exponent of truth and justice that he was when as a young man he won the respect, esteem, and devotion of the sturdy mountaineers with whom his fortunes were cast. In his make-up there was no alloy, no baser metal that could be marred by the corroding touch of sordid influences.

A modest, unaffected gentleman; a citizen who enjoyed the confidence and personal regard of all classes of his fellow-citizens; a patriot who, at the first peal of the dread tocsin of war, stepped to the front with sword and life dedicated to his country's cause; a representative of his people in the nation's great council, justly conservative, but ever alert to the interests of his constituency, and a husband and father most devoted; his life story, rounded and complete, will ever be an inspiration to those who, disheartened by repressive conditions, yet aspire to the realization of loftier ideals.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to, with the exception of the one relating to adjournment.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE RUMPLE.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives in relation to the death of the late Representative RUMPLE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 22, 1903.

Resolved, That the House now proceed to pay tribute to the memory of Hon. JOHN N. W. RUMPLE, late a Representative in the House from the State of Iowa.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate this resolution to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and is hereby, instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the family of the deceased.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa offers resolutions which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JOHN N. W. RUMPLE, late a Representative from the State of Iowa.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That, as an additional mark of respect, the Senate, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do adjourn.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, in view of the pressure of business in these closing hours of a Congress unusually occupied with important questions, I am sure that the Senate has acted with propriety in appointing this hour in which to consider the public services of JOHN N. W. RUMPLE, late a Representative in Congress, whose death has been so sincerely mourned by his colleagues and friends here and by the people of Iowa at home.

There is an almost tragic significance in the frequency with which the shadow of death has fallen upon the membership of the present Congress. So often has the present House of Representatives been called upon to take notice of the death of a member and to set apart a time for memorial exercises that a departure, at once thoughtful and beautiful, has been made from the customs of the past in the selection of the Sabbath day for those tributes of respect and affection which are never amiss when men honored and famous in the public service fall at their post of duty.

I am glad we have the quiet and peace of the Sabbath in which fittingly to commemorate the character and career of the men out of respect for whose memory these solemn services have been arranged. I had been requested by the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to speak a few words in affectionate remembrance of his colleague, the Hon. Thomas H. Tongue, who suddenly passed away in this city, after a long and distinguished service in the House of Representatives. But before the date arrived in which the memorial could be held the hand of death had fallen upon my own colleague, and the mournful duty was laid upon me to pronounce a eulogy here upon one who was not only my personal friend and associate, but very close to the hearts of the Iowa constituency which had given him a commission to act for it in the House of Representatives.

While his career was cut short before he had completed his first term of service, few men in our State have gained a firmer hold upon the good will of the people or more thoroughly deserved their confidence than Captain RUMPLE.

His death came with a sense of personal loss to all who have served with him here, and throughout the Commonwealth of Iowa his name is spoken with love and gratitude. He was in a high sense a representative of that people—he stood for the State in everything that brings a man into harmony and partnership with the community in which he lives. His life had in it all those elements which give symmetry and dignity to human character. There is in his biography just that succession of tasks well done, that series of modest achievements, that constant progress from strength to strength, which make up a record of usefulness while men live and of affectionate remembrance when they are gone.

The life of such a man is in itself a refutation of every morbid school of social philosophy which seeks to overturn the institutions of society in order to make life worth living and manly effort worth making.

Captain RUMPLE died an honored member of that great popular assembly to which under our institutions the most important interests of the Government are in a peculiar sense committed. He did not live long enough to secure there the position which his talents and his character would have brought to him if his life had been spared. He had the exact qualifications which under the training and discipline of long service would have given him a conspicuous rank among the leaders of the House. He had that poise and equilibrium of faculties, that fine combination of good-fellowship and good sense, which needed only time and experience to be molded into the highest type of leadership.

From a long acquaintance with him I may safely say that he had little ambition for the honors of political life. At any rate there was entirely lacking in his disposition any of that feverish anxiety for the power and distinction of office which so many times turns the arena of our politics into a scramble for place and for spoils. He was selected as the candidate of his party in a district where a nomination is by no means equivalent to an election and at a time when the chances of election were by no means certain, because of his peculiar hold upon the people among whom he lived and on account of those personal characteristics which made him specially available for the contest which was before his party.

While he was a strong partisan, never doubtful in his allegiance, there was in him a breadth of culture and a depth of conviction which always enabled him to accord to others full credit for integrity of purpose and to hold the differences of partisan opinions in an atmosphere of neighborly kindness and good will.

He had a long training in the humbler and less ostentatious affairs of life before he was called to the discharge of the more important duties which belong to citizenship. He was born on a farm in Seneca County, Ohio, on the 4th of March, 1841. A somewhat careful study of the biography of those who have done most to shape the development of our institutions has led me to the conclusion that the American farm home has had more to do with the nurture of those who have made their mark either in public or private life than any other one thing, and possibly than all other things put together. There is a uniformity, a pleasing monotony, in the biography of great men the world over, which has led at least one famous philosopher of our day, Count Tolstoi, to recognize among the laws of nature which express themselves in the progress of society that there is no possible strength either of mind or body or character that does not come up into a man out of plowed ground through his bare feet.

Captain RUMPLE was not born in any abject surroundings of poverty; he was born upon the average level of life where nearly everybody else is born; that level of life which has given to the world men like Lincoln and Grant and Garfield; that level of life which appears to be providentially adapted to the education of every important personal factor in the building of the nation.

His father died while Captain RUMPLE was still a child, and in 1853 his widowed mother, taking counsel of her children and relatives and friends, started out upon a long journey from Fostoria, Ohio, to the land of promise in the mysterious West, that she might make a home for her children and enable them to gain a fair start in life. To my mind there is in that little party of movers, traveling in wagons hundreds of miles to make their home in a new and strange land, a heroism hardly realized now, as we read the simple and uneventful story of their journey. When we reflect upon the hardships which attended the settlement of the frontier and put ourselves in touch with the brave hearts who set out on this errand of civilization, without complaint and without fear, it ought to make us ashamed of the thousand voices of weakness and cowardice which have filled our generation, favored by Heaven above its just deserts, with whimperings of discontent and incoherent protests against the very framework of government and society.

That widowed mother of six children, carrying them in a covered wagon across the States of Ohio and Indiana and Illinois, beyond the Mississippi, to find a home for them, where by toil and sacrifice they could make their way in the world, is a type of a stalwart self-reliance which will be respected among men long after the social reformers of more pretentious times have been dismissed with contempt from the intellectual life of the American people.

The family had not long been in Iowa before young RUMPLE, then a lad of only 12 years, was doing a man's work in opening up a new farm, and while the burdens and labors of making a living were heavy enough, they were not so heavy as to crowd out the desire and purpose of the boy to get an education and increase the field of his opportunities. The State of Iowa was fortunate in the character of its early settlers. They were poor in nothing except money, and that fact in itself has given, I think, to our people a higher ideal of life than could have otherwise been possible; for while the Rumple farm was in a remote and sparsely settled neighborhood, the young man did not have far to go to find a little academy in a neighboring county well situated not only to give him the rudiments of an education, but, what is more important than mere knowledge, the inspiration and ambition which make the student and the thinker.

I do not know what studies he pursued at Ashland Academy, but a year later we find him at one of the pioneer colleges of the State, preparing himself to become a school-teacher. After teaching school for two years he entered the normal department of the State University, studying one term and teaching another, until the summer of 1861, when he laid down his books and gave his name to an enlisting regiment of the Union Army.

This is a short and not uncommon story; nevertheless it will bear examination; and I confess that the more I think about it the more interesting it becomes. It is the story of a young man, without the help of friends or influential connections of any kind, fighting his own way step by step, with a firm grip upon his own resources, asking no odds in the struggle, and quitting it only because he counted his obligation to his country superior to any duty which he owed to himself.

His colleagues in the House of Representatives who were also his comrades in the Union Army have spoken of his military record. He entered the service as a private in Company H, Second Iowa Cavalry, and when the war was over he bore the modest rank of captain, having received his promotions one by one for gallantry in the field. I look upon Captain RUMPLE'S four years' service in the Union Army as the noblest chapter in his biography. He had the opportunity that comes to the youth of the nation only once, it may be, in a century—the opportunity of helping defend the life of the Republic. To have been permitted to bear even an humble part in the national defense was in itself a title of distinction and a crown of glory. He was only one of more than a million men, nearly all of them enlisted from the humbler walks of life, yet every one of them has a share in the victory of the nation, and every name of the Grand Army is a part of the history of the world.

The record of such a life is complete even if after the war was over he had fallen back to the lowly surroundings from which he came; nor could any possible subsequent achievement overshadow these four immortal years.

Not many months ago I stood with multiplied thousands of his countrymen by the grave of one whose career until the last twenty years of his life, was almost an exact counterpart of the life of Captain RUMPLE—a country boy, a student at a village academy, a district school-teacher, a Union soldier entering as a private and coming out with the rank of major, a lawyer at the county seat, a Representative in Congress—faithful in all the little things within his sphere of duty. He afterwards rose to supreme influence in the councils of his country, and when he died the sorrow of the world was mingled with the pomp and ceremony of his funeral. But when I saw the worn and feeble remnant of his old regiment drawn up as a guard of honor about his tomb I did not even look at the glittering pageantry with which the nation had surrounded the closing scene of that great life; for there is no station in the world so high, there is no coronation of fame so splendid, that it can make the uniform of the Grand Army of the Republic seem insignificant or out of place.

Captain RUMPLE began the study of law after his regiment was mustered out, having only the advantages that come to a student in a prosperous law office at his own home. It is not certain, after all, that even the best-equipped law schools can do as much toward the education of a lawyer as can be done under favorable circumstances in an office where practice of the law is a part of the course of study.

However this may be, it is certain that Captain RUMPLE very rapidly developed into one of the profoundest lawyers and most sagacious advocates at the Iowa bar. His method of study was characterized not only by diligence, but by thoroughness, and when he was admitted to the bar he became the partner of his instructor and began a professional career marked by conspicuous distinction and success.

As an advocate trying cases in the community where his lot had been cast from his youth up, he had the advantages which always belong to character and high standards of conduct. The people trusted him, believed in him, sought his counsel, committed their interests to his hands, and during the period of his active practice of the law his name was creditably associated with much of the important litigation in his own and surrounding counties.

While he was engrossed with the cares of an arduous profession, he was never oblivious to the duties of citizenship. In politics he was an ardent Republican, giving generous attention to public affairs, and never without active interest in the concerns of his party and in the business of the State.

In 1873 he was chosen a senator, and served in the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth general assemblies of the State. He was a persuasive public speaker, and no campaign passed without this active participation in discussions before the people. He was faithful in his discharge of the everyday business of citizenship. The last time he was seen by his townsmen upon the street was at the recent election in November, when, though his body was racked with pain, and he knew that his time was short, according to his lifelong custom, he went to the polls to cast his vote.

During the years of his professional activity, while he sought no office, he was chosen for many important public services, mostly of a nonpartisan character, to which he gave patient and careful attention. He was a member of the board of regents of the State University, and curator of the State Historical Society, and from time to time, when his neighbors and fellow-citizens requested his services, he did not look upon it as beneath his dignity to become a member of the school board or the city council and mayor of the town in which he lived.

While these offices of trust, without salary, did not distract his attention from his duties as a lawyer in active practice, they serve to illustrate the manner of man he was, and explain in a measure, at least, the strong hold which he acquired upon the community in which he had resided nearly all his life.

He was elected to Congress in 1900 in a district notable in Iowa for its hard-fought political battles, and would have been renominated and reelected if the disease which soon broke down his strong constitution had not already warned him that the time of his departure was at hand.

In all the relations of life Captain RUMPLE exemplified the law of Christian living. He was identified with the Presbyterian Church and gave to its work and service a helpful spirit and a loyal devotion. There is no stain upon the life of this man. He died among the neighbors and friends of a lifetime, in the community to which his mother had brought him as a boy with the pioneers of Iowa.

The love and confidence of the people, which he enjoyed while he lived, were illustrated by the universal grief which followed the news of his fatal sickness. With courageous heart he had met and conquered the difficulties and hardships of life; with patient fortitude he bore the afflictions of disease; death had no terrors for this old soldier; the future no shadows for this man of humble Christian faith.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, on the wall in my study there hangs a picture of a well-developed and happy infant, balanced on a sea shell, floating upon a smooth surface of water. Falling full on the figure from the sky is a flood of brilliant light, while in the distance from where the shell boat seems to have floated there is only impenetrable darkness; on the other side of the picture, toward which the little craft is floating, there is not one ray of light. I have often thought this picture a symbol of life. We come out of darkness into the light and after a brief time enter the shadows again. Humanity through all the ages has looked backward and forward trying to penetrate the sable curtain which separates us from the past and the future. "I want to know" trembles upon the lips of youth, manhood, and old age. Every one would know his origin and his destiny, but, alas, the longings of the soul can not be satisfied. From the realm of shadows no voice comes to us. No sublunary light reveals either the stage of our former or our future existence. Something there is within that makes us feel and know that we are immortal, but beyond that faith we can not go. It is this ignorance of the future that gives to death its greatest terror. The separation from loved ones is hard to bear, but not to know when and where we meet again is the appalling thought that comes to the stoutest heart in facing the king of terrors. But if we can not tell with certainty what our lot will be in the future life we all believe—do we not know—that our condition there depends in a measure upon our acts here. As goodness is rewarded and wickedness is punished here, so we are taught to believe it is the same on the other side of the river.

I never knew personally the deceased Hon. J. N. W. RUMPLE. I am told by those who did know him that he was a good man; that the talent given him had been used in every relation of life to the very best advantage; as a farmer's boy performing the hard labor in the field; as a youthful soldier bearing bravely and gallantly the burdens of the march and in battle, rising through gradations from the ranks to important command; and later as a citizen respected by all as a solid, sensible country lawyer, grounded in the principles and practices of his profession, trusted by his clients; as a politician in the highest, purest, and best sense of the term he bore himself bravely and well. That is all that was required by the Master. When summoned for an accounting he was ready, and let us all hope and believe that he heard the cheering words as he landed on the other shore, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, in the death of JOHN NICHOLAS WILLIAM RUMPLE the State of Iowa loses a leading lawyer and a useful citizen, and the nation loses a careful, painstaking, and intelligent legislator. Captain RUMPLE—well known throughout the State by this title—was a splendid example of that type of self-made men who rise from humble surroundings, against adverse circumstances, to positions of great usefulness, honor, and responsibility.

He was born, as my colleague has stated, on a farm in Ohio on the 4th of March, 1841, and his early boyhood was spent in that State. At the age of 10 his father died, and two years later we find this sturdy boy, in company with a number of relatives, making the overland trip in a wagon from Ohio to Iowa with his mother and five other children. They settled on a farm in Iowa County, one of the interior counties near the center of the State, which continued to be his home from that time until his death. The settled portions of the State then bordered on the Des Moines and Mississippi rivers and Iowa County was sparsely populated. There was no railway communication, the wagon roads were few and no markets within many miles, so that the products of the farm could only find a market at Muscatine or Davenport, then small towns on the Mississippi River nearly 100 miles distant.

The community in which this family settled was at that time practically without schools, but young RUMPLE, blessed with a noble mother, lost no opportunity to acquire the rudiments of an education in this humble home, having there instilled into his mind pure morality, the fear of God, and the teachings of Christianity. In this sparsely settled region, with only scattered villages, and with these few opportunities, were molded that uprightness of character and loyalty to duty which became marked traits of his manhood, and which served to guide him through his eventful life.

A few years later this portion of Iowa was rapidly settled by hardy and sturdy men and women from the older States, and, fortunately for him, the farm upon which he was reared was in the midst of a congenial and intelligent population and in near proximity to the capital of the State, then at Iowa City, which became the seat of the new State University. At the age of 16 he attended a private academy in a neighboring county, and later became a student at a recently established college in the adjacent county of Linn, and still later at the State University. To enable him thus to extend his education, he alternately taught school during the winter months and attended to his studies during the spring and fall terms.

At the age of 20 he enlisted as a soldier in the Second Iowa Cavalry and served with this regiment during its long and perilous career, covering the entire period of the civil war. This regiment was constantly engaged at the front and was in many sharp conflicts and battles in the South and West, from New Madrid and the siege of Corinth to the battle of Nashville. All his comrades testify that Captain RUMPLE during this long period was a brave and fearless and ideal soldier, always at the post of duty.

After four years of this difficult and arduous military service, he was mustered out as a captain at the age of 24 years. He returned to his home and at once entered upon the study of law at Marengo, and two years later was admitted to the bar. From that time until his election to Congress he was in the active and successful practice of his profession. His steadiness of purpose, his devotion to every duty assigned to him, and his spotless integrity soon won for him the confidence, esteem, and affection of all those with whom he came in contact, and he advanced rapidly in the profession.

He took an active part and a deep interest in the public affairs of his county and State and contributed largely to the growth and development of the State, holding many positions of honor and trust, and he was especially devoted to its educational interests. He was for many years prominent in both houses of the general assembly of Iowa. In the early seventies he was elected to the State senate and served there with distinction, acquring a wide reputation as an able and useful legislator. He became curator of the State Historical Society, and for a long time was one of the board of regents of the State University. Thus he early became a valued and valuable counselor as respects all the great affairs of the youthful and rapidly growing State of his adoption.

Nearly twenty years ago he was put forward as a candidate of the Republican party for Congress in what was then the Fifth district of Iowa, and lacked only one vote of being nominated in a district then largely Republican. Soon after, by a new apportionment his county was included in the Second district, and he was not again a candidate until 1900, when the Republican convention of that district unanimously named him as its candidate for Congress. Though for some years it had been carried by the Republicans it was regarded as the closest district politically in Iowa, being considered in doubt during the canvass which followed his nomination. But after a contest of great activity, when the votes were cast and counted, it was found that he had a good majority.

It is pathetic to record that before he had taken his seat in Congress he was seized with a fatal malady, and death had cast its ominous shadow across his pathway. Owing to this malady he was able to serve in the House of Representatives only during the first session of this Congress, not being well enough to appear in his seat at the commencement of the present session. During this period of his service, though brief, he demonstrated his ability, notwithstanding his physical infirmity, to achieve success for his district and for the people of Iowa in the large field of national legislation. He gave close attention to the details of the tasks assigned to him, and made many friends in the House, as it was early seen that he possessed the qualities of a successful legislator, being always safe and conservative, a man of good judgment, and having a wide knowledge of public affairs.

Patient, persevering, and diligent, he found no pleasure so great as the pleasure of serving his friends and doing good wherever and whenever he had an opportunity. He was an honest and honorable man in the highest and truest sense. In his personal relations he was kind and true-hearted, steadfast and loyal to every duty, true to friends, and harbored no resentments against those who, for any reason, differed from him.

He was especially fond of the comrades with whom he served during the civil war, and greatly enjoyed the annual regimental and brigade reunions, and he was known personally to the surviving soldiers with whom he had served. All these will deeply deplore his separation from them by his untimely death. The affection and esteem in which he was held by them was also shared by the great body of the people of Iowa, who knew him well and who likewise deplore his death.

It was my fortune to know him well for more than thirty years, and during all this period, without interruption, he was my personal friend. He was in the Iowa senate when I was first elected to this body. Early in our acquaintance I became strongly attached to him because of his manly traits, his fidelity to friends, and his generous treatment of those who were personally or politically opposed to him. This attachment and friendship continued until his death, and I much regretted that my duties here prevented me from following him to his last resting place, that I might thus give token of my friendship and affection for him during his life. His death is to me a personal grief and loss.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolutions presented by my colleague, with the exception of the one relating to adjournment.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE TONGUE.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions of the House in memory of the late Representative TONGUE, of Oregon, be now laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 22, 1903.

Resolved, That in pursuance of the special order heretofore adopted, the House proceed to pay tribute to the memory of Hon. THOMAS H. TONGUE, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Oregon.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. THOMAS H. TONGUE, late a Representative from the State of Oregon.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tribute may be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect the Senate, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do adjourn.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the practice which has long obtained in the Congress of tendering public tribute to the memory of departed members is both appropriate and beautiful. These ceremonials are, however, liable to be, and sometimes are, marred and shorn of their appropriateness and worth by exaggerated encomium. Our zeal in desiring to speak well of a friend is liable to tempt us to indulge in unwarranted phrase in his praise. Not unmindful of this, it is my purpose in the few words I am about to say to adhere strictly to the truth as I understand it and avoid anything like fulsome eulogy. A true, unvarnished statement of the characteristics, of the life work, public and private, of THOMAS H. TONGUE is the highest meed that can be tendered his memory, and all that could be desired by the loved ones he left behind or by his most ardent and devoted friend.

THOMAS H. TONGUE, late Representative in Congress from the First district of the State of Oregon, was born in England, June 23, 1844, and passed suddenly into the other life at his Washington residence on Sunday, the 11th day of January, 1903, at 1 o'clock p. m., in the presence of his daughter and other members of his family.

He came with his parents to this country and located in Washington County, Oreg., November 23, 1859, nine months after the admission of Oregon as a State, that being his home until the date of his death. He was of poor, but highly respected parentage, and personally worked on a farm evenings and mornings to secure means to carry him through school and university.

As indicating his disposition and habits at this period of his life, I beg to quote the following, from an interview given at the time of his death by Hon. Benton Killin, of Portland, Oreg., a leading lawyer of the State, and a classmate in the university with Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Killin said:

The news of Mr. TONGUE's death was a great shock to me. When I was mustered out of the Army at the close of the war, I went to Pacific University to get some training, and found Mr. TONGUE there ahead of me. We were in the same class together, and have been close together ever since. At that time he was no dawdler. He knew what he wanted and how he was going to accomplish it. Evenings, mornings, and Saturdays he grubbed on oak grubs for Deacon Naylor, and earned his way through college in that way, and all through life he knew how to clean away the weeds, moss, and earth and get down to the taproot of things. He was a hard man to try a case against, full of resources—"though beaten, could argue still."

He graduated from the Pacific University, at Forest Grove, Oreg., in June, 1868; was admitted to the bar at Salem in 1870, and became at once an active and successful practitioner in his profession at Hillsboro, Washington County, Oreg. He continued in the active practice of his profession, so far as permitted, consistent with the performance of official duties, throughout his life. He also engaged largely in farming and the raising of live stock. He was a great lover of a fine horse and never happier than when the conversation turned to the horse. He bred some of the finest live stock, both horses and cattle, on the Pacific coast.

His first active participation in politics was at the June election in Oregon in 1888, at which time he was elected a member of the State senate for a term of four years. During this service he served as chairman of the judiciary committee. He at once came to the front as an industrious member and a ready, convincing debater. In 1890 he was made chairman of the State Republican convention. From 1892 to 1894 he served as president of the State organization of Republican clubs; was a delegate to the Republican national convention at Minneapolis in 1892, and was the Oregon vice-president of that convention.

Again in 1894 he was made permanent chairman of the State Republican convention, and was a member of the State central committee for ten years, from 1886 to 1896, and chairman of the Republican Congressional committee of his district from the time of its organization until his nomination as a member of the Fifty-fifth Congress. He was elected to the Fifty-fifth, Fifty-sixth, and Fifty-seventh Congresses, and was also in June last reelected to the Fifty-eighth Congress. As evidencing the great satisfaction of his constituents with which he served his district, his plurality was increased at each election as follows: At his first election his plurality was 63; at the second, 2,090; at the third, 3,100; and at the fourth, 7,318.

Although a native of England, every fiber of his composition was American; although, in common with those who entertain that laudable sentiment held by every true man, he cherished with becoming reverence the land of his nativity, yet in all that pertains to the upbuilding and perpetuity of republican institutions, the development and promotion of political principles and republican government, he was essentially and uncompromisingly an American, and in his whole public career the fact of the accident of foreign birth was lost sight of in his uniform and able advocacy of, and devotion to the great fundamental principles of the Government of the land of his adoption.

It must, without indulging in fulsome encomium, be said that THOMAS H. TONGUE was an able man. The web and woof of his mental make-up were of strong and inflexible texture. His natural attainments were of a character far above the average, even of our public men. He was, moreover, a man of culture. He was a university graduate, a close student of the world's literature and of the political institutions of this and other countries. He came, therefore, to the performance of his public duties more than ordinarily thoroughly equipped for their energetic and faithful performance. Although more scholarly in attainments than many others who are more demonstrative in their public display of these qualities, he was modest, unassuming, and entirely free from anything of a pedantic nature. While it could not properly be said of him that he was brilliant as an orator, it can be truly said he was able and convincing in debate, and pleasing and attractive as a public speaker.

As a representative of the people he was untiring in his efforts to accomplish for them every possible good. He was remarkably successful in guarding, protecting, and promoting their interests. He was, from his first entrance into the arena of politics, an uncompromising Republican and an able advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican party.

As a lawyer THOMAS H. TONGUE stood in the front rank of his profession in his adopted State. As a successful advocate before both court and jury he had but few equals and no superior. He was held in the highest esteem by both bench and bar. In his death the bar of the State of Oregon loses one of its most distinguished and honored members.

In an interview at the time of his death Chief Justice F. A. Moore, of the supreme court of the State of Oregon, said:

My acquaintance with Mr. TONGUE began twenty-five years ago when we met as attorneys, and that acquaintance ripened when we served in the legislature together. His death is a great shock to me. As an attorney he had few equals; as a debater he had no superior. It will be very difficult to find anyone who can fill his place.

Bearing upon the question as to the estimate of his ability and attainments entertained by leading men of his State, and the great esteem in which he was universally held, I beg to submit the following quotations from a few of the many interviews given out at the time of his death:

Hon. T. T. Geer, then governor of the State, in an interview, said:

Few things could have happened that could have caused more profound regret in every household in Oregon than the death of Representative TONGUE. Its unexpectedness has but added to the shock. I regarded Mr. TONGUE as one of the ablest men in the State, and certainly he had few superiors as an entertaining and attractive public speaker. In point of ability he easily ranked above 75 per cent of the members of Congress, and his influence there was equal to his ability. His death is a distinctive loss to the State.

Hon. George C. Brownell, president of the Oregon State senate, said:

I am exceedingly grieved to learn of the sudden death of Hon. THOMAS H. TONGUE, and view it as a personal loss on account of my personal friendship for the man. Mr. TONGUE was a man of decided ability, and most earnest, untiring, and successful in his efforts for the State he so ably represented. He was a very strong man and a rising man. His position in Congress was safe for many years had he lived. His late speech on the irrigation question undoubtedly increased his reputation and showed that he was a man of much ability and great force.

Hon. L. T. Harris, speaker of the house of representatives of Oregon, said:

Mr. TONGUE'S sudden death came as a shock to his wide circle of immediate friends. By untiring industry and native ability Mr. TONGUE acquired a prominent standing and great influence as a member of the National House of Representatives. His public career has been a credit to himself and an honor to the State. His death is deplored.

Senator R. A. Booth said:

His energy, ability, and worth were recognized by Congress, and he was an important factor in its decisions. Among Oregon's Representatives he has never been excelled. The knowledge of his worth has widened with the years of his service. The loss is irreparable.

Representative Frank Davey said:

I knew Mr. TONGUE well and intimately in all relations of life. He was a good man and citizen. He was the ablest debater in Oregon. He was an able and valuable Congressman from the start, and he had now reached a position of influence and respect in Congress which makes his death an irreparable loss.

Representative B. L. Eddy said:

Oregon mourns the death of one of her greatest citizens and statesmen. The success of his career was due to his persevering efforts in everything he undertook and to his high standard of morality. He died in the service of his State.

Senator B. F. Mulkey said:

THOMAS H. TONGUE taught the young men of this State that energy and a good degree of talent must triumph over obstacles. As a Congressman he was thorough, keen, and effective in committee and in debate, and was a tower of strength for Oregon at Washington, and his loss from the Rivers and Harbors Committee at this time is an irreparable loss to the State.

Hon. C. W. Fulton, United States Senator-elect, said:

I consider Mr. TONGUE'S death one of the greatest losses this State has ever sustained. No abler man ever represented Oregon nor, indeed, in my judgment, the Pacific coast. His death was particularly unfortunate, because of the fact that he had secured a very strong position in the House of Representatives not only upon important committees, but in the way of influence, because of his recognized ability. As for myself I feel in his death a personal loss, for he was my friend for many years, a friend whom I ever found earnest, sincere, and manly, and I profoundly regret his untimely death, both from a personal standpoint and the public welfare.

The Oregon State senate, of which years ago Mr. TONGUE was an honored member, on February 20 of this year, just prior to its final adjournment, unanimously adopted and placed upon its record the following resolutions:

Whereas Hon. THOMAS H. TONGUE, Representative from the First district of Oregon in the Congress of the United States, died at Washington, D. C., January 11, 1903: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate of the State of Oregon—

First. That in his death the nation has lost a patriot whose voice was uplifted in behalf of the common people; the State an advocate who was ever vigilant in guarding its welfare and in advocating its interest; his friends a companion whose wise counsel and hearty cheer stimulated vigorous action and encouraged manly effort; his family a loving husband and a kind father, whose upright life affords a model for their guidance, and whose interest in their welfare was measured only by his ability.

Second. He possessed strong reasoning power, a sound judgment, a capacious and retentive memory, a vigorous and comprehensive understanding, which entitled him to a high place in the counsels of his fellow-men. He was a prodigious brain-worker, indefatigable in energy and tireless in all his efforts, by which he mastered the details of every subject which engaged his attention. From the time of his admission to the bar he took high rank as a lawyer. In this senate he was one of the leaders, and in the Congress his influence was widely felt. In every station he occupied he was one of the leaders and always took high rank. His sudden death has caused widespread mourning among his friends, who are legion, and to his family irreparable loss.

Third. We tender to his bereaved wife and children our sincere sympathy.

Fourth. That a copy of this resolution be spread on the journal of the senate and a copy be transmitted to his widow by the chief clerk of the senate.

The high esteem in which Representative TONGUE was held by the people of Oregon, irrespective of party, and the great sorrow with which his sudden departure overwhelmed them, was made plainly manifest at his funeral. The people of the State from all sections came en masse, by numerous special trains and other modes of conveyance, to the place of sepulture. The legislature of the State, the State officials, the county officials of nearly every county in the State, were in attendance. Numerous benevolent societies, a number of which he was an honored member, were present. Being a Mason of high degree he was buried with Masonic honors. Business throughout the State was suspended, and universal sorrow saddened the hearts of all the people. No such tribute was ever before tendered the memory of any citizen of Oregon.

At the session of the Oregon legislature of 1895 Mr. TONGUE was one of the several prominent candidates for United States Senator to succeed Senator Dolph, and on one ballot he received 33 votes, 13 less than the necessary number to an election. This contest ended by the election of Hon. George W. McBride at midnight of the last day of the session. Although not a candidate, his name was being widely and favorably discussed at the time of his death in connection with the election of United States Senator by the legislature that met the day succeeding his death.

Mr. TONGUE, in addition to his practice as a lawyer and his public duties, took a deep interest in various enterprises in his State. He was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Hillsboro, serving as one of its directors.

Mr. TONGUE was a Past Master Mason. In 1888 he served as State Orator, and in that year delivered the oration before the grand lodge. He also took an active interest in Odd Fellowship. He was also a member of the Grange in his home town.

In all the affairs of life worldly interests are ever coming to the front with their selfish suggestions, and even in the presence of death, and before the opening tomb they will not down, and hence it is we, in this solemn hour, are reminded of the incalculable loss to the State in the death of THOMAS H. TONGUE. But even this consideration is a high tribute to the memory of the dead. With a public record of which all the people of the State, irrespective of party, are justly proud, he had been commissioned by a very largely increased majority to continue as one of their public servants in the Fifty-eighth Congress.

This fourth election was a well-deserved compliment, a just recognition of faithful and efficient public service. No Representative from any State was ever more industrious or more watchful of the interests of his State or more alert in guarding at all points and at all times the rights and interests of the people he so ably represented. His successful services as a member of the River and Harbor Committee of the House of Representatives in procuring needful appropriations for our rivers and harbors, not only of Oregon, but of the whole country, can not be overestimated and will not soon be forgotten.

To him as chairman of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands is largely due the House legislation of last session of Congress upon the all-important subject of the irrigation of arid lands, while his indefatigable labors in securing passage through the House of the bill pensioning the Indian war veterans must stand forever as a bright jewel in his official record, and tears of affection and gratitude will attest the love of these grizzled and grateful veterans so long as any of them are permitted to live. Truly the State of Oregon in the death of THOMAS H. TONGUE has lost an able, faithful, and efficient Representative, her people a loyal, devoted friend.

Mr. TONGUE was a charming personality. He was devoted and constant in his friendships, unyielding in his loyalty to friends, uncompromising in his fidelity to every personal and political obligation. No consideration of personal or political advantage or preferment could induce him to swerve a hairsbreadth from the line of his convictions. His personal integrity was never questioned. The legacy, public and private, he has left to his family is free from blot or stain. His public career, so suddenly brought to an end by Him "Who doeth all things well," was, in so far as he was permitted to pursue it, a complete success. From the day he entered upon his duties as a member of the Fifty-fifth Congress until summoned to a higher life, he gradually and rapidly grew in influence, in the respect of his associates, and in the power to command results in the interest of his State and of the nation. As a member of two among the most important committees of the House of Representatives he was in a position to, and did, accomplish much of great benefit to his constituents.

Mr. TONGUE was a man of untiring industry. He never faltered, even before seemingly insurmountable obstacles, in honorable and earnest effort to accomplish his purpose. He was of that class who believe that "life without industry is guilt." He was ever ready to sacrifice personal comfort to advance the interests of his constituents as a whole, or to do a personal favor for the most humble of the number. Throughout Oregon to-day many hearts are weeping and many eyes are moist with tears in grief over the sudden death of their honored representative.

Although suddenly stricken down in the prime of life and in the apparent noonday of a most honorable and successful public career, and when still higher honors seemed beckoning to him from the future, Cicero's aphorism that "No one has lived a short life who has performed its duties with unblemished character" is truly applicable to THOMAS H. TONGUE. The nobility of a man's life can not be measured by the number of its years. Good deeds, virtuous acts, rather than white hairs or length of days, tell the true history of a man's life, and present an accurate record of his real character. "They only have lived long," says Sheridan, "who have lived virtuously."

Mr. TONGUE left to mourn his departure an aged father and mother, a widow and seven children; two boys and five girls. The elder son, E B. Tongue, is a rising and successful lawyer in Hillsboro, Oreg, while his father's namesake, Thomas H. Tongue, jr., is now preparing for the law as a student at the Columbian University in this city. His daughter Edith is the wife of Hon. A. E. Reames, a prominent lawyer of Jacksonville, Oreg.; Elizabeth is the wife of Frank F. Freeman, one of the leading members of the bar of Portland, Oreg.; the other three accomplished daughters, Misses Mary, Bertha, and Florence, are unmarried, residing at home.

In the death of THOMAS H. TONGUE I have experienced a great personal loss. For more than a generation we were intimate personal and political friends. In all my numerous political contests he was always my able, invaluable ally, my cordial, efficient supporter, my devoted, uncompromising friend. With a heart full of tears and overwhelmed with sorrow, I mourn the sudden transition of my departed friend, and my heart goes out in deep sympathy to his bereaved and sorrow-stricken widow and children.

"They who go feel not the pain of parting; it is they who stay behind that suffer."

Friend after friend departs.
Who hath not lost a friend?
There is no union here of hearts
That finds not here an end.
Were this frail world our only rest,
Living and dying, none were blest.

But, thanks to an All-wise Power, we are consoled with the thought and the abiding belief that "this frail world" is not "our only rest."

This world is not conclusion.
The sequel lies beyond,
Invisible as music,
But positive as sound.

Answering the "one clear call," our friend has "crossed the bar." His bark has gone "out to sea," but what a glorious realization it is, what a comfort and consolation the thought, that what is called death is not the end, but the beginning, of life. It does not mean oblivion, but a glorious immortality. "Death," the poet tells us, "is the gate of life." It is but the disrobing of the mortal garments and the taking on of the beautiful, the splendid, the imperishable habiliments of eternal life. It is the transition from a life of sorrow and care, of sickness and of death, to one of transcendent peace, of eternal rest, of endless life.

His day is come, not gone;
His sun is risen, not set;
His life is now beyond
The reach of death or change—
Not ended, but begun.

Every soul, which since the beginning of time has been clothed with the destructible habiliments of this mortal life, has, as I believe, an inalienable, an indefeasible, title to an immortal existence in the spirit world, and there among that innumerable host of immortals I confidently hope and expect some day to seek out and grasp the hand of my departed friend.

Life's a short summer, man a flower;
He dies—alas! how soon he dies!

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, it is a melancholy pleasure to me to have the opportunity of paying a humble tribute to the memory of the distinguished man who is the subject of these resolutions. I knew him for a longer period, probably, than any member in either House of Congress except his two colleagues in this Chamber. My acquaintance with him began in the year 1884. He was then in the active practice of his profession, which was that of the law, and if he was not the foremost in his State in that noble profession, he was easily amongst the foremost. To say this of one is to say much, because it implies in him uncommon learning, exceptional intellect, and a moral integrity beyond question or suspicion.

No one not favored with these endowments, and with all of them, can become eminent in the legal profession anywhere. Mr. TONGUE possessed all of them and more. Of a modest and retiring disposition, he yet possessed a conscience which impelled him to come forward and a courage which enabled him to do so when private wrong suffered or public injury inflicted cried out for a champion to plead their cause. He was a tribune of the people, but not distinguished alone as a scourge of wrong. He had a kind, generous, and charitable heart and a mind quick and ardent to act on its impulses.

He was as kindly as he was brave, and many are left to testify to a tender sympathy and a generous support characteristic of the man.

Such a man would have been strong in any community. Such a man was doubly strong in that pioneer community in the Far West, to which our departed friend had gone as a little boy, had grown to manhood, and had lived in honor and repute to the day of his death, because it is in such a community that life presents its simplest problems and calls oftenest and most earnestly for the exercise of the primitive and fundamental virtues. So that when I first knew him—now nearly twenty years ago, as my neighbor across the line in the State of Oregon—he was not only eminent in his profession in that State and in my own, but he was an admitted leader among his fellows of all professions and avocations, carrying with him the honor, respect, and affection of all.

He came to Congress rather late in life. This was not because of tardy recognition by his neighbors of his virtues and abilities, but because his private life was full of usefulness and of honor and answered all the aspirations of his modest and unassuming nature. The distinction of public life was not necessary to his happiness, and he sought it not. But it finally and inevitably sought him, and he answered its call as he had throughout all his arduous life answered every call to useful and noble endeavor made upon his energies and abilities by his fellows. Had he lived he would have attained marked distinction in the public life of the nation. As it was, during the comparatively short duration of his Congressional service he reached a position of power and influence among his fellows of the House of Representatives which easily entitled him to be called one of the leaders of that body.

He brought to the performance of his duties there the same energy and ability and learning, the same conscientious devotion to duty, and the same courage in its performance which had always characterized his private life and marked him as one to whom public distinction must necessarily come in this land where the only title deeds to preeminence are high moral and intellectual powers and attainments.

His private virtues were as great as his public life at home and in this Capitol was useful and distinguished. He was a loving husband, a kind and indulgent father, a true friend, a brave, chivalric, Christian gentleman. But he is with us no more. He has passed to that mansion house whose portals open only to the approaching guest, giving to those of us who look no glimpse of that which is beyond and leaving behind only a memory of the guest they have sheltered. We are all traveling the same road, and must tread the mysterious halls of that final abode.

That it will be found to be a mansion of light and life and love Christian faith teaches us to believe, and a mysterious something in the inner consciousness of all mankind, Christian and heathen alike, confirms that belief. At any rate our fathers and mothers before us have trod the road and passed the portals with faith and courage, and why should not we? That our departed friend did so we know. That he has entered on the reward of a life on earth well and nobly spent we believe.

With that knowledge and that belief we take leave of his person as of "one that wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams."

But the memory of his personality will remain with us through life, and the impuls eof that personality, speaking out for good through countless ages like the ever-widening circle caused by the agitation of a silent pool, not only causes it to continue to live on earth, but gives evidence of a high design and purpose which is the most convincing proof that it continues to live in the great beyond. Since we then must soon tread the road that he has trod and are prepared to face the dawn of the new and better day with the same joyful hope and confidence, we cry to our friend through the mist and across the gulf in the confident belief that he may hear our cry, not farewell, but au revoir.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, in the death of Hon. THOMAS H. TONGUE, representing the First Congressional district of the State of Oregon, Congress has lost one of its most active, useful, and respected members, and the country a man devoted to its best interests. In reviewing the career of this distinguished citizen of one of the great Pacific States, we, although we have in mind all the facts, can hardly fail of surprise at the vast changes that occurred during his comparatively short life.

When Mr. TONGUE was born, in 1844, the territory of the United States did not reach to the Pacific. California was Mexican, and Alaska Russian. The strip between the California and Alaska boundaries was in dispute between the United States and Great Britain. British subjects controlled the trade of the Columbia River, and British settlements were found at very many places throughout the disputed territory. It was not until the year immediately preceding Mr. TONGUE'S birth that there was within this entire region any American influence of consequence. But at this time large bodies of Americans, traveling overland, marched down the valley of the Columbia, and made it manifest by long rifles that American interests had come to stay. It was not until Mr. TONGUE was 2 years old that the territory comprising the populous State of Oregon, which he was in part to represent in the Congress of the United States, became in fact American by the treaty with Great Britain fixing the disputed boundary at the forty-ninth degree of north latitude. Not until then did the wild regions explored by the intrepid Lewis and Clark come under the protection of the American flag.

The Americanization of the Pacific coast began, it may be said, the year Mr. TONGUE was born. The immigrants from the States had then established themselves, and from that time American energy and resourcefulness began to make themselves felt. In four years after the boundary question was settled there were over 13,000 Americans in the Columbia River region, and at the time when Mr. TONGUE, a boy of 9 years of age, first saw Oregon it had a population of about 50,000. The very year that he reached this far Western outpost of the United States Oregon became itself a State, and all its subsequent growth and development took place beneath his eyes.

During Mr. TONGUE'S boyhood and early manhood Oregon was practically isolated from the rest of the world. The ocean traffic of the Atlantic States was with Europe or with China and India. An occasional vessel would take the long voyage around the Horn to California or Oregon for a cargo of hides, or later ships might come up from Australia or over from Canton to take wheat to Liverpool. But of sea-borne foreign commerce Oregon had practically none. Yet the sea was the only practicable outlet for trade, the State being shut off by mountain ranges from the Missouri Valley on the east and from California on the south. Still through this period of Mr. TONGUE'S life the State steadily grew in population and new industries added constantly to its wealth. Where, in 1844, there was practically a wilderness, in which the brutish Indian, described by Lewis and Clark, outnumbered the civilized Caucasian, schools and colleges were established, and young TONGUE in them received an education which later made him a power in public life. Though he became a lawyer and entered zealously into the practice of his profession, he was one of those who assisted practically in developing the resources and adding to the industries of the new State. When he was 6 years old Oregon produced only 7,400 tons of cereals. Fifty years later it produced nearly 600,000 tons, and in this enormous increase the influence of Mr. TONGUE was not lightly felt.

Mr. TONGUE was just entering upon middle life when the isolation of his State was broken by the advent of that great promoter of growth and civilization—the railroad. First the Northern Pacific blasted its way through the Rocky Mountains. Later came the Northern Pacific and Union Pacific from the East, and the Southern Pacific from California, and Oregon for the first time found itself in actual touch with the world. It was about this time that Mr. TONGUE began to take an active interest in public affairs, which led him through the senate of his own State to the Congress of the United States.

At the time he was elected a Representative from the First Congressional district of Oregon the people of that State looked eastward for their business future. To the East, over the iron rails, or around the Horn by steamship, went the products of the State, for in the East and Europe were the markets. But before Mr. TONGUE'S first term expired there had occurred a revolution in public opinion as to where Oregon's future lay. Suddenly and without warning all eyes were turned from the East toward the West, from the populous States of the Mississippi Valley and the Atlantic seaboard to China and Japan.

The planting of the American flag on an Asiatic island at once made clear to all men that in the Orient are the markets that must eventually absorb the surplus products of the Pacific coast. Between Asia, with its hundreds of millions of consumers, and the western coast of the United States, which, when Mr. TONGUE was born, was practically a wilderness, there seemed to be created a commercial bond by the mere fact that Americans had established themselves on the Asiatic side of the Pacific. The energy, the enterprise, and the capital of the people were at once turned from the East to the West. The Pacific Ocean suddenly seemed to become narrower. New steamship lines were established, and still more were projected; trade connectious were made in China and Japan; business arrangements were entered into with reference to the development of oriental traffic, and the first step toward realizing that long dream of a trans-Pacific cable was taken when a line to the Hawaiian Islands was opened.

All these vast changes occurred during the five years that elapsed from the time Mr. TONGUE took his seat in the House until his death. They were years during which occurred great events, not the least of which is the awakening of the world of trade to the realization of the vast prizes which Asiatic nations hold out to commerce. The western shore of our continent begins to exhibit the activity, bustle, and energy of the eastern. All energy is exerted on westward lines across the Pacific, and the great ocean which, when Mr. TONGUE first took his seat in Congress, was looked upon as a barrier to prosperity, is now regarded as the blessed means whereby increased prosperity can be secured.

As commerce by sea has received an impetus which will soon bring the Pacific Ocean under the control of the United States, there was made evident the necessity for the improvement of the harbors of the coast, and in this work Mr. TONGUE took an eager interest and an active part. As a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors he had to deal with questions that vitally concerned the future of trans-Pacific commerce. Realizing fully the importance of proper facilities and safeguards for navigation, he was most earnest in his endeavors to throw open every harbor and place along the coast warning signals of danger. For his successful work the entire Pacific coast from San Diego to Point Barrow will forever be his debtor. But in the wise expenditure of the hundreds of millions of dollars which this committee recommended the Atlantic coast was benefited as well, and the entire country felt the beneficial effects of the work in which Mr. TONGUE took so important a part. American commerce, domestic and foreign, has been aided by his labors, and his death will be deplored by the thousands who live upon the ocean as well as by the people of Oregon and his coworkers in the Congress of the United States.

We extend to his bereaved family and friends our heartfelt sympathy. May they find consolation in the thought, so beautifully expressed by one of America's poets:

There is no death; the stars go down,
To rise upon some other shore.
And bright in Heaven's jeweled crown,
They shine forever more.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, the act of Providence in the sudden taking away of the universally respected Representative in Congress from the State of Oregon, Hon. THOMAS H. TONGUE, is the carrying out of the unalterable law, to which we humbly bow with submission and regret.

By this sad event the family is bereft of a loving husband, son, and father; the community of Hillsboro, Oreg., of a kind neighbor and a loyal friend; the State of Oregon of a faithful and conservative guide; the nation of a painstaking and useful lawmaker.

Honored by his district and his Commonwealth, he lived so that by his deeds he has given back to those who called him into public service a full measure of the honor that will serve to keep his memory fresh in the years to come. Now that he is no more, his example serves to reflect the sentiment that man is in no degree measured by his years on earth, but by that which he accomplishes for mankind during his earthly sojourn.

The late Representative TONGUE spent the major portion of his eventful life as an honored citizen of his adopted State of Oregon. He spent his boyhood days in the same neighborhood where he was repeatedly honored. His early years were spent amidst the hardships of toil and labor and obstacle which confront every young man of the West who is ushered into life without the luxurious environments that so often dwarf a career of genuine practical usefulness. His educational attainments were of the ordinary character, but, armed with a full share of industry and energy, his courage and indefatigable zeal and ambition served to buoy him onward and upward, until he surmounted all obstacles and reared for himself a name and fame that will honor his memory and leave its lasting imprint upon the minds of his neighbors, his clientage, and his fellow-countrymen.

He was ever alert and loyal to duty, sincere and devoted to principle, and zealous in his preservation of that lofty moral standard which is the idol of a discerning and appreciative public.

Scarcely fifteen years ago his constituency called him from his theretofore active practice of his profession into the public arena, first as a senator in his State legislature, and later to a seat in the National House of Representatives from the First district of Oregon.

He has always been intensely loyal to and proud of his State, and defended in the halls of Congress, with superior ability and unswerving industry, all legislation for its advancement and the development of its material resources.

To the solution of the great problem of irrigation of the broad wastes of arid land which cover the promising West our lamented brother was a devoted friend. The beneficiaries of the recent legislation, so diligently and wisely framed by the Representatives of the great and growing West, remember with a deep sense of appreciation the wise and conservative counsel of Representative TONGUE, and future generations who are to occupy those lands, convert the now barren wastes into rich farms, flourishing orchards, and consequent happy homes will place his name high upon the scroll of honor as one who substantially aided to make progress and development in Nature's barren desert realistic to a degree of high perfection.

It might be proper in this unpremeditated eulogy of mine that I should embody a statement of some of the events which led to the enactment of the national irrigation law which is to be of such great benefit to the country at large, and especially to the West, with which legislation the name of Representative TONGUE will always be intimately associated.

Realizing full well the possibilities of what has been called the desert portion of the United States, the Representatives from that section have labored for legislation. Our Eastern and Southern friends in Congress were not familiar with conditions, while those of the Middle West were but partially so. In Congress after Congress Representatives and Senators from the arid and semiarid region presented bills for the inauguration of a national system of irrigation, but in the confusion incident to so many numerous projects those who were not familiar with the subject were unable to decide which was the best.

So all of the Representatives from the semiarid and arid States and Territories met in caucus on the first night of the first session of the present Congress. Each State and Territory selected one of its number to compose a committee of seventeen, which should represent all the arid and semiarid States and Territories. Mr. TONGUE was made the representative of his State on that committee of seventeen; and to his wise counsel, his conservatism, and his singleness of purpose to frame a law which should be lasting and effective is largely due the passage of this great measure. Then, as chairman of the Committee on Irrigation of the House of Representatives, he was given an opportunity to render effective aid to this momentous work.

Likewise did he labor for an open waterway down the Columbia River, which traverses the rich fields and towering forests of his State from east to west and which will give to the prosperous wheat growers of my own State, as well as his, easy, cheap, and accessible transportation to the ocean for the immense crops of grain that adorn the fields of Oregon, Idaho, and Washington.

Sad indeed it is, that with these and myriads of other useful and progressive features of legislation which were the dreams of his ambition, the sickle of Time should have so ruthlessly entered our councils and mowed down one so anxious to strive, to labor, and to accomplish results that would redound to the convenience, the comfort, and the upbuilding of the community upon which great and mighty foundation the Government of our nation rests and is destined so unmovably to repose until time shall be no more.

Speaking purely as a Western legislator, I can say in him the great resourceful West has lost a loyal, faithful, honest lawmaker, one who had a deep sensibility of the great possibilities of those undeveloped areas which his posterity will live to realize, and they will join us and succeeding generations in giving just praise to those who ministered in days gone by to the material growth and development of their native land.

Here amid the bustling scenes of Congressional life, where members come and go and are lost and forgotten, his memory may not always remain fresh and green, but the splendid results of his honest toil will shine in the great Pacific Northwest as a lasting monument to the honored name of THOMAS H. TONGUE.

In Shakesperean verse—

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players.
They have their exits and their entrances;
And one man in his time plays many parts.

So with our respected friend. He was ushered in on the stage of life to play his part. He played it well. His exit we pause to note with deep regret and a profound regard for the words of Job of old, that when death comes the body returns to the dust from whence it came and the immortal spirit to the God who gave it.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL] and the other distinguished members of the Senate who have preceded me have spoken so fully and so eloquently of the life and public services of the late Representative THOMAS H. TONGUE, that there remains but little for me to add. These tributes of praise, and words of commendation of him "who sleeps his last sleep" will find an echo in the hearts of thousands of his friends where rest the mortal remains in far-away Oregon. However, I can not refrain from occupying the attention of the Senate for a few moments in order that I may give expression to my sorrow, and I, too, may lay a laurel wreath upon the tomb of our departed friend.

It is fitting that we should pause to pay tribute to the moral worth and tireless energy of him who has passed to the other shore; to this man of humble origin, the farmer's boy, who worked his way through college, and who, by indomitable perseverance and pluck, made for himself a reputation as one of the foremost lawyers of his State, developed into an orator of marked ability, and made himself a power in the political affairs of his Commonwealth and of the nation. From the plow to the university, and from his alma mater to an enviable position as a shining light in that profession which has given jurists and statesmen to the world, are achievements of which the most favored may well be proud, and are evidences of that innate and inherited Anglo-Saxon grit which has given free institutions to the human race.

My relations with Mr. TONGUE were always cordial and friendly. I enjoyed his friendship for a quarter of a century. I knew him at the bar, and I knew him as a legislator. As I knew Mr. TONGUE he was a man of simple habits, unostentatious and of modest demeanor. While entertaining strong and positive opinions upon all public questions, and well able to intelligently and forcibly debate them, he preferred that others should engage in the lists, and avoided forensic contests unless he was specially called upon to enter the arena. For this reason he did not often appear in the discussions of the House; but when he did he was clear, earnest, and direct in the presentation of his views, and in debate was always an impressive speaker.

Mr. TONGUE was a native of England, where he was born June 23, 1844. He attended the schools of his native land until he reached the age of 15 years, when his parents emigrated to Washington County, Oreg., taking with them their only child, THOMAS H. TONGUE. The family located on a farm near Hillsboro, in that State, and there young TONGUE resided, working on the farm when not attending school or college, until he arrived at man's estate. He had had fairly good advantages in the English schools and as soon as he arrived in Orgeon he worked incessantly to acquire a finished education. He determined to take a college course, but owing to financial difficulties he succeeded only after surmounting many obstacles in realizing his ambition, and then only by working his way through college. Upon receiving his degree he read law, and in due time was admitted to the bar. He at once actively entered upon and continued in the practice of his profession until his death, interrupted only by his temporary absence from home attending the sessions of the several Congresses of which he was a member. He was very much attached to the study of law and was peculiarly fitted for the practice of the profession, in which he won marked distinction. He rapidly built up a large and lucrative business, and it was a common saying that Mr. TONGUE was on one side or the other of every important cause in the county and circuit in which he practiced.

Mr. TONGUE did not enter political life until after he had made a reputatiou as a lawyer. Aside from his Congressional career the only political office held by him was a term of four years in the Oregon State senate. It was my privilege to serve with him as a member of that body, and I then learned to know and appreciate the character and ability of our deceased friend. His work as impressed upon the acts of the legislature of Oregon stand as a monument to the care, industry, and ability displayed by him while serving in that body.

In 1896 he was elected to the Fifty-fifth Congress and was reelected to each succeediug one, including the Fifty-eighth, and always by increased pluralities. As a member of the House he was indefatigable in working for Oregon, and during the six years in which he served in Congress he never lost an opportunity to advance the interests of his district or State. As a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House he was in position to materially serve every section of the State, and was an influential factor in securing much-needed appropriations for the rivers and harbors of Oregon. In national affairs, although strongly attached to his party, his judicial mind and mental discipline in the intricate questions of law made him an earnest and successful legislator.

Mr. TONGUE loved and faithfully served the people of his district, and, as a reward for the faithful performance of his duty, they loved him and delighted to honor him. No stronger evidence of this fact can be produced than the constantly increasing vote given him in his successive elections to the House.

The sad and untimely death of Mr. TONGUE was a great shock to his friends and constituency, and an irretrievable loss to his family and colleagues. But while we recount his virtues with deep regret for his untimely demise, there are sadder thoughts in the minds and more darkened chambers in the hearts of a faithful wife and loving children who mourn his departure. An affectionate husband has been stricken down by the reaper, Death, and a loving father has fallen a victim to the pale horse and its rider.

Our friend has gone before, but his good deeds, his upright life, his faithfulness in the performance of all duties, and the influence of his kindly smile will ever be remembered by those with whom he came in contact.

None knew him but to love him;
None loved him but to praise.

Life is not measured by the flight of years, but by great actions and grand achievements. Mr. TONGUE won victories after hard-fought battles, when he left the plow for the college, when he succeeded in the profession of law, and last, but perhaps the greatest, when his name was placed on the roll call of the Congress of the United States, the most popular and renowned deliberative body in the world. These are milestones in his eventful career which will be rehearsed by loving hearts for long years to come.

In his relations to his Creator he was devout and sincere; as a husband, tender and affectionate; as a father, wise and loving; as a citizen, earnest and patriotic, and as a friend, firm and faithful. To sum up his well-rounded character in a single sentence, he worshiped God and loved his fellow-man. For such there is no oblivion. The "pictures hung on memory's walls" grow brighter with the lapse of years, and love entwines each act and achievement with fresh garlands as the months melt into years and the years melt into decades.

There is no death. What seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call death.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolutions offered by my colleague.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 2, 1903, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, March 1, 1903.

[Continuation of legislative day of February 26, 1903.]

The recess having expired, the House, at 12 o'clock noon, was called to order by the Speaker.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this being Sunday, I make the point of no quorum present. I have examined the Calendar and there are no election contests ready by which a Democrat can be ousted without a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting the House.] One hundred and forty-nine members present—not a quorum.

Mr. PAYNE. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, who moves a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. A call of the House is ordered. The doors will be closed and the officers will bring in the absentees. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Ball, Tex.	Gardner, Mass.	McCulloch,	Scarborough,
Bellamy,	Glass,	McDermott,	Shafroth,
Belmont,	Glenn,	McLain,	Shallenberger,

Gaines, Tenn.	McClellan,	Ryan,

The SPEAKER. On this call 240 have answered. There is a quorum present. The officers will open the doors.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Was a call of the House ordered? And what was the vote on it?

The SPEAKER. A call of the House was ordered before, and this is the call made in pursuance of that order, which has shown a quorum.

Mr. McCLEARY. I desire to present a conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demand the regular order, and on that I make this point of order——

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the presentation of the conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I make this point of order, Mr. Speaker, that a call of the House was not ordered for the purpose of bringing a quorum here. It was ordered for the purpose of bringing in absentees, and the call of the House has not been dispensed with. And until the call of the House has been dispensed with it is the duty to complete that call by bringing in the absentees.

The SPEAKER. A conference report has been held in order even pending a motion for a call of the House, that being a case when the absence of a quorum had not been ascertained. A quorum has been ascertained in this case, and the conference report is of the highest privilege and may be presented.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Exactly. A quorum has been ascertained here.

The SPEAKER. A quorum has been ascertained, and the conference report is called up. The Chair will have to overrule the point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then another parliamentary inquiry. When the conference report is disposed of, the regular order will then continue to be the call of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer that when the time comes. The Chair can not anticipate what will then be the regular order. [Applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman from Minnesota presents a conference report, which will be read by the Clerk.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 11572. An act for the relief of certain settlers upon Wisconsin Central Railroad and The Dalles military road land grants.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14384. An act to establish a life-saving station at the mouth of Black River, at or near the city of Lorain, in the State Ohio; and

H. R. 15243. An act to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Kensey J. Hampton captain and quartermaster in the Army.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 7368. An act to incorporate the American National Institute (Prix de Paris) at Paris, France.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I present the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the statement be read instead of the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It has not been printed in the RECORD, and it will have to be read. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects. The Clerk will read both the report and the statement.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order now to move to have the RECORD corrected in reference to a roll call?

The SPEAKER. The conference report is up, and that is a higher question.

Mr. GILBERT. I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. It is not in order now. The Clerk will proceed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I insist, Mr. Speaker, that the order of this House for a call of the House has not been dispensed with, and the doors of this House have no right to be opened.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already settled that question. The Chair does not raise the question as to whether the call should be dispensed with——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The point of order I make is that this House, not the Speaker, ordered a call of the House, and in compliance with that the Speaker ordered the doors of this House closed. Now, that call has not been dispensed with.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And the doors should be closed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The doors should be closed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order the doors closed, if the gentleman demands it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We demand it.

The SPEAKER. But the call of the House can not dispense with this conference report. The officers will close the doors. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read the conference report.

[For text of the conference report see page 2802.]

The Clerk read the statement of the House conferees, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16842) making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report on each of the Senate amendments, namely:

On Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4: Appropriates $2,400 for temporary employment of assistant inspectors of buildings; for 2 additional civil engineers or computers, at $1,500 each, and for 1 clerk, at $1,000 instead of $900.

On Nos. 5, 6, and 7: Strikes out proposed increase in the salary of the assessor from $3,500 to $4,000, and appropriates $500 instead of $1,000 for temporary clerk hire in the assessor's office.

On Nos. 8 and 9: Strikes out proposed increase of the salary of the deputy collector from $1,800 to $2,000.

On Nos. 10 and 11: Strikes out proposed increase in the salary of the auditor from $3,600 to $4,000.

On Nos. 12, 13, and 14: Increases the salaries of the engineer of highways and the superintendent of sewers from $2,750 to $3,000 each.

On Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19: Strikes out proposed increase in the salary of the superintendent of insurance from $2,500 to $3,000; provides for a statistician, at $1,400, in the department of insurance; strikes out increase of $200 in the salary of one clerk, and appropriates $600, instead of $1,200 as proposed by the Senate, for temporary clerk hire.

On Nos. 20 and 21: Appropriates $15,200, instead of $13,000 as proposed by the House, and $20,000 as proposed by the Senate, for employees in the surveyor's office.

On Nos. 22, 23, 24, and 25, relating to the Free Public Library: Provides, additional to what was proposed by the House, 1 attendant, at $360, and 2 pages, at $240 each.

On Nos. 26 and 27: Appropriates $37,700, instead of $30,000 as proposed by the House, for contingent expenses.

On Nos. 28 and 29: Appropriates $840, instead of $540, for rent for department of insurance.

On No. 30: Appropriates $1,500, instead of $1,200 as proposed by the House, and $2,000 as proposed by the Senate, for contingent expenses of the coroner's office.

On No. 31: Appropriates $1,500 for marking the boundary of the District.

On No. 32: Appropriates $2,500 for card index for the office of the register of wills.

On No. 33: Strikes out $500 to prepare index to the code of the District.

On No. 34: Strikes out $500 for printing permit books and other forms.

On No. 35: Strikes out provision granting thirty days' leave of absence to per diem employees.

On No. 36: Appropriates $160,000, instead of $145,000 as proposed by the House, and $175,000 as proposed by the Senate, for assessment and permit work.

On Nos. 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, and 43: Appropriates $100,000, instead of $50,000 as proposed by the House, and $150,000 as proposed by the Senate, for work on streets and avenues in the various sections of the city; strikes out $14,600 for paving S street NW. from North Capitol to Second street, and inserts a provision requiring the Commissioners, in submitting schedules of streets and avenues to be improved each year, to arrange the same in the order of their importance.

On Nos. 44 and 45: Limits the price that may be paid for the two kinds of asphalt pavement to $1.80 and $2, respectively, instead of $1.70 and $1.80, respectively, as proposed by the House.

On No. 46: Appropriates $10,000, instead of $8,000 as proposed by the House for grading streets, alleys, and roads.

On No. 47: Appropriates $1,000 for condemnation of streets, roads, and alleys.

On No. 48: Appropriates $25,000, instead of $10,000 as proposed by the House, for opening alleys.

On Nos. 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, and 69: Appropriates $135,000, instead of $54,500 as proposed by the House, and $248,200 as proposed by the Senate, for construction of county roads and suburban streets. As compared with the bill as it passed the House, the following provisions for new work on roads and suburban streets are made:

For Rhode Island avenue, Florida avenue toward First street, $10,000;
For Sixteenth street, Columbia road to Spring road, $25,000;
For Sixteenth street, Morris street to Columbia road, $25,000;
For Twenty-second street, R to Decatur streets, $2,500;
For California avenue, Columbia road to Phelps place, $6,000;
For Wisconsin avenue, $6,000;
For Kansas avenue, $2,000;
For Twentieth street, Queens chapel to Brentwood road, $5,000; and
For Connecticut avenue extended, $5,000.

On No. 70: Strikes out appropriation of $18,664 to purchase land to extend Euclid place.

On Nos. 71 and 72: Appropriates $90,000, instead of $80,000 as proposed by the House, and $100,000 as proposed by the Senate, for repairs of county roads.

On No. 73: Appropriates $48,000 for continuing work on the Connecticut avenue bridge, and limits the whole cost of the bridge to $788,000, under contracts which are authorized, and requires its completion within four years from July 1, 1903.

On Nos. 74, 75, 76, 77, and 78, relating to sewers: Appropriates, additional to the amounts contained in the bill as it passed the House, for the sewage-disposal system, the sum of $450,000, the same being in accordance with estimates prepared by the Commissioners subsequent to the passage of the bill by the House and on the representation that the sewage-disposal system of the District can and will be completed on the basis of the appropriations recommended in two years instead of three years.

On No. 79: Appropriates $190,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $200,000, as proposed by the Senate, for sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets.

On No. 80: Makes the appropriation for the bathing beach available for the expense of maintenance and repair.

On Nos. 81, 82, and 83, relating to the electrical department: Appropriates

$15,000, instead of $14,000 as proposed by the House, for general supplies; $3,950, instead of $18,950 as proposed by the House, for placing electric wires under ground, and $10,000, instead of $7,500 as proposed by the House, and $15,000, as proposed by the Senate, for rebuilding police patrol circuits.

On Nos. 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, and 91, relating to gas lighting: Appropriates $209,000, instead of $200,000 as proposed by the House, and $219,700 as proposed by the Senate, for gas lighting of streets; limits the cost of lighting streets with oil to $24 per lamp per annum as proposed by the Senate, instead of $20 as proposed by the House; requires that the gas company shall bear the expense of purchasing, erecting, and maintaining lamp-posts, street designations, lanterns, and fixtures; authorizes the use of not more than $15,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $25,000 as proposed by the Senate, for Welsbach street lamps, to cost not exceeding $28 per lamp, instead of $27 as proposed by the House, and $30 as proposed by the Senate; and continues for another year, as proposed by the Senate, the provision authorizing the reduction of the candle power of gas from 25 candles to 22 candles.

On Nos. 92 and 93: Appropriates $80,000, instead of $76,000 as proposed by the House, and $82,500 as proposed by the Senate, for electric arc lighting of streets, and limits the cost per lamp to $80, instead of $72 as proposed by the House, and $85 as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 94 and 95: Appropriates $600,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $800,000 as proposed by the Senate, for continuing work on the filtration plant, and extends the limit of cost of said work from $2,768,405 to $3,468,405.

On No. 96: Strikes out the appropriation of $8,000 for survey for additional conduit from Great Falls.

On No. 97: Appropriates $12,000, instead of $2,500 as proposed by the House, and $20,000 as proposed by the Senate, for Rock Creek Park.

On Nos. 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, and 129, relating to public schools: Strikes out a clerk at $900 for the board of education; provides for the number of salaries and teachers as proposed by the House, except that provision is made for one additional supervising principal at $2,000; leaves in the bill the restriction of pupils in night classes to those not over 21 years of age; appropriates $5,500, instead of $4,676 as proposed by the House, for care of small school buildings and rented rooms; provides for 12 medical inspectors of public schools at $500 each; appropriates $17,500, instead of $15,000 as proposed by the House, and $20,000 as proposed by the Senate, for tools and material for manual training; appropriates $35,000, instead of $38,000, for contingent expenses for Business High School building to $175,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $265,000 as proposed by the Senate; strikes out appropriations of $5,000 for purchase of lot adjoining McKinley Manual Training School, of $50,000 toward the extension of the McKinley Manual Training School, and $3,933 for purchase of lot adjoining Armstrong Manual Training School; limits the cost of 2 additional 8-room buildings to $60,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $65,000 as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates $8,300 for purchase of lot adjoining Brent School building, and $10,000 for additional amount for reconstructing building at Seventh and G streets SE.

On Nos. 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, and 142, relating to the Metropolitan police: Appropriates $4,000 for salary of the major and superintendent; provides for compensation of 6 additional privates detailed for special service; provides for 5 additional privates of class 2, at $1,080 each; fixes the compensation of 40 additional privates of class 1 at $720 each as proposed by the House, instead of $780 each as proposed by the Senate; strikes out increase of compensation of 24 station keepers from $840 each to $960 each; strikes out the appropriation of $800 for roadway and protection wall along the east side of seventh precinct station, and $12,500 for remodeling rooms in certain precinct station houses; and appropriates $9,000 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $8,000 as proposed by the House, for the house of detention.

On Nos. 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, and 152, relating to the fire department: Requires, as proposed by the House, that the chief engineer of the fire department shall have had at least five years' experience as a member of some organized municipal fire department, and strikes out proposed increase of $300 in the salary of one assistant chief engineer; appropriates $8,500, instead of $7,500 as proposed by the House and $10,000 as proposed by the Senate, for repairs and improvements to engine houses and grounds; $5,000, instead of $4,500 as proposed by the House and $6,000 as proposed by the Senate, for fuel; $13,000, instead of $12,000 as proposed by the House and $14,000 as proposed by the Senate, for forage; and strikes out the appropriation of $23,000 for house and furniture for a chemical engine company in Benning.

On Nos. 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, and 162, relating to the health department: Strikes out the proposed increase of $200 each in the salaries of the chemist and veterinarian surgeon and inspector of live stock and dairy farms; strikes out $720 for an assistant poundmaster; increases the amount for traveling expenses for sanitary and food inspectors from $1,000 to $1,200; appropriates $15,000 for quarantine buildings on the Washington Asylum grounds, and strikes out the appropriation of $1,000 for a stable for the smallpox hospital.

On Nos. 163, 164, 165, 166, and 167, relating to the police court: Strikes out the proposed increase of the salaries of the police court judges from $3,000 to $3,600 each, and increases the salary of the deputy marshal from $900 to $1,000.

On No. 168: Strikes out appropriation of $38,000 proposed by the Senate for site and plans for a new police-court building.

On Nos. 169 and 170: Strikes out the proposed increase in the salaries of 10 justices of the peace from $2,000 to $2,400 each.

On No. 171: Strikes out enlargement proposed by the Senate of the discretion of the Commissioners in expending the emergency fund.

On Nos. 172, 173, 174, 175, and 176: Strikes out the proposed increase in salaries of employees of the Board of Charities.

On Nos. 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, and 185, relating to the Washington Asylum: Increases the salary of the engineer from $350 to $480, and of the second assistant engineer from $300 to $360; provides for an additional watchman at $548; strikes out the proposed increase in the salaries of the hospital cook and the chief cook of the almshouse and workhouse; strikes out the provision for a laundryman at $720 and for 2 attendants at $300 each: appropriates $60,000 instead of $58,200, as proposed by the House, for contingent and miscellaneous expenses, and strikes out the appropriation of $100,000 proposed by the Senate for continuing erection of a workhouse.

On Nos. 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, and 191, relating to the Reform School for Boys: Increases the salary of the assistant superintendent from $900 to $1,000; provides for an additional teacher at $660 instead of a foreman of workshops at that salary, and strikes out the appropriation of $25,000 for a new building and $1,500 for furnishing the same.

On No. 193: Appropriates $50,000, as proposed by the Senate, for reconstruction of the Homeopathic Hospital.

On Nos. 194 and 195: Appropriates $12,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Hart Farm School.

On Nos. 196 and 197: Appropriates directly for the maintenance of the National Association for the Relief of Destitute Colored Women and Children, and for the German Orphan Asylum, without requiring the same to enter into contract with the Board of Children's Guardians.

On Nos. 198 and 199: Appropriates $5,500 instead of $4,000 for the Temporary Home for ex-Union Soldiers and Sailors.

On Nos. 200, 201, 202, and 203, relating to the water department: Increases the compensation of 1 clerk from $1,400 to $1,500, and of 1 fireman from $1,400 to $1,500, and appropriates $2,000 for introducing the card-record system in the water department.

On Nos. 204 and 205: Inserts as section 3 of the bill a provision proposed by the Senate authorizing advances out of the Treasury during the fiscal year 1904 to meet any deficiency that may occur in the revenues of the District of Columbia, the same to be reimbursed from time to time within five years after the close of the fiscal year 1904.

The bill as finally agreed upon appropriates $8,647,497, $8,513,091 of which is payable from the United States Treasury and the revenues of the District of Columbia, the remainder, $134,406, being payable from the revenues of the water department.

As agreed upon, the total amount appropriated by the bill is $896,842 more than as it passed the House, $776,857 less than as it passed the Senate, $103,037.03 more than the law for the current year, and $2,358,131 less than the estimates submitted by the Commissioners.

J. T. McCLEARY,
E. J. BURKETT,
M. E. BENTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COWHERD. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I desire to present a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COWHERD. As I caught the reading from the Clerk's desk, though it was so rapid I could not accurately catch it, I believe that the conferees have included new matter here which was not in dispute between the House and the Senate, in items 43 and 95. I make the point of order that those items are here in the conference report and that they include new matter that was not in dispute between the two Houses.

Mr. McCLEARY. I would ask what 43 refers to?

Mr. COWHERD. Forty-three is the item, as I caught it, where you provide that hereafter in reporting the schedules of streets and avenues to be improved the Commissioners shall report on a definite examination made by them and report their conclusions.

Mr. McCLEARY. And the other?

Mr. COWHERD. The other is in regard to the filtration plant.

Mr. McCLEARY. Oh, yes; the filtration plant.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the item No. 43, that was inserted as a limitation upon the expenditures, and a direction as to the method of expenditures.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. May I ask the gentleman a question? Are there any limitations on expenditures as the bill left the House?

Mr. McCLEARY. There has been a standing limitation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I mean in the bill?

Mr. McCLEARY. Not in the language of the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Was there any limitation on the expenditures in the language of the bill when it left the Senate?

Mr. McCLEARY. Nothing except the general limitation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the limitation was placed in the bill by the conferees and not by either House.

Mr. McCLEARY. No.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I mean the language of the bill was placed there by the conferees and by neither House.

Mr. COWHERD. May I have that item 43 reported?

Mr. McCLEARY. The gentleman is evidently wrong about the number.

Mr. COWHERD. It may be 42 or 43. I thought it was 43 as I heard it. Of course in the rapid reading it was difficult to catch it.

Mr. McCLEARY. It is not either of those.

Mr. BENTON. Forty-four.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You say 44.

Mr. COWHERD. It is the item which is really new legislation, providing the manner in which the District Commissioners shall hereafter make their suggestions as to the improvement of streets.

The SPEAKER. Now, what section does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. COWHERD. The one I am referring to is either 42, 43, or 44.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please give the number.

Mr. COWHERD. If the Clerk will report those sections I will give the number. The Speaker will understand that it has not been printed and we have no way to get it.

Mr. MUDD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question pending that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. COWHERD. I will read the words of the report on that item I refer to:

> Hereafter the Commissioners, in submitting schedules of streets and avenues to be improved, shall each year arrange said streets and avenues in the order of their importance, and determine by them after personal examination of said streets and avenues.

There is nothing in the action of either the House or the Senate putting that in; and I make the point of order that it is new legislation, that was not in conference between the two Houses as in controversy.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. COWHERD. I make the point of order against the proposition in 95, with relation to the filtration plant.

Mr. McCLEARY. That was a matter of conference. The Senate offered an amendment.

Mr. COWHERD. The legislation was not a matter of conference, Mr. Speaker. The matter of conference was the appropriation. That was raised in the other House.

The SPEAKER. What amendment does the gentleman refer to.

Mr. COWHERD. I refer to amendment No. 95.

The SPEAKER. The amendment relates to the original text. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. COWHERD. The point I make is that it is legislation.

The SPEAKER. The subject-matter is filtration and the amendment is filtration. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Chair, it seems to me that this is improper legislation, and I respectfully appeal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the appeal.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCLEARY. Those who have followed carefully the reading of the report——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is not a demand for the previous question, which is a preferential motion, in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not take a member in charge of the bill from the floor by asking the previous question. That is the prerogative of the gentleman in charge of the bill. The gentleman from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. McCLEARY. As evidenced by the very intelligent question of my friend from Missouri, those who have followed carefully the reading of the report and the statement are in possession of at least the principal facts relating to this bill. I may be pardoned, however, if I emphasize two or three facts in connection with it.

As the statement shows, this bill carries $8,647,497, of which sum $8,513,091 is payable from the Treasury of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia, and $134,406 from the water revenue. The bill as now reported carries $896,842 more than the bill as reported by the House, and $776,857 less than the bill as reported by the Senate. It appropriates $103,037.03 more than the present law, but it carries $2,358,131 less than the estimates submitted by the Commissioners.

Three items deserve perhaps a few words of special consideration.

An increase of $700,000 is authorized in the total expense of the filtration plant by reason of the fact that bids submitted for the completion of the plant show that the increase is necessary, and, further, because the Senate added as an amendment the proviso that the filtration plant should be completed by December 1, 1904.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that we can not hear what the gentleman is saying.

The SPEAKER. All gentlemen will take their seats. The House will be in order.

Mr. McCLEARY. The Senate recognized the urgency of the completion of this filtration plant and inserted a proviso by way of an amendment that the plant should be completed by December 1, 1904. In order that that might be done without default, we felt it our duty to increase the total estimate by $700,000.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield for a question?

Mr. McCLEARY. I must decline to yield.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. McCLEARY. I must decline to yield, Mr. Speaker.

For the sewage disposal system an increased appropriation of $450,000 over the amount reported by the House is made. This is solely on the ground that we desire to complete this sewage disposal system in two years instead of three.

Mr. COWHERD. Did not the engineer state that he could not spend any more than we appropriated?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is out of order.

Mr. McCLEARY. The engineer officer, in the hearing before the House subcommittee, advised that the sum which we reported in our bill was all that he could expend, and it was all he could expend under his theory of expenditure; but the Senate committee was urgent to complete the whole system in two years instead of three, and hence provided for the increase of $450,000 in the appropriation for this year, and we concurred in the wisdom of their increase.

There is a provision for advances from the Treasury of the United States for the coming fiscal year, if these advances are needed, to bear interest at the rate of 2 per cent and to be repaid within five years. This authorization includes the advances authorized under the act of 1901 and the act of 1902, providing for advances to the District.

In our discussion of the bill, when it was in the House, after being reported from the House Committee on Appropriations, we claimed that no advance would be needed. The result of this bill proves that our contention was correct. The estimated revenue of the District from taxation is $5,200,000 to $5,400,000. With the corresponding sum coming from the United States Treasury, the total income of the District is $10,400,000 to $10,800,000. In this bill we have appropriated $8,647,497. Even after meeting the appropriations carried in other bills there will be a considerable surplus. The insertion of this proviso was a concession to the Senate, because its conferees thought that something of that kind ought to be done.

Now, having explained these items—remembering that the report is unanimous—I move the previons question.

Mr. COWHERD. Will not the gentleman yield for one or two questions for the information of the House? I want to ask him one thing about the electric lights?

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the evident purpose on the part of our friends on the other side to use all sorts of devices to consume time, I must respectfully decline to yield.

Mr. COWHERD. Does the gentleman refuse to give the House any information on a bill he is seeking to pass? I appeal to the House for the purpose of asking him some questions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is out of order. Let us pursue the regular course.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it in order to ask the gentleman from Minnesota to yield two minutes' time to discuss this report?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota has several times stated that he will not yield, and has given his reasons for it. The Chair has submitted to him two or three times a request to yield, and he declined. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota for the previous question.

The question was taken; and Mr. UNDERWOOD demanded a division.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 79, answered "present" 10, not voting 112; as follows:

Mr. LANDIS with Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi.
Mr. HEMENWAY with Mr. DOUGHERTY.
Mr. MONDELL with Mr. CLAYTON.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12098) extending the homestead laws and providing for a right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska, and move the adoption of the conference report.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa calls up a conference report and moves that the same be adopted. The Clerk will read the report and statement.
The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 12098 having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:
That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same, with amendments as follows: In lines 4, 5, 6, and 7, page 1, strike out the words "excepting the commutation provisions thereof, and excepting also the provisions relating to the acquisition of title through soldiers' additional homestead rights."
Also in line 13, page 1, after the word "district," insert the following: "except as now provided by law: And provided further, That no more than 160 acres shall be entered in any single body by such scrip, lieu selection, or soldier's additional homestead right: And provided further, That no location of scrip, selection, or right along any navigable or other waters shall be made within the distance of 80 rods of any lands, along such waters, theretofore located by means of any such scrip or otherwise: And provided further, That no commutation privileges shall be allowed in excess of 160 acres included in any homestead entry under the provisions hereof."
Also in line 11, page 2, after the word "proof," insert: "except as to commuted lands as herein provided."
Also in line 10, page 3, after the word "years," insert: "Or at such date as the settler may desire to commute."
Also in line 18, page 3, after the words "United States," insert: "as heretofore and herein amended."
Also in line 1, page 4, after the word "receiver," insert: "except one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre on land commuted."
And the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN F. LACEY,
F. W. MONDELL,
F. M. GRIFFITH,
Managers on the part of the House.
C. D. CLARK,
ROBERT J. GAMBLE,
A. J. McLAURIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The effect of the amendments is as follows:
1. The Senate provision prohibiting the use of soldiers' additional homestead rights in Alaska is stricken out, leaving the existing law, and also limiting the use of all scrip or lieu selections to tracts of not exceeding 160 acres, and reserving from such locations along navigable or other waters tracts of not less than 80 rods in width between such entries.
2. Also as to commutation of homesteads, the amendment of the Senate is so modified that while homesteads of 320 acres may be taken, only 160 acres may be commuted.
3. The Senate provision as to surveys is substantially accepted.

JOHN F. LACEY.
F. W. MONDELL.
F. M. GRIFFITH.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise the question of consideration. This is not an appropriation bill, and it is Sunday.
Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is a dilatory motion.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I submit it is not dilatory. This is Sunday, and we ought not to legislate generally on Sunday.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is that under Rule XXIX the statement, which should be in detail, accompanying the conference report is not a sufficiently detailed statement to conform to that rule.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair holds that the statement complies with the rules.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does the Chair take cognizance of that as a point of order to be decided by the Chair?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair rules in accordance with former rulings of occupants of the chair. The statement complies with the rule and the Chair overrules the point of order.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I want to suggest that the only decision that has ever been made on that point is to the contrary, and for that reason I most respectfully appeal.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair declines to entertain the appeal on the ground that it is dilatory.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But, Mr. Speaker, the rule is that the House must decide this question, and not the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair entertain the decision of the House upon this proposition, and the only decision that was ever made in the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question has been decided, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has the floor.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, there is a great unanimity of sentiment in favor of this bill, although nobody would suspect it for a moment after listening to the other side. This is what has been known as the Alaska homestead bill. The proposition is to give homesteads in that country to the extent of 320 acres. The principal matter of difference between the House and the Senate conferees was upon the question of commutation and the use of scrip in Alaska. Upon the question of the use of scrip the agreement leaves these matters substantially as they are now, excepting to make the law clear that scrip shall not be located upon streams in such a way as to make a continuous location, but that a quarter of a mile between any two locations will be reserved. There can be no monopoly of the shores of the water courses. As to commutation, it provides that there may be commutation on a quarter section, but not on the whole amount of 320 acres.

With this statement, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question.

The question was taken.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I insist that when gentlemen rise and address the Chair they have a right to ask a question and that the Chair ought not to override them. We were asking a respectful question of the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I will withhold my motion long enough to ascertain what the question of the gentleman is.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The question is as to the proposition of 160 acres. As it left the House——

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, as the bill left the House it was 320 acres. As agreed on now, it is 320 acres. As to commutation, the amount to be commuted is limited to 160 acres.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the question I would like to ask is whether or not it changes the law with reference to settlements on these lands?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. It leaves the law the same as it is in other parts of the United States. Mr. Speaker, I now move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, to order the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. STEELE and Mr. LACEY asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 76, answered "present" 10, not voting 126; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

An act (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

RECESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the present occupant of the chair hold that this motion for a recess to a specific hour takes precedence over a motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule adopted by the House, it does.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then, a second question. If we vote down the motion to take a recess, will a motion to adjourn be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the motion is voted down, the Chair will answer the question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope it will be voted down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 2, 1903.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a m.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. HOAR, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

POSTAL RATE ON PERIODICALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 24th ultimo, an estimate of the effect on the revenue of the Post-Office Department in case of the adoption of an amendment giving all periodicals the same rate and terms as that now given the weekly periodicals; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

INVESTIGATION BY INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Tne PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Interstate Commerce Commission transmitting, in response to a resolution of June 24, 1902, certain information relative to the rates filed with the Commission by common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce now in force on import and domestic traffic of like kind carried from various States in the United States to interior points of destination which show material differences, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the Fifth Annual Report of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES DEITRICK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting an estimate of appropriation for payment to James Deitrick for rent of land office at Peavey, Alaska, and for supplies furnished that office, etc., $1,620.32; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16842) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed with amendments the bill (S. 7414) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12098) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for a right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 3560) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, and amended April 1, 1896;

A bill (S. 5437) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of officers of the Army;

A bill (S. 6139) amending the civil code of Alaska, providing for the organization of private corporations, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 14384) to establish a life-saving station at the mouth of Black River, at or near the city of Lorain, in the State of Ohio;

A bill (H. R. 15804) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 16069) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain lands herein mentioned;

A bill (H. R. 16573) to authorize the construction of a bridge across St. Francis River, at or near the town of St. Francis, Ark.

A bill (H. R. 16656) regulating the importation of breeding animals;

A bill (H. R. 15243) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Kensey J. Hampton captain and quartermaster in the Army; and

A bill (H. R. 16970) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington presented the credentials of Levi Ankeny, chosen by the legislature of the State of Washington a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1903; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOAR. I present a petition of six professors of American colleges and 27 other citizens of the United States, in addition to those presented heretofore by me, praying that a committee be appointed to inquire into conditions in the Philippines, so that the American people may know exactly the state of affairs in those islands. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. I present a joint memorial of the legislature of Montana, in the nature of a petition, praying that relief be granted to certain settlers on the Absarokee Forest Reserve in that State. I ask that the joint memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE, HELENA, MONT.

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas there now resides in the Absarokee Forest Reserve, of the State of Montana, a large number of bona fide settlers, in the counties of Carbon, Park, and Sweet Grass, holding 160 acres of land each; and

Whereas a large portion of the area covered by the Absarokee Forest Reserve is above timber line, and therefore grass-bearing land, without trees, and a large portion of such area is land devoid of timber and occupied by homestead settlers and is tillable land feasible to be reclaimed by irrigation; and

Whereas said land so settled upon by said persons is more valuable for agriculture and stock growing than for any other purpose; and

Whereas the present rules of the Department of the Interior relative to forest reserves prohibits the grazing of sheep and other live stock on the Absarokee Forest Reserve; and

Whereas heavy pecuniary loss will fall upon the residents, settlers, and flock masters residing in the vicinity of the Absarokee Forest Reserve by reason of such regulations of the Department of the Interior, and by reason of the enforcement thereof, and will result in their being deprived of the use of a very large area of the best pasture lands, and thereby cause the grasses thereon to go to waste, materially reducing the number of live stock that can be carried upon the open ranges of our State;

Whereas this great loss to the people of our State will be incurred without in any manner providing a better protection to our forests: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, your memorialists, of the Eighth legislative assembly of the State of Montana, do earnestly pray and petition the Congress of the United States to open for settlement said Absarokee Forest Reserve, or that portion thereof that is devoid of timber,

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives at Washington, D. C., are hereby instructed to use all proper means to accomplish the desired legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Montana be, and is hereby, instructed to send a copy of this joint memorial to our Senators and Representatives at Washington, D. C.

B. F. WHITE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
W. M. BIGGS,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

Approved February 16, 1903.

J. K. TOOLE, Governor.

Filed February 16, 1903, at 4.15 p. m.

GEORGE M. HAYS,
Secretary of State.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a memorial of Coopers' Local Union No. 17, American Federation of Labor, of Portsmouth, N. H., remonstrating against the repeal of the revenue stamp tax on eighth kegs of beer; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bureau County, Ill., and a petition of sundry citizens of Freeport, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the States power to deal with intoxicating liquors which may be shipped into their territory from other States; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. DUBOIS. I present a joint memorial of the legislature of Idaho, in the nature of a petition praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the Pend Oreille River in that State. I ask that the joint memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Certificate of certified copy. State of Idaho. Office of the secretary of State.

I, Will H. Gibson, secretary of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of house joint memorial No. 3, by Ashley, which was filed in this office the 23d day of February, A. D. 1903, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 23d day of February, A. D. 1903.

[SEAL.] WILL H. GIBSON,
Secretary of State.

House joint memorial No. 3, in the house of representatives, by Ashley. Joint memorial to the Congress of the United States.

Your memorialists, the legislature of the State of Idaho, in regular session, do petition that the Congress of the United States will make such an appropriation as will render suitable for navigation that portion of the Pend d'Oreille River lying between Albany Falls and the mouth of the Priest River.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

The secretary of the State of Idaho is hereby requested to forward this memorial to the Congress of the United States.

This house joint memorial passed the house of representatives on the 14th day of February, 1903.

JAMES F. HUNT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This house joint memorial passed the senate on the 20th day of February, 1903.

JAMES M. STEVENS,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within house joint memorial No. 3 originated in the house of representatives of the legislature of the State of Idaho during the seventh session.

ROBT. M. McCRACKEN,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

State of Idaho: Received and filed February 23, 1903.

WILL H. GIBSON,
Secretary of State.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I present a joint resolution of the legislature of South Dakota, relative to the enactment of legislation repealing the tariff on lumber. I ask that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE, PIERRE, S. DAK.
STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA, DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of South Dakota, Secretary's office.

I, O. C. Berg, secretary of state of the State of South Dakota, do hereby certify that the attached instrument of writing is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution No. 9, passed by the eighth legislative assembly, as the same appears of record in this office, and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota. Done at the city of Pierre, this 25th day of February, 1903.

[SEAL.] O. C. BERG, Secretary of State.

A joint resolution.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the present tariff duty on lumber has outlived its usefulness and that the needs of the hour demand its repeal; be it further

Resolved, That we hereby respectfully request our State senators and representatives to urge the immediate passage of an act repealing said tariff; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, directed to send certified copies of this resolution to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

(Indorsed:) I hereby certify that the within act originated in the house of representatives and was known in the house files as house joint resolution No. 9.

J. C. McLEMORE, Chief Clerk.

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA, OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

Filed February 25, 1903, at 3.20 o'clock p. m.

O. C. BERG, Secretary of State.

Mr. DOLLIVER presented a petition of Waterloo Lodge, No. 314, International Association of Machinists, of Waterloo, Iowa, praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 608, United Mine Workers, of Des Moines, Iowa, praying for the passage of the so-called anti-injunction and conspiracy bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GAMBLE presented a joint resolution of the legislature of the State of South Dakota, in favor of the enactment of legislation to repeal the present duty on lumber; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society, of New York City, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation setting apart certain lands in the Territory of Arizona as a public park; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented petitions of the Department of Maine, Grand Army of the Republic, of Bangor, Me.; of the Department of Vermont, Grand Army of the Republic, of Rutland, Vt., and of the Department of Michigan, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lansing, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation giving preference in the civil service to veterans of the war of the rebellion; which were referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Mr. TELLER. I present a paper, prepared by Truman G. Palmer, being a brief history of the origin and development of beet sugar. I move that the paper be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

RECIPROCITY WITH HAWAII.

Mr. DIETRICH. I present a paper, being a history of the Hawaiian treaty, with a report from the Committee on Finance, signed by Justin S. Morrill, Daniel W. Voorhees, and NELSON W. ALDRICH; also a history of the agitation for Cuban reciprocity with the United States, and opinions as to the probable results of Cuban reciprocity, by Mr. CHARLES H. DIETRICH. The data and tables were compiled by Mr. Truman G. Palmer. I move that the paper be printed as a document, believing it will be of interest in considering the Cuban treaty and other measures.

The motion was agreed to.

FEDERAL AID IN DOMESTIC DISTURBANCES.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the document which I send to the desk may be printed as a Senate document. It is a compilation of cases in which the Government has aided in the suppression of domestic disturbances, compiled in the Adjutant-General's Office, War Department. I think it will be a very useful document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks that there be printed as a Senate document a compilation entitled "Federal Aid in Domestic Disturbances." Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DEPEW, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5895) to provide United States registry for the steamer Success, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6629) to authorize the President to nominate, as second lieutenant of infantry in the United States Army on the retired list, the oldest enlisted man on the rolls of the Army, submitted an adverse report thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

SURVEY OF BIG SANDY RIVER.

Mr. ELKINS, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 500 additional copies of House Document No. 326, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, and 500 copies of House Document No. 235, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, and and that these editions be stitched together as one document.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a bill (S. 7446) for the relief of Salvador Costa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi introduced a bill (S. 7447) to reimburse the people of Indianola, Miss., and vicinity for moneys expended for necessary mail facilities; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment providing that all Union soldiers who served in the civil war, and who were honorably discharged, now employed as messengers or elevator conductors in the Senate, shall not be removed excepting for cause reported to and approved by the Senate, and that such names shall constitute the "soldiers' roll" of the Senate, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed.

Mr. SIMON submitted an amendment providing that the military records of the Indian wars, now preserved in the Interior or other Departments, be transferred to the War Department, to be preserved in the Record and Pension Division of that Department, and that they shall be properly indexed and arranged for use, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed.

DISTRICT CANALS AND STEAM RAILROADS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the laws relating to canals and steam railroads in the District of Columbia be printed as a document, and that 100 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia.

CIRCULAR ON "ABNORMALITY OF MAN."

Mr. DEPEW submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That Circular No. 41893, issued by the Bureau of Education, be referred to the Committee on Printing for report on reprinting the same as a Senate document.

EASTERN RAILROAD AND BOSTON AND MAINE RAILROAD.

Mr. LODGE. I offer a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to require the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in examining the refunding claim of the Eastern Railroad Company of the State of Massachusetts, in pursuance of the act of Congress approved February 28, 1901, to examine and report to the Senate the amounts paid as taxes by the said Eastern Railroad Company and the Boston and Maine Railroad in excess of the amount legally due, under the acts of Congress approved July 1, 1862, June 30, 1864, July 14, 1870, and amendments thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PETTUS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over under the rule.

COURTS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. BAILEY. On Saturday I was about to move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 16775) establishing United States courts at Duncan, Maryetta, and Comanche, Ind. T., and finding the bill I desired to reconsider had been sent to the House an order was made, on my motion, asking the House for the return of the bill. Certain complications have arisen which insure the defeat of the bill if it is returned. I therefore ask unanimous consent to withdraw the request made to the House for the return of the bill, leaving it exactly as it was sent to the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas withdraws the request for the return of the bill, and the order will be rescinded.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 17493) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for prior years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the amendments be considered as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield for morning business?

Mr. HALE. I will yield for morning business.

JOHN T. VINCENT.

Mr. GAMBLE. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Depredations to report a resolution, with the accompanying papers, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 2286) entitled "A bill for the relief of John T. Vincent," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

Mr. BAILEY. Do I understand that this is a request for unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a report of a Senate resolution from the Committee on Indian Depredations referring a matter to the Court of Claims, and unanimous consent was asked that it might be now considered.

Mr. BAILEY. Pending that request, I desire to inquire why this single case should be sent to the Court of Claims. Is it the purpose to waive the statute of limitations?

Mr. GAMBLE. No, sir; it is for a review of the case. The object of the resolution is to refer the matter to the Court of Claims and for the court to report its findings to the Senate, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887. It is the only case of this kind which was before the committee for its consideration. The question of amity or of citizenship is not involved in the pending bill.

Mr. BAILEY. The committee has a general bill before it, and I had earnestly hoped that that bill would be reported and be acted on. I imply no criticism against the committee, because I am sure it is proceeding in the way that seems best to it. The only point I have in my mind is that I am not willing to have a single claimant taken out from the general operation of the law and provided for while the general bill itself sleeps in the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not want to object, but I want first to inform myself as to the object in proposing this single relief.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I only yielded for routine morning business. Of course I can not yield to anything that will give rise to debate.

Mr. BAILEY. Not knowing the merits of the bill, I am not willing to interpose an objection, and therefore if it is necessary that the bill be defeated or I be left without the information, I believe I will content myself to go without the information.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. GAMBLE. I hope there will be no objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Texas can move to reconsider it and by and by look at it. That will hang it up in the Senate for the present.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota what is the subject-matter of this claim.

Mr. GAMBLE. It is an Indian depredation claim where a party claims he lost in the destruction of his property by an incursion of Indians something like $2,800. The property consisted of horses, stock, and equipments which he had employed in a freighting outfit. The case was heard before the Court of Claims. The case appears to have been improperly tried. The evidence was improperly submitted, and was considered by the court as insufficient. The finding of the court was against the claimant. In the opinion of the committee, upon the showing made, there was an evident miscarriage of justice. It was considered a proper case for the action proposed.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator——

Mr. GAMBLE. The resolution simply refers the case to the Court of Claims to return its findings under the act referred to. It was carefully investigated by a subcommittee, and it has the unanimous report of the committee favoring its reference to the court.

Mr. SPOONER. Did the claimant have his day in court before?

Mr. GAMBLE. He did have his day in court, but the evidence was not sufficient. He failed to present the facts fully through his attorney, and the finding of the court was against him.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This is simply for a finding of facts, as I understand it.

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir; and the finding is to be returned to the Senate, and such action can then be taken as may be proper.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is not for a judgment?

Mr. GAMBLE. It is not for a judgment; simply for a finding.

Mr. DUBOIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut or the Senator from Wisconsin a question. There is a bill on the Calendar treating this subject generally, extending the jurisdiction of the court, etc., in Indian depredation claims, in which a number of us are very much interested. I wish to know if there is any very serious objection to that bill. It would include what the Senator from South Dakota desires and what a great many more of us desire.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator addresses his inquiry to me, I will say to him that I did not know anything of the existence of such a bill. I have never seen it. Whether it is objectionable or not I could not say.

Mr. DUBOIS. Can the Senator from South Dakota inform me in regard to the Indian depredation claims bill which is on the Calendar?

Mr. GAMBLE. If I may be permitted, I will state that the Committee on Indian Depredations has already reported the bill to which the Senator from Idaho refers, and it is now upon the Calendar. That bill relates to the qualification of citizenship of the claimant, made necessary under the present statute. It proposes to change the word "citizen" to "inhabitant." That bill has never been reached for consideration. That is the bill to which the junior Senator from Texas refers.

Mr. BAILEY. That is the bill, minus what I conceive to be a very important provision, that which relates to the amicable relation of the Indians with the General Government. I regard it as very much more important to allow those people, whose property was taken under the pretense of a war, a day in court than it is to allow aliens their day. However, that would be a matter for the committee to determine first, and for the Senate afterwards.

Mr. GAMBLE. The committee in its report recommended favorably the provision of the bill as to citizenship, but reported adversely the provision as to amity.

Mr. ALDRICH. Regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator from South Dakota who now has the floor introduced a bill, which is Order of Business 1441, Senate bill 3544, which includes this whole subject, and a great many of us are very much interested in it. I would ask if we could not pass that bill as well as a private bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I would be compelled to resist the passage of the bill as reported by the committee unless a provision was made to cover the cases of people whose property was taken when it was contended that the Indians were in a state of war, because I know that if the bill should be passed with that provision left out those people would be left remediless forever more. I hope the Senator from Idaho will not attempt to pass it until we can have a reasonable time to discuss that question.

Mr. DUBOIS. I shall not attempt to do it, nor shall I object to the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. GAMBLE. The pending resolution has no relation to the bill to which the Senator from Texas refers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will once more ask, Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

W. W. WHEELER AND OTHERS.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Claims I report and ask present consideration of a resolution.

The Secretary proceeded to read the resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a resolution of reference to the Court of Claims, reported favorably from the Committee on Claims by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is there any occasion for reading it?

Mr. WARREN. I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall have to object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the resolution goes to the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from Rhode Island will withdraw his objection for a moment, I will make a statement. This resolution is a very short paper. It merely gives the numbers and titles of the bills. The intention of the resolution is to carry to the Court of Claims for finding, not for judgment, such bills as have had the attention of the Committee on Claims during the session. In fact, no bills have been sent down during this session until now. This represents the work of the committee on this particular line of claims since our assembling in December.

Mr. ALDRICH. Under the circumstances I will not object.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the resolution, which is as follows:

Resolved, That the following Senate bills, to wit, No. 44, to permit W. W. Wheeler to prosecute a claim; No. 50, for the relief of the legal representatives of Joseph C. Stark, deceased; No. 363, for the relief of Benjamin F. Garraway; No. 726, for the relief of the legal representatives of Andrew B. James, deceased; No. 1313, for the relief of Capt. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

Mr. RAWLINS. It seems to me that those bills ought to be read to the Senate, so that we can be informed as to what they are.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills can be read by title if the Senator desires. There is quite a large number of them.

Mr. RAWLINS. I think they ought to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be read by title.

Mr. HALE. Hereafter I shall object to anything coming in. It takes too much time.

The Secretary read the bills by title as appearing in the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17046) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

GEORGE C. PERKINS,
F. E. WARREN,
B. R. TILLMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. HEMENWAY,
LUCIUS N. LITTAUER,
THOS. C. McRAE.
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 7414) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference with the House on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. FAIRBANKS, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. TURNER were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17046) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHATTUC, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. ROBB managers at the conference on the part of the House.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and I ask unanimous consent that five conferees be appointed by the Chair on the part of the Senate on the bill and amendments.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to inquire if so far as the bill has now proceeded the prohibition provision is still in it?

Mr. PENROSE. To which provision does the Senator refer?

Mr. BAILEY. The provision which forbids the sale of liquor.

Mr. PENROSE. That provision, as I understand it, is not in disagreement between the two Houses.

Mr. BAILEY. I was sure of that, and that was the reason I wanted to be certain that it was still in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator and to the chairman of the Committee on Immigration [Mr. PENROSE], who was not here the other night, that that was a House provision to which the Senate has agreed, and it is therefore not in disagreement between the Houses and not open to amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I tried to get the Senate to disagree to it, but they refused to do so, and I wanted to be certain that it was still in the bill. The House wanted that provision and voted for it, and I wanted them to have it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania now asks unanimous consent that the President pro tempore be authorized to appoint five conferees on the part of the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. I inquire what is the number of conferees appointed by the other House?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Three.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it not rather unusual for the Senate to appoint a larger number than is appointed by the other House?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has known seven conferees to be appointed.

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that the House appointed five conferees and the Senate appointed three on the Philippine bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rose simply for information. I like to learn something each day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no rule which limits the number of conferees to be appointed by either House.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was laboring under the impression that the number of Senate conferees should not exceed the number appointed by the other House, but if the custom is otherwise, I have no objection. I do not care anything about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and the Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the Senate the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN].

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17493) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "State Department," on page 3, after line 7, to insert:

To pay the assistant law clerk to be appointed by the Secretary of State to edit the laws of Congress and perform such other duties as may be required of him, as provided for by the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, for services from December 1, 1902, until July 1, 1903, $875.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 16, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of State to have the Great Seal of the United States recut from the original model, and to purchase a suitable press for its use and a cover to protect the same from dust, the sum of $1,250 appropriated by the deficiency act approved July 1, 1902, "To enable the Secretary of State to have the Great Seal of the United States recut," is hereby reappropriated for the purposes above mentioned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 21, to increase the appropriation for deficiency in mail transportation by railroads on account of the fiscal year 1902, from $15,679.81 to $15,864.06.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 25, to increase the appropriation for deficiencies in mail transportation by star routes on account of the fiscal year 1902, from $40,958.91 to $45,018.28.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Justice," on page 80, after line 16, to insert:

Salaries, Department of Justice: For the payment of the salary of the disbursing clerk for the fiscal year 1903 at the rate of $2,750 per year instead of at the rate of $2,300, $450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "United States courts," on page 89, line 20, after the word "deputies," to strike out "$1,300,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For payment of salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies, to include payment for services rendered in behalf of the United States or otherwise, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 4, to increase the appropriation to pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation "Fees of clerks, United States courts," for the fiscal year 1902, from $4,454.61 to $5,214.16.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 7301) to further provide for the safe-keeping of public money, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid aside temporarily to allow the appropriation bill to be completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head "Legislative," on page 92, after line 4, to strike out the subhead "House of Representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, after line 15, to insert:

For assistant driver for the folding-room team, authorized by resolution of the House April 25, 1902, at $50 per month from March 4, 1903, to June 30, 1904, inclusive, $795.10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, line 16, after the word "Louisiana," to strike out:

Two thousand five hundred dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be accredited to the account of and expended under the direction and by the order of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives.

And insert:

Five thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of which sum $3,000 shall be accredited to the account of and expended under the direction and by the order of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, and $2,000 accredited to the Senate, to be expended under the direction and by the order of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate.

So as to make the clause read:

To defray the expenses of the members of the joint committee of the House and Senate authorized to attend and represent the Congress of the United States on the occasion of the dedication of the buildings and grounds of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, to be held at St. Louis April 30 and

May 1 and 2, 1903, commemorating the one-hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Territory of Louisiana, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of which sum $3,000 shall be accredited to the account of and expended under the direction and by the order of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, and $2,000 accredited to the Senate, to be expended under the direction and by the order of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public printing and binding," on page 99, after line 11, to insert:

Printing and binding for the Treasury Department, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Spanish Treaty Claims Commission," on page 100, after line 12, after the word "service," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all sales, transfers, or assignments heretofore or hereafter made of any claims before such Commission, except such as have occurred in the due administration of a decedent's estate, and all contracts heretofore made for fees and allowances to claimants' attorneys are hereby declared void. All warrants issued by the Secretary of the Treasury in payments of awards shall be made payable and delivered only to the claimants or their lawful heirs, executors or administrators, or transferees under adminstrative proceedings, except so much thereof as shall be allowed to the attorneys for claimants by the Commission for prosecuting said claims, which may be paid direct to such attorneys, and the allowances to the attorneys for claimants shall be regulated and fixed by the Commission at the time of making awards and entered of record as part of the findings thereof; but in no case shall the allowance exceed 15 per cent of the award made, except in case of a claim of less amount than $500, or where unusual services have been rendered or expenses incurred by the claimant's attorney, in which case not to exceed 20 per cent of such award may be allowed by the Commission.

So as to read:

Spanish Treaty Claims Commission: For salaries and expenses of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, $5,000; and said Commission is authorized to pay to additional commissioners to take testimony in Cuba, for occasional services in special cases, not exceeding $8 per day, in lieu of fees during the time of actual service: Provided, That all sales, transfers, or assignments heretofore or hereafter made of any claims before such commission, etc.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, as to the whole of this amendment, commencing on line 13 and going down to line 8, on page 101, I make the point of order that it is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. I suppose it is legislation. I am very sorry——

Mr. PETTUS. It is not only new legislation, but it is very vicious legislation at that.

Mr. HALE. I am sorry that the Senator has felt constrained to make the point, because I think it is a very proper and useful provision. But it is undoubtedly legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 101, after line 13, to insert:

To enable the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission to reimburse the Secretary of State for the services of a force of copyists to make copies of papers concerning claims required by order of the Commission, not exceeding $1,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of "Judgments, Court of Claims," on page 101, line 23, after the word "sixty," to insert "and Senate document No. 187;" on page 102, before the word "Provided," to strike out "$22,269.59" and insert "$287,341.45;" and in line 4, after the word "expired," to insert:

And provided further, That the proviso contained in the act approved the 6th day of June, A. D. 1900, entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes," which reads as follows:

So as to make the clause read:

For the payment of the judgments except the judgment in favor of Elias E. Barnes, rendered by the Court of Claims, reported to Congress at its present session in House Document No. 360, and Senate Document No. 187, $287,341.45: Provided, That none of the judgments herein provided for shall be paid until the right of appeal shall have expired: And provided further, That the proviso contained in the act approved the 6th day of June, A. D. 1900, entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes," which reads as follows: "Provided, That no judgment heretofore or hereafter rendered under the act of June 16, 1880, entitled 'An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes,'" etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judgments in Indian depredation claims," on page 104, line 7, after the word "sixty-nine," to strike out "$109,847" and insert:

Except the judgments in favor of John S. Little, administrator of John W. Hayes, deceased, reported in said House Document No. 81, and in favor of Charles Probst, and in favor of C. M. Cooper, administrator, reported in said House Document No. 369 and in Senate Document No. 190, $258,147.69.

So as to make the clause read:

For payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases certified to Congress at its present session in House Documents Nos. 81 and 369, except the judgments in favor of John S. Little, administrator of John W. Hayes, deceased, reported in said House Document No. 81, and in favor of Charles Probst, and in favor of C. M. Cooper, administrator, reported in said House Document No. 369 and in Senate Document No. 190, $258,147.69; said judgments to be paid after the deductions required to be made under the provisions of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judgment supreme court of the District of Columbia," on page 107, after line 2, to insert;

Prize money, battle of Manila Bay: To satisfy the decree ordered by the Supreme Court of the United States to be entered in accordance with the opinion of February 23, 1903, by the supreme court of the District of Columbia in the case of George Dewey, Admiral United States Navy, v. The Don Juan de Austria, No. 559, reported to Congress at this session in Senate Document No. 175, $946,083.89, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 15, on page 113.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I call attention to the following item, which has just been read:

For payment to sundry Sioux Indians for depredations, treaty of April 29, 1868, $81,740.

And also in the next item, which reads:

For payment to George T. Wilson, a Chickasaw Indian, for stock stolen from him by Kiowa and Comanche Indians in 1866, $1,395.

These items make a total of $83,135, and I think there should be some explanation of the reason for these appropriations. There is no objection, of course, to the proper payment of Indians for stock stolen; but claims which originated in 1866 and now come here scattered through this bill, seem to me to be worthy of some explanation. I can readily see that if this begins it may lead to a flood of claims which will be constantly increasing, and each year less specific.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I was going to ask, in furtherance of the inquiry made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], why we should pay one Indian for stock stolen from him by another Indian?

Mr. HALE. These are all audited claims. The scrutiny to which they are subjected is not in the committee, but in the Department. They have to pass through the Auditor and the Comptroller, who both are required to consider them, and then to be submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury. The practice has been that from time to time they are sent here as audited claims. Such claims have always been and are now put on the deficiency bill. Sometimes they come in on the very day of the passage of the bill; and some have come in to-day. In the conduct of the bill I always, two or three days beforehand, in order to clean up the business so far as may be, send a request from the Senate that the departments hurry these matters so far as they can complete the auditing and send the claims to us. Then whether a claim applies to one Indian or to two Indians, to a black man or to a white man, whatever may be his name, whatever may be the nature or extent of the claim, the committee accepts the auditing as it is done by the Department. That has always been the case, and I suppose is likely to be.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I make no objection, but on examining the bill it struck me as a thing worthy of inquiry—a claim so indefinite and vague as the stealing of cattle by one Indian from another Indian in 1866, nearly forty years ago.

Of course these claims do not go through the Court of Claims. That is clear. They are simply claims allowed by the Auditor of the Interior Department, and the suggestion naturally occurred to my mind that if that thing was allowed to any great extent we should have a flood of Indian claims here. However, as I have said, I make no objection.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator who has charge of this bill under what law these claims are audited? There must be some general law or some specific provision. I want to know if there is any law which authorizes the auditing of claims arising out of depredations committed by Indians upon Indians, which warrants the auditing of such claims by the Department.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And claims forty years old.

Mr. SPOONER. We have undertaken, I know, to indemnify Indians for depredations committed upon them by white people, but I have not known—although there may have been many such instances—an instance where Congress has undertaken, unless there was some treaty obligation, to indemnify Indians for depredations committed by other Indians.

Mr. HALE. The Department reports these claims as being under the law. As I have said, the committee do not enter into an investigation of these particular claims or every particular item in them or as to what the law is, but take the certification of the Department. For instance, here is one of the documents which has just come in lately: "In compliance with section 2 of the act of July

7, 1774"—referring to the statutes—"certain schedules of claims," etc. The cases are brought in here, and we appropriate for them. If the Senator thinks these claims ought to be struck out——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know that. I was only asking for information. Are such payments made out of the Indian funds in the Treasury or out of the general fund?

Mr. HALE. These particular claims are to be paid out of the general fund.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. These claims are for stock stolen in 1866 and 1867 from Indians by other Indians. For instance, on page 120 I find these two items:

Payment to estate of A. B. Johnson, a Chickasaw Indian, for stock stolen from him by Comanche Indians in 1867, $2,025.

Payment to estate of Aggy Daren, a Chickasaw Indian, for stock stolen from her by Comanche Indians in 1866, $2,125.

Mr. HALE. The claims would not have been audited otherwise, I presume, than according to the stipulations of some treaty.

Mr. FORAKER. We can not hear the Senator at all over here.

Mr. HALE. I know the Senator can not.

Mr. FORAKER. Since this is a matter to which attention has been especially called and which many of us do not understand, I should like to have full information in regard to it.

Mr. HALE. I will say, Mr. President, that my throat is in such condition that I can not speak very loudly.

Mr. SPOONER. And too many other Senators are speaking also.

Mr. HALE. Yes. While it is true that there is a certain charm in our intercourse here, where we are constantly hearing pleasing talk from Senators, it does sometimes interfere with the speaker on the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please cease conversation and observe order.

Mr. HALE. I was saying that I have no doubt, as to these Indian cases, that somewhere there are treaty stipulations, and perhaps in cases where we have taken Indian funds for the purpose of controlling them where there are damages inflicted by one tribe upon another or by one individual Indian upon another, that the Department audits the claim because of treaty obligations; but if the Senator should ask me to point out in every case the particular treaty that has been at the bottom of this auditing by the Treasury Department, I could not do that; we do not pretend to do that in the Committee on Appropriations, but we take the auditing from the Department; we take their say-so that the claim arises under a particular law or treaty.

I have no objection whatever if there are any cases here which Senators think are wrong to striking them out, and they will go over for a year, and can come in again when we shall have more time for a full explanation; but there is page after page of items in this bill as to which neither I nor any member of the Committee on Appropriations can give the statute or the date of the treaty that is at the bottom of their auditing by the Department. That is all I can say about the matter, Mr. President.

Mr. FORAKER. May I ask the Senator from Maine whether or not these claims have been audited by the Department?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; they have been.

Mr. HALE. They have all been audited.

Mr. FORAKER. They are all presented here and embodied in the bill on that account, are they?

Mr. HALE. They are. They are not only audited and sent in, but the committee classifies them and certifies by its classification what class of claims they are and before what auditor they came.

Mr. FORAKER. Some of them seem to be very old claims. I sent for the committee's report, but do not find any information given in that report as to the character of the claims or as to why they should be allowed. Of course, if they arise on account of treaty stipulations, I suppose they ought to be paid. I only wanted to know the nature of the Government's liability.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the Court of Claims have jurisdiction by law of certain classes of claims. They send us their judgments. We appropriate the money without any inquiry into the validity of those judgments; we take it for granted that the Court of Claims did not assume illegal jurisdiction and that their judgments are correct.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But these are not judgments of the Court Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. Wait a moment. Then we have a Treasury Department to adjust all claims and demands against the Government. All claims must go through the hands of the Auditor for the particular department and then they must go through the hands of the Comptroller of the Treasury, who has absolute and final jurisdiction and authority, even over that of the Secretary of the Treasury. We do not raise the presumption that this Auditor of the Treasury and this Comptroller of the Treasury, who hold the purse strings of the seven hundred or eight hundred million dollars that are paid out—we do not assume that these officers, acting under that responsibility, are allowing claims for which there is neither law nor treaty obligation.

It would be a physical impossibility for the Committee on Appropriations to undertake to go back of the action of the Auditor, the action of the Comptroller, and then that of the head of the department who sent the claim to them to be passed upon. That would be absolutely impossible for the committee.

Here is a claim filed for a depredation committed by one Indian upon another. It first goes to the Indian Office; then it is referred to the Auditor's Office. The Auditor scans the law or the treaty giving authority for him to consider it; if he approves it, it then goes to the Comptroller, who holds the key to the whole situation; and if he approves of it, it is then an audited, adjusted, and allowed claim, and it is reported to Congress for the necessary appropriation. The Committee on Appropriations could not undertake to go back of the action of the Auditor and of the Comptroller any more than they could go back of the action of the Court of Claims in the judgments that they have rendered. We presume the court has not assumed illegal authority or jurisdiction. We must assume that the Auditor or Comptroller have had legal authority and proper jurisdiction to act upon these claims. So you will find it all the way through.

I can not recall, for example, any treaty authorizing—

Payment to estate of Aggy Daren, a Chickasaw Indian, for stock stolen from her by Comanche Indians in 1866, $2,125.

I do, however, recollect very distinctly claims that were presented, but had not gone through the hands of the Auditor and the Comptroller, for Indian depredations committed by one Indian upon another; and on investigation we found that there was authority for the auditing of such claims. Whether or not there is authority in this particular case we do not know. We took it for granted that the Auditor had not assumed illegal or improper authority and had not assumed jurisdiction to hear, audit, and adjust a claim against the Government that was not just or right, and that if he had done that the Comptroller would have discovered the error and would have rejected the claim.

The Comptroller, as a rule, rejects claims unless the authority is clear beyond a reasonable doubt; and every once in a while you find we have got to relieve some accounting officer for a claim that he has paid because the Comptroller says that he did not have strict legal authority to do it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I assume, with the Senator from Missouri, that there must be some law or treaty which allows payment of these items, but I confess that I do not know what it is, and that these items come to me as a surprise. Here is one——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The first is on page 113.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Here are five claims to pay for stock stolen from the Chickasaw Indians by the Comanche Indians, amounting in all to over $10,000.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. They amount to nearly $90,000.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am not aware that those payments have been heretofore made, but I think the matter ought to be looked into, and I will suggest that it may all be looked into by the committee if we strike out this item on page 113 and then let the committee amendments stand. That will put them all in conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why strike out amendments made by the Senate and leave in all similar appropriations made by the House of Representatives that have already been agreed to?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No; I say strike out the appropriations made by the House and leave the amendments made by the Senate stand. That will put the whole subject into conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator really expect the Committee on Appropriations to call upon the Auditor to send us a statement of his authority to audit these claims, and then upon the Comptroller of the Treasury to send us a statement of his authority? Where would it end? To what would it lead? Are these two officers to be dishonored right at once?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I withdraw any objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I believe they are not assuming jurisdiction without some law. I have scanned their decisions for a number of years, and I have not found that they have been grasping for jurisdiction. On the contrary, the trouble is that they refuse to take jurisdiction. I have a little case here before me where the Auditor refused to entertain jurisdiction of a perfectly just claim because he said he had no legal authority to do so. They claim they had legal authority here. The Comptroller, who is very critical in his decisions, says that he had authority. Now the case comes to us, and the Senator wants us to go back of the returns and make an examination. It is impossible. You might as well strike the whole thing out and let it go.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, is there any question pending before the Senate? If so, I should like to inquire what it is?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question before the Senate except the appropriation bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I withdraw any objection that might have been implied in my calling attention to this amendment in the bill. The only reason I had for doing so was that in examining the bill I found there were several such cases, and I thought they might constitute a class. I have no further objection.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I simply rise to call attention to the fact that the United States entered into treaties with the Seminoles, Creeks, and Chickasaws, I think in 1857, by which it guaranteed payment to members of those tribes on account of depredations committed by other Indians under the same circumstances and on the same principle that the Government would guarantee the payment to white citizens of the United States on account of such depredations. We have included in the Indian appropriation bill an appropriation of some $600,000 based upon such treaty obligations.

Mr. FORAKER. Before proceeding with the reading of the bill, I only want to say that I had not thought at any time of opposing what the committee had recommended should be adopted, but I do think that when we are asked to make appropriations of this very unusual character there ought to be some information given in the bill that will make it intelligible to those who are to take the responsibility of voting money to make such payments.

I assume that all the officers have done their duty and that they had authority for making the United States Government pay the damage that some Indian sustained by reason of having his horse stolen by some other Indian; but it is such an unusual sort of performance, especially when these claims are nearly forty years old, that I should like to know on what authority it is done.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I have no knowledge of the treaty with the Choctaws under which I have no doubt this claim is made, and lawfully made, against the Government of the United States; but I have no possible doubt that in each one of the treaties with the Five Civilized Tribes provision is found by which the United States agrees to indemnify them for all damage to property inflicted either by red people or white people in the new lands to which they were removed west of the Mississippi. There is a clause of that sort in the treaty with the Seminoles, which I have had occasion to examine and under which Congress has made appropriations to meet damages.

The reason was this: The Indians were picked up from lands east of the Mississippi and moved to land in the far West, where they came in contact with the hostile prairie Indians. It was done by the Government of the United States practically against the will of the civilized tribes, and they demanded security from the United States for their persons and property when they went there. In the case of the Cherokees a century of warfare had existed between them and the Osages and was existing when they were removed. They were taken across the Mississippi and set down within arm's length of their lifelong enemies. That was the reason for these treaty stipulations, which I have no doubt are found in every treaty made with any one of the Five Civilized Tribes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 116, after line 18, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. The next amendment was, on page 122, after line 10, to insert:

To the State of Rhode Island $31,289.71.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the amendments now being agreed to. Claims of a character similar to these are pending in the Treasury Department in behalf of the State of Massachusetts, the State of New Jersey, and other States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. New Jersey is provided for here.

Mr. KEAN. Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. There is another State in addition to Pennsylvania and New Jersey, anyhow. I should like to know why they do not appear in connection with these amendments in the pending bill. Will the Senator from Maine please explain? I have no doubt there is a sufficient reason for it.

Mr. HALE. Yes. The explanation which I attempted to give about these audited claims a short time ago applies here. As fast as they send the claims in, audit them, and report we put them onto the bill. I have been hurrying up the Department for the last week or ten days, and we have put on everything they have audited. The claims of the other States to which the Senator from Pennsylvania alludes will be in undoubtedly, and will be upon the first bill reported at the next session.

Mr. QUAY. And they will be provided for by subsequent legislation?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. They always are.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 122, after line 12, to insert:

For the following additional payments to States, namely:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the State of Vermont the sum appropriated to that State under the act of July 1, 1902, or such part thereof as it may be entitled to, the accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized and directed to audit, adjust, and settle the mutual claims of the United States and the State of Vermont in respect to ordnance and quartermaster's stores furnished in the years 1864 and 1865, and on payment, a receipt in full shall be taken from the proper State authorities.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 123, to insert:

To pay the State of South Carolina for balance found due from the United States to said State, according to the computation made by the Comptroller of the Treasury up to January 1, 1881, as stated in his letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated February 21, 1903, $47,245.77, and interest upon the same at 4 per cent per annum until paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 123, line 10, to change the number of the section from 4 to 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 124, after line 20, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 125, after line 2, to insert:

Settlement No. 5008, of 1885, in favor of the Phoenix Insurance Company, of New York, $5,000, reported in Senate Executive Document No. 40, Fifty-third Congress, third session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 125, after line 7, to insert:

For the following, reported in Senate Document No. 156 at this session, namely, settlement No. 4813 of 1884, in favor of the Sun Mutual Insurance Company, New York, $5,860; the Commercial Mutual Insurance Company, $2,441.67; the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company, New York, $5,860; the assignees of Washington Marine Insurance Company, New York, $4,500; in all, $18,661.67.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 125, after line 20, to insert:

Settlement No. 9657 of 1894, to the assignees of Washington Marine Insurance Company New York, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 125, after line 24, to insert:

To pay the Treasury settlements reported to Congress in Senate Document No. 191 at the present session, 19,211.61.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 126, after line 3, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 6. That the sum of $16,933.33 appropriated to be paid to Henry V. Lester, administrator of James Barr, deceased, as surviving partner of the firm of Stewart & Barr, in the act entitled: "An act for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1902 (p. 219 of vol. 32, U. S. Stat. at L.), shall be paid as follows: Henry V. Lester, administrator of James Stuart, deceased, $8,466.67, and Henry V. Lester, administrator of James Barr, deceased, $8,466.66: Provided, however, That the same shall not be paid until the Court of Claims shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that the administrator of said estates represents the next of kin of said James Stuart and James Barr, and the court which granted the administrations on said estates shall have certified that the administrator has given adequate security for the legal disbursement of the amounts herein appropriated.

That the amount appropriated to be paid under the clause reading as follows: "On the ship Theresa, Philip Brum, master, namely, George W. Lock wood, administrator of the estate of John A. Dubernat, deceased, $13,537.50: Provided, however, That the amount so appropriated shall not be paid until the Court of Claims shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that the administrator of said estate represents the next of kin of John A. Dubernat, or, in the event the court shall find there are no such next of kin and that there was a widow of said John A. Dubernat, then that said sum be paid to the personal representative of such widow for and on behalf of the next of kin of such widow," in the act entitled "An act for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1902 (p. 219 of vol. 32, U. S. Stat. at L.), be paid instead to J. Stellman Hogg, administrator of the estate of Louisia R. C. Durkee, formerly Dubernat, widow of the said John A. Dubernat, deceased: Provided, however, That the same shall not be paid until the Court of Claims shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that the administrator represents the next of kin of said widow, and the court which granted the administration to the said administrator shall certify that he has given adequate security for the legal disbursement of the amount herein appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 128, after line 6, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 7. For payment of the salaries and expenses of the Department of Commerce and Labor, established by the "Act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor," approved February 14, 1903, for the fiscal years 1903 and 1904, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, at the rate of $8,000 per annum; private secretary to the Secretary, at the rate of $2,500 per annum; Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Labor, at the rate of $5,000 per annum; private secretary to the Assistant Secretary, at the rate of $1,800 per annum; chief clerk, at the rate of $3,000 per annum; disbursing clerk, at the rate of $2,500 per annum; chief of the Bureau of Manufactures, at the rate of $4,000 per annum; Commissioner of Corporations, at the rate of $5,000 per annum; Deputy Commissioner of Corporations, at the rate of $3,500 per annum; chief clerk to the Bureau of Corporations, at the rate of $2,000 per annum; in all, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

For such number of clerks of class 4, clerks of class 3, clerks of class 2, clerks of class 1, clerks at the rate of $1,000 each per annum, clerks at the rate of $900 each per annum, clerks at the rate of $720 each per annum, messengers, assistant messengers, and for the services of such other persons, at a rate of compensation not exceeding $1,000 each per annum, as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may deem to be requisite and necessary in his office and in the Bureau of Manufactures and Corporations, in addition to the employees that may be transferred hereunder from the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, not exceeding $50,000.

For contingent expenses of the office of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Bureaus of Manufactures and Corporations, namely:

For the purchase of professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, periodicals, blank books, pamphlets, maps, newspapers (not exceeding $2,500), stationery, furniture and repairs to the same, carpets, matting, oilcloth, file cases, towels, ice, brooms, soap, sponges, fuel, lighting and heating; for the purchase, exchange, and care of horses and vehicles, to be used only for official purposes; freight and express charges, postage, telegraph and telephone service; typewriters, and adding machines, and all other miscellaneous items and necessary expenses not included in the foregoing, $50,000.

For rent of necessary quarters for the offices of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Bureaus of Manufactures and Corporations, $16,000.

For printing and binding for the offices of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Bureaus of Manufactures and Corporations, to be executed under the direction of the Public Printer, $100,000.

For compensation of special agents in the Bureau of Corporations, and for their traveling and subsistence expenses while traveling on duty, $30,000.

That all appropriations made for the fiscal year 1904 for the Department of Labor, Fish Commission, bureaus, offices, or other divisions of whatever designation or character, transferred or that may be transferred from any executive department to the Department of Commerce and Labor under the act approved February 14, 1903, shall be available for expenditure in and by the Department of Commerce and Labor, and shall be treated the same as though said branches of the public service had been directly named in the laws making said appropriations as parts of the Department of Commerce and Labor, under the direction of the Secretary of the Department: Provided, That as to all general appropriations for printing and binding, rent, and contingent or miscellaneous expenses, the amounts that shall be transferred hereunder, except where the same are specifically fixed by law, shall in the case of each bureau, office, or other division be not less than the average amount expended on account of or allotted for expenditure to each of the same during the fiscal years 1902 and 1903.

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, as soon as may be practicable and before the 1st day of July, 1903, to transfer to the Department of Commerce and Labor all chiefs of divisions, assistant chiefs of divisions, clerks, messengers, assistant messengers, watchmen, charwomen, and laborers now employed in the divisions of his office who are wholly engaged upon the work relating to the business of the bureaus and offices of the Treasury Department transferred or to be transferred to the Department of Commerce and Labor under the act of February 14, 1903; and in proportion to the number of persons in the divisions of his office whose time and labor are partially devoted to the work of said bureaus and offices he shall transfer approximately an equivalent number of clerks and other employees to said Department of Commerce and Labor, and the appropriations made for the compensation of all persons transferred hereunder shall be credited to and disbursed by the Department of Commerce and Labor.

That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall submit to Congress for the fiscal year 1905, and annually thereafter, estimates in detail for all personal services and for all general and miscellaneous expenses for the Department of Commerce and Labor.

That all bureaus, offices, and divisions transferred to the Department of Commerce and Labor now occupying quarters in any building owned by the United States shall continue therein until otherwise provided for by Congress.

The President may, in his discretion, direct the diversion from the appropriation of $500,000 for the enforcement of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," and divers other acts, heretofore made for the Department of Justice in an act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, approved February 25, 1903, an amount not exceeding $100,000 of said appropriation, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor in furtherance of the objects intended by the said appropriation.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To enable the Department of State to comply with the requirements of section 11 of the act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor, approved February 14, 1903: Chief of bureau, $2,250; 1 clerk of class 2, $1,400; 1 clerk of class 1, $1,200; 1 assistant messenger, $720; in all, $5,570.

Mr. HALE. In line 15, page 132, I move to strike out the word "now" and insert "after July 1, 1903."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. After line 17, page 132, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 17, on page 132, it is proposed to insert:

Except the Bureau of Immigration and the Steamboat-Inspection Service, which may be removed from the Treasury building to the Builders' Exchange building, 719-721 Thirteenth street NW., premises now occupied in part by the Treasury Department.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HALE. Now, I have a few committee amendments which I will now offer. At the top of page 6 I move to strike out all that part of the amendment beginning with "Contingent expenses" and going down to the word "salaries," in the third line.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 1, after the word "namely," it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Contingent expenses, foreign missions, 1891, $12.50.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Let the clerks correct the total in line 7, page 6, by making it "$70.69."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 8, I move to strike out lines 18, 19, and 20.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, it is proposed to strike out the paragraph beginning in line 18 and ending in line 20, as follows:

The Secretary of State is hereby authorized to cause, from time to time, the destruction of invoices that have been filed in the consular offices for a period of more than five years.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 20, after line 5, I move an amendment to cover the public-buildings act.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

Toward the construction of new public buildings, the extension of the cost of certain public buildings, and the acquisition of sites for public buildings, authorized in the act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," and within the limits specified in said act, $3,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. What is the amount the Senator proposes?

Mr. HALE. Three million dollars.

Mr. WARREN. Two and a half million is all that the bill carries, or less than that.

Mr. HALE. Yes. The committee was not able to go into detail and distribute these sums, but put in a gross amount, believing it would be all that the bill would require, and they sent to the Department for a distribution in detail to the different buildings, which will be inserted in conference. This amendment gives jurisdiction to the conference to consider that. There is no limitation that will in any way control that final action upon the specific information before the bill passes. I wish the Senator himself, if there are any matters that he thinks will not be cared for by the reports from the Department, would communicate with the committee of conference, so that nothing will be left out. It is the intention to cover everything that is provided in that bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. Do I understand that the bill which is now in conference will not be completed, and the amount added up, but that this lump sum of $3,000,000 is to be left to the discretion of the Secretary?

Mr. HALE. Oh, no. The bill itself gives all the limitations in the different classes. It gives the extension of limit, the new provisions for sites, and for any other class, but does not carry appropriations. If that bill as passed the two Houses and thrown into conference is not supplemented here, while it will stand as an existing law, it has not the breath of life breathed into it so far as any actual work, without an appropriation of the money.

Mr. TILLMAN. Would the conference with the other House allow this amount to be increased?

Mr. HALE. Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. TILLMAN. In other words, if the public-building bill after being agreed upon and ratified by both Houses and becoming a law showed that there was more in it than the sum here appropriated, would the committee of conference on this bill have the power to increase the amount here appropriated, so as to make it correspond?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. The House may disagree with our provision because we have not put enough in. So there is no limitation that in any way will control if we are met by the fact that the adding up of different provisions covered by that law amounts to more than the sum here appropriated.

Mr. WARREN. The statement of the Senator in charge of the bill is entirely satisfactory. I made the inquiry only to know if he understood the amount the public-building bill carries. As he has so well stated, the public-building bill itself carries the limit. This will provide money enough for immediate use, and if we are out of money when we meet next December the same committee will bring in an urgency deficiency bill that will provide for any shortage which may then appear.

Mr. HALE. That is true. Of course, the main thing is that the bill becomes a law with the limitation. The moneys follow after that as needed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to two or three little amendments.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator wait until I get through?

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to wait until the Senator got through with the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 22, line 8, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "sixty" and insert "seventy," so as to read "$1,370,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. After the word "Revenue," in line 17, on page 22, I move to strike out the period and insert a comma and the following:

But no such claim shall be paid unless presented prior to April 1, 1903.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 26, after line 7, I move to insert:

Assessor's office: For temporary clerk hire, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 63, after line 17, I move to insert:

For payment to James Deitrick, for rent of land office at Peavy, Alaska, and for supplies furnished to R. C. Nichols, receiver of public moneys, for use of said land office, and for freight and drayage paid the land office, furniture and supplies from St. Michael to Peavy, Alaska, as per account rendered and certified to by R. C. Nichols, late receiver, $1,623.32.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 67, after line 11, I move to strike out the period and insert a comma and the following:

And the amount reported in said Senate document for Frederick W. Pettigrew and Ernest J. Lacy, contract No. 139, South Dakota, dated April 22, 1899, shall be paid to R. F. Pettigrew, as administrator of Frederick W. Pettigrew.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 80, after line 15, I move to insert as a separate paragraph:

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for "Entomological investigations" for the fiscal year 1902, with which the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to adjust and pay the claim of W. C. Heath, of Victoria, Tex., arising under a contract dated March 8, 1902, for growing cotton in connection with an investigation into the ravages of the cotton-boll weevil, with a view of ascertaining the best method of exterminating the same, $3,013.18.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 90, line 4, before the word "hundred," I move to change the total by striking out "two" and inserting "three;" so as to read "$5,314.16."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 95, line 19, after the word "thousand," I move to add "one hundred and twenty-five;" so as to read "$5,125."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 101, in line 24, after the words "one hundred and eighty-seven," I move to insert "and two hundred." It refers to another document.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The word "Document" should be in the plural at the end of line 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

Mr. HALE. At the top of page 102 I move to make the total read $290,354.49.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 103, in line 19, after the words "Document No. 377," I move to insert "and Senate Document No. 194."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On the same page, in line 21, I move to change the total to $6,359.05.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 104—these are simply to cure documents and totals—I move to strike out all of the amendment after the words "three hundred and sixty-nine," in line 14, and to insert a comma and the following:

Certified in Senate Documents Nos. 190 and 196, $261,767.69.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I present as an amendment the following audited claims, which have just come in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 121, after line 12, insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 4. That for the payment of the following claims, certified to be due by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund, under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and under appropriations heretofore treated as permanent, being for the service of the fiscal year 1900, and prior years, unless otherwise stated, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in Senate Document No. 198, reported to Congress at its present session, there is appropriated as follows:

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

For headstones for graves of soldiers, $4.52.

ALLOWED BY THE COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

For salaries and commissions of registers and receivers, $272.23.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 126 I move to insert a provision for the following audited claims, which have just come in.

The SECRETARY. On page 126, after line 3, insert:

Settlement No. 5201, of 1885, in favor of the Eureka Fire and Marine Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, reported in House Executive Document No. 153, Forty-eighth Congress, second session, $4,574.19.

For the following, reported in Senate Document No. 60, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, namely, settlement No. 5300, of 1885, in favor of the Magnolia Fire and Marine Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, $2,333.33; settlement No. 5363, of 1885, in favor of the Magnolia Fire and Marine Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, $3,000; the City Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, $3,000; settlement No. 5068, of 1884, in favor of the National Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, $3,000; the American Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, $4,000; the Central Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, $3,000; settlement No. 5085, of 1884, in favor of the American Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, $4,667; in all, $23,000.33.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 94, after line 11, I move to insert the following paragraph:

For compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the Senate, namely, for 16 pages, at the rate of $2.50 a day during the session, $3,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I am very glad to say that as far as I am concerned I am through.

Mr. HOAR. I move to insert on page 33, after line 2, the following:

To reimburse the Washington Market Company for furnishing and putting in place 1,072 lockers in the new armory quarters over Center Market for the service of the fiscal year 1898, $2,547.25; and to reimburse the Washington Market Company for extraordinary repairs to quarters vacated by the National Guard of the District of Columbia after being used for armory purposes, for the service of the fiscal year 1895, $800.

Mr. HALE. That item has been put on several times by the Senate. I do not object to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMON. I offer an amendment which I understand the Senator having charge of the bill does not oppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, after line 19, insert:

That the military records of the Indian wars now preserved in the Interior or other Departments be transferred to the War Department, to be preserved in the Record and Pension Division of the War Department, and that they shall be properly indexed and arranged for use.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I desire to direct the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to two items that I think may have escaped his notice. I ask him to turn to page 130 and examine the appropriations from line 13 to line 19, inclusive. The first is as follows:

For printing and binding for the offices of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Bureaus of Manufactures and Corporations, to be executed under the direction of the Public Printer, $100,000.

And the next three lines read as follows:

For compensation of special agents in the Bureau of Corporations, and for their traveling and subsistence expenses while traveling on duty, $30,000.

The first item appears to me to be wholly out of proportion and too much. I have not had much experience in these matters. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] may know about such matters, but I do not see where it is possible to need that much money.

In the other item it looks to me like the compensation of $30,000 for special agents is inadequate, because if this Bureau of Corporations, which is to investigate into all matters which have been provided for in antitrust bills, is to be of any use it must have correct information. If it is the demand of the President and others that we should have publicity and correct information in regard to such matters these agents will have a great deal to do. There are a great many of these corporations whose affairs will have to be investigated, and I should think that $30,000 would be so small and inadequate a sum that really there will be nothing accomplished by it, while the sum of $100,000 for printing and binding for this Bureau must be too much. I submit to the Senator whether it will not be well to increase the one and decrease the other?

Mr. HALE. The new Secretary appeared before the subcommittee after the bill had been reported and he desired a much larger sum for printing, saying that in the first steps in setting up housekeeping, as I may call it, he would need very much more printing in the way of blank books to start out with than afterwards. He desired a larger appropriation than $100,000, but we said that we thought that that would carry him through until December, and by that time he would know better really what he did want. Upon that suggestion he said he would try to get along with the $100,000. It is only a question as to when the appropriation is made.

Now, as to the other fund—compensation for special agents—we also said to him that in that regard we thought he ought to go carefully and be certain to select first-class men for this important and rather delicate duty; and we give him, in addition to the $30,000 provided here, $100,000 of the $500,000 fund that was appropriated for the Attorney-General's Department in another bill, so that he has $130,000. I should doubt whether, if the Department is conducted upon careful and conservative lines, he can set a force at work between now and December large enough and able enough practically——

Mr. TILLMAN. And honest enough.

Mr. HALE. And of course, as the Senator says, honest enough, I doubt whether he will use as much of this money as we have given him. But we did not want on this subject to confine him, and did not want it to be considered by anybody that we were niggardly upon the work of this Bureau of Corporations, which undoubtedly is largely in the public mind and has important and serious duties to perform; so that the answer to the Senator is that the $30,000 does not begin to cover what we have given.

Mr. TILLMAN. I call the Senator's attention to the bottom of page 132, where this $100,000 is transferred. The language which is used there is:

An amount not exceeding $100,000 of said appropriation to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor in furtherance of the objects intended by the said appropriation.

Now, what are "the objects intended by the said appropriation" of $500,000? If I recollect, the objects were to enable the Attorney-General to enforce the antitrust law. Is it the intention by this transfer of this $100,000 there to put it into the Department of Commerce and Labor as a fund for the purpose of prosecution?

Mr. HALE. I do not think anybody can say just how it is in furtherance of the enforcement of the statute which is referred to here, and also of the work of the Department of Justice. Whether the Secretary will use all this money in initiating suits or in disclosing and investigating subjects and facts that will result in suits I can not tell.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is there anything in this bill—I have not had time to examine it critically—authorizing this new Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor to institute suits against anybody for anything?

If you divert from the Attorney-General's Office $100,000 and transfer it to this new Department, then you might insert after the word "objects," in line 3, on page 133, the words "and duties of the said Department of Commerce and Labor;" so that the $100,000 would be added to the contingent fund, so to speak, provided on lines 17, 18, and 19, on page 130, to which the Senator was asking attention a moment ago as having been increased by this $100,000. So that the $130,000 would be given for the purposes involved in the creation of this Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to putting in after the words "in furtherance of the objects intended by the said appropriation" the words "and for the service of the Department of Commerce and Labor."

Mr. TILLMAN. I have merely tried to point out these apparent discrepancies or contradictions of purpose; but if the Senator from Maine is satisfied with the bill as it stands I shall not interfere.

Mr. HALE. I say I have no objection to putting in the words "and for the service of the Department of Commerce and Labor."

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the words "intended by the said appropriation," if left in the bill, would signify that to this Department was to be given the power to help enforce the antitrust law, as the original appropriation carried that duty to the Department of Justice. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that some amendment should be adopted which would indicate just what is intended by this, or clarify or supplement it in some way, and I have suggested that we strike out the words "intended by the said appropriation," and amend the clause so as to read "in furtherance of the objects and duties of the said Department of Commerce and Labor."

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Maine and the Senator from South Carolina will permit me, the trouble about that is that the money could be used for any of the purposes of the Department of Commerce and Labor. As I understand the purpose of the committee, it is to transfer from the Department of Justice a part of a given sum which has been appropriated to enable that Department to perform certain services, which I suppose are described in the act, and to enable it to execute the antitrust law.

Mr. ALLISON. And in addition to that, also, to consider everything connected with interstate commerce, the original act of 1887, and all amendments to it. It has a double purpose.

Mr. BAILEY. It has a double purpose. Now, if you leave this language there as it stands in the bill, "intended by the said appropriation," then the money will be available for the Commerce and Labor Department to acquire information as to violations of the antitrust law or of the interstate-commerce law, and that information, I take it, would be, under the law as it stands, filed with the Department of Justice.

If you desire that this $100,000 shall be used for that purpose, to leave the language now employed better accomplishes that object; but if you strike that out and put in the general language that this money may be used for the purposes of this Department, then the Department could use it for printing or for any other purpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. I certainly do not want to do that. I am endeavoring to have the Department of Commerce and Labor discharge the duties which have been assigned to it, to gather information on all the subjects which have been designated, and also to participate in or assist in giving light and hunting evidence on the question of trusts and the prosecution of trusts.

Mr. HALE. That is just what they will do with this money.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then we had better let the language stand as it is.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator is right. I think the provision is better as it stands.

Mr. RAWLINS. I send an amendment to the desk, to which I invite the attention of the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 11 on page 67, after the amendment already adopted, it is proposed to insert:

For payment to Matthew H. Dalley for surveys executed by him under his contract No. 224, Utah, $3,133.92.

Mr. HALE. The committee will look into that amendment and see if it provides for an audited claim. If so, it ought to go on the bill; but if not, it ought not to go on the bill. So I do not raise any question of order about it.

Mr. RAWLINS. Let the amendment go on the bill, and I think the Senator, on investigation, will find that it is all right.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am inclined to think it is an audited claim.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I offer an amendment, to which I call the attention of the Senator from Maine, on page 72, after line 20.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 20, on page 72, it is proposed to insert the following:

Sulphur Springs Reservation, Ind. T.: The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to appraise, at their actual value at the time of such appraisement, all town lots upon which there were, prior to July 1, 1902, permanent, valuable, and substantial improvements, other than fencing or tillage, and held by citizens of the United States within the limits of the tract of land ceded to the United States by the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations at or near Sulphur Springs, in the Chickasaw Nation, Ind. T., and pay for the same to such lot holders, severally, 50 per cent of the appraised value of such lots by warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Interior upon the Treasurer of the United States, and the amount necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

For fencing said Sulphur Springs Reservation and improving the same for the purposes contemplated in the establishment of such reservation, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $25,000.

Mr. HALE. I know nothing whatever about this matter and the committee have had no opportunity to examine it. It is clearly a case of new legislation, and I am constrained to make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suppose, if the Senator makes the point of order, it lies against the amendment; but it is one which ought to have been considered on the Indian appropriation bill. It has the approval of the Secretary of the Interior by a letter which he addressed, I think, to the Committee on Appropriations, but the Senator in charge of this bill says the committee knows nothing about it. I tried to explain it to the committee, but the trouble seems to be that I did not make myself understood.

Mr. HALE. I do not mean to say that the committee know nothing about it, but we do not know enough about it to justify us in putting it on this bill. As the Senator says, the amendment ought to have gone on the Indian appropriation bill, a bill which does not come before the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KEAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in under the head of "War Department."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

That the sum of $30,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Princeton Battle Monument Association of New Jersey, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to aid in erecting and completing on the battlefield of Princeton, in the State of New Jersey, a suitable monument: Provided, That no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be available until said Princeton Battle Monument Association shall have raised an additional sum of $30,000, to be expended in the erection of said monument and in the purchase and improvement of the site: And provided further, That the design for said monument shall be approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if I had not just made the point of order on the provision offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], I should let this go, but I am constrained to make the point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RAWLINS. I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer, to come in on page 76, after line 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 76, after line 3, it is proposed to insert:

For the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands, as an additional appropriation to carry into effect the act of June 17, 1902, entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," $50,000,000.

Mr. HALE. That is a little matter, Mr. President, but I feel constrained to make the point of order against it. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Maine to withdraw his point of order for a moment, until I can make a brief explanation of the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. HALE. I must, out of courtesy, yield to the Senator; but the bill is almost through, and I hope the Senator will not consume much time.

Mr. RAWLINS. I assure the Senator that I am not seeking to delay the passage of this bill.

Mr. President, I would not have thought of introducing this amendment, but for the discussion which we had on Saturday last, arising upon the bank-deposit bill introduced by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. That discussion disclosed the fact that there are now locked up in the Treasury of the United States some $444,000,000, and it was said that the withdrawal from circulation of this vast sum of money was very injuriously affecting the business interests of the United States. It was pointed out that it was necessary to get this money into circulation, and that there was but one way of accomplishing that object, the way pointed out by the bill under consideration, introduced by the Senator from Rhode Island. That way is to deposit these moneys in national banks upon the basis of the securities specified in the bill containing a provision, which may or may not be retained, to the effect that the banks shall pay interest thereon at the rate of 1½ per cent interest per annum.

Mr. HALE rose.

Mr. RAWLINS. If the Senator will be patient, I am nearly through.

Mr. HALE. I yielded to the Senator because he wanted to make some explanation of his amendment. Of course, I can not control the Senator; but I hope, after having yielded to him, that the Senator will, so far as he can reasonably do so, confine himself to this bill——

Mr. RAWLINS. That is decidedly what I am doing.

Mr. HALE. Because it is being hung up, and I want to get it over to the other House and get it into conference. The Senator knows how important that is.

Mr. RAWLINS. I appreciate the importance of that, and if the Senator will be patient, I shall complete my statement in a very few minutes.

It occurred to me, Mr. President, that as the people of the United States own an outlying domain, their property of many million acres, now of no value for lack of water for its reclamation and irrigation, and as Congress has already declared by law in favor of the policy of the public reclamation of those lands by expenditures from the National Treasury, that by the application of these moneys, now locked up in the Treasury and not doing business for the people, to the construction of irrigation works, to the improvement of these lands now belonging to the people of the United States, putting them in such shape that they may serve the purpose of providing homes for all the people of the United States—the people of the East, where the population is congested, as well as the people of the West—where every dollar advanced will be an accretion to the value of the property belonging to the United States, in execution of a law which provides that when the lands are thus reclaimed and disposed of to actual settlers in limited quantities, those settlers shall reimburse the Treasury in installments, so that in the end the money will come back into the Treasury of the United States—I say that it would be far better to take a portion of this surplus money locked up in the Treasury, now doing no business, and devote it to this public end of great utility, thus benefiting all the people of the United States, than it would be to apply it, under the operation of the bank-deposit bill now under consideration, to certain banks, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be held and disposed of by them on terms advantageous to the banks alone, under which no poor settler seeking a home and desiring to become a good and profitable citizen of the United States would be able to obtain it; where its benefits will accrue to a very limited number who do not need any benefit; where it is a devotion of public funds, raised by taxation, to no public purpose—that it would be far better to improve this vast domain.

The States named in the irrigation act passed at the last session include about half the territory over which the jurisdiction of the United States extends, and if applied as proposed in the amendment which I have offered this $50,000,000, now serving no purpose, would pass into circulation; it would go into the hands of the people who most need it; it would tend to the upbuilding of homes; it would strengthen the Republic; it would add value to property belonging to all the people of the United States, and as we have the alternative of giving this money—I say "giving" because the contention is that the object of this bill to which I have referred is to enlarge the circulation, to increase the money——

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. RAWLINS. I yield.

Mr. BURTON. Just a word. I did not quite catch the purpose of the Senator. It seems to me he must be speaking on something else; but the Senator well understands that $50,000,000 can not be used as provided in his amendment. He is prejudicing the subject of irrigation, is he not? I ask the Senator to reserve his speech and put it in on the other bill, if it is on that, because he will hurt irrigation, I am afraid.

Mr. RAWLINS. I do not think I am hurting irrigation; at least I will take chances on it. The proposition is to get this money, $444,000,000, into circulation. That is the primary object of the bill reported by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BURTON rose.

Mr. RAWLINS. If the Senator will permit me to answer the question——

Mr. BURTON. We run water through the ditches; we do not want to run money through them. Does the Senator want to fill the ditches with money?

Mr. RAWLINS. I have no doubt that the constituents of the Senator from Kansas would accept a proposition of that kind if it were offered; but I have not offered any such proposition. I am suggesting a way other than that pointed out by the bill of the Senator from Rhode Island by which this money now locked up in the Treasury might be gotten into circulation and serve a great public purpose.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. RAWLINS. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I am quite surprised by the Senator's moderation, and I suppose he is surprised at his own moderation. Why does the Senator simply propose to appropriate $50,000,000? Why does he not make it $300,000,000?

Mr. RAWLINS. I do not wish to appropriate all the money in the Treasury of the United States. The Senator from Rhode Island, acting no doubt in the interest of the national bankers of the city of New York, because I do not understand that national bankers anywhere else want this bill—I myself am interested in a national bank, and I have no prejudice against banks—is demanding this entire fund for the bankers of the city of New York. His modesty is without limitation. I have no doubt that the imagination of other Senators from other sections and States will conceive methods by which this money can be taken out of the Treasury and applied to advantageous uses. The whole purpose of this bill of the Senator from Rhode Island is to get the money out of the Treasury and put it into circulation, and I am acting upon the suggestion of this measure, to which the majority of Senators upon the other side seem to be committed. Here is over $400,000,000 locked up which can not do business. It seems now to be impossible to get it into circulation so as to prevent stringency and panic. When put into the banks it passes into circulation; the business of the country will be conducted upon it; values will be fixed and adjusted in relation to it; and when so adjusted there will be a superstructure dependent upon that as a foundation, and we shall be unable to get the money back into the Treasury without destroying that. This money, if disposed of as provided under the provisions of this proposed legislation, I take it, can no more be reclaimed, without disaster to the country, than can the $143,000,000, which has already been deposited in banks by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. President, as it can not be reclaimed, the sole question is, To what uses this surplus, so detrimental in now being locked up, can be most usefully applied? It has occurred to me that the people in the United States who desire to make homes upon land now worthless might utilize it, not only to their own advantage, but to the public weal.

Mr. ALLISON. I would be glad to have the Senator from Utah state how much money there is now in the Treasury applicable to irrigation, under the law passed a few years ago.

Mr. RAWLINS. I regret that I have not accurate information upon the subject. Doubtless other Senators have.

Mr. DUBOIS. About ten millions.

Mr. RAWLINS. About $10,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand. I want to ask the Senator if he does not think ten millions will suffice for irrigation purposes for the fiscal year? If so, I do not see why we should appropriate $50,000,000 now, when we already have a surplus of ten millions awaiting the action of those in charge of the irrigation business.

Mr. WARREN. Without taking any part in the discussion, I desire to say that I think there is much less than ten million in the fund. At least I am so informed.

Mr. ALLISON. It is over $7,000,000, I know.

Mr. WARREN. Seven million would be nearer the number than ten.

Mr. ALLISON. There is enough there.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. How much of the public moneys have the banks of the country now?

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator mean how much of the public money is deposited in national banks?

Mr. PATTERSON. That is what I mean.

Mr. ALLISON. Every day we see that in the statement which is put on our desks. I do not know exactly what it was yesterday, but it is in the neighborhood of $145,000,000.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then I want to ask the Senator if he does not think that is about enough for the banks to have. Ought the remainder which is available go to the banks also, or can it not be used to better advantage in promoting the industrial interests and welfare of the country?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand there is a bill pending now on which that question is being very ably discussed on the other side and on this side of the Chamber. The question how much ought to be in the banks and how much ought not to be in the banks can be discussed upon that bill. I do not want to delay the appropriation bill for the purposes of that discussion.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, this is the last and final appropriation bill. There will be no vehicle by which to convey this money to the people of the United States if it is not placed upon the pending bill.

As to the question which the Senator from Iowa propounded to me, whether we have not a surplus of seven or ten millions in the irrigation fund, I confess I have not the figures. But it is not a surplus. That fund is so limited that the Geological Survey, which is now making investigations of various projects for the reclamation of arid lands in the West, has on hand a most serious problem. There are some six or eight States seeking the application of this limited fund within their borders, to carry into execution important enterprises. If the money is divided among the States there will be but a bagatelle to any one of them. For instance, there is the State of Wyoming. The able Senator from that State is competent to speak as to what amount of money could be utilized in that State for the reclamation of arid lands. Senators from North and South Dakota can speak for their own States. The Senator from Idaho can speak for his State. The Senator from Washington for his. The Senator from Kansas has already indicated that his people do not want their irrigation ditches filled with money, but undoubtedly they would like to have them filled with water, which might be provided by money.

So the whole irrigation scheme has been halted in the attempt to administer it for the very reason that the moneys available for that purpose are inadequate and will prove inadequate. There are two or three enterprises in my State which, if carried into execution, would be of immense value to the Government of the United States, and yet not one dollar of money will be made available out of this fund to initiate the construction of those works. That is true also in Idaho and elsewhere.

I do not want to delay the appropriation bill. Perhaps I am not so desirous of delaying the appropriation bill as I am the bank-deposit bill. I wish to invite attention to the matter of the best method of unlocking the money now tied up in the Treasury. It seems to me there are two things which are legitimate subjects for the consideration of Congress at this juncture. One is to reduce taxation—to cease to take an excessive amount of money from the pockets of the people to be tied up in the Treasury or to be disposed of in illegitimate ways. Secondly, to seek public purposes to which to devote the money in the public Treasury, objects to which that money can be applied in accordance with the purpose of those who founded the Government—in other words, the application of the fund to public uses.

No one, I take it, by any ingenuity can successfully contend that to take money wrested from the people, and now in the Treasury, and loan it to a bank—which may be a parent, with many branches to be created, to constitute itself a monopoly of the banking business of the country—is to devote it to a public purpose.

Mr. President, in addition to what I have already said, I desire to have printed as a part of my remarks sections 4 and 5 of the irrigation act:

SEC. 4. That upon the determination by the Secretary of the Interior that any irrigation project is practicable, he may cause to be let contracts for the construction of the same, in such portions or sections as it may be practicable to construct and complete as parts of the whole project, providing the necessary funds for such portions or sections are available in the reclamation fund, and thereupon he shall give public notice of the lands irrigable under such project, and limit of area per entry, which limit shall represent the acreage which, in the opinion of the Secretary, may be reasonably required for the support of a family upon the lands in question; also of the charges which shall be made per acre upon the said entries, and upon lands in private ownership which may be irrigated by the waters of the said irrigation project, and the number of annual installments, not exceeding ten, in which such charges shall be paid and the time when such payments shall commence. The said charges shall be determined with a view of returning to the reclamation fund the estimated cost of construction of the project, and shall be apportioned equitably: Provided, That in all construction work eight hours shall constitute a day's work, and no Mongolian labor shall be employed thereon.

SEC. 5. That the entryman upon lands to be irrigated by such works shall, in addition to compliance with the homestead laws, reclaim at least one-half of the total irrigable area of his entry for agricultural purposes, and before receiving patent for the lands covered by his entry shall pay to the Government the charges apportioned against such tract, as provided in section 4. No right to the use of water for land in private ownership shall be sold for a tract exceeding 160 acres to any one landowner, and no such sale shall be made to any landowner unless he be an actual bona fide resident on such land, or occupant thereof residing in the neighborhood of said land, and no such right shall permanently attach until all payments therefor are made. The annual installments shall be paid to the receiver of the local land office of the district in which the land is situated, and a failure to make any two payments when due shall render the entry subject to cancellation, with the forfeiture of all rights under this act, as well as of any moneys already paid thereon. All moneys received from the above sources shall be paid into the reclamation fund. Registers and receivers shall be allowed the usual commissions on all moneys paid for lands entered under this act.

It is in furtherance of the policy of these two sections and of the execution of this law that I have offered the amendment in question. It may possibly be amenable to the point of order which the Senator from Maine indicates he will raise against it, although it is in execution of existing law.

If this appropriation is made, the $50,000,000 will not be deposited in banks. It will not draw a cent and a half per annum interest. It will construct canals, which will make lands now valueless worth $10, $15, or $25 per acre. This enhancement of value by reason of this investment of money to this end will increase the wealth of the country.

The lands will be disposed of to actual settlers, for which the settlers will pay in installments the amount of money proportionately invested by the Government for the reclamation of the land, and the land itself stands as security for the repayment of the money. There is a deficiency of money for that purpose now in the fund. If the Senator from Maine has any doubt about it, and will make inquiry of the Geological Bureau, I think he will be so advised. They have plans for great, useful enterprises which can not be carried into effect unless these additional appropriations are made. We have no rivers and harbors in my State, and I have asked nothing for such purposes. These moneys are piled up, and the covetous eyes of men in the East are upon this fund. We can not reduce taxation, it is said.

The monopoly of manufacturing interests, by reason of which they exact much higher prices from the American people consuming their goods than they exact from foreigners, forces a tribute from the American people which goes into the coffers of those corporations to the extent of the difference between the price they exact from foreigners and that which they exact of the American people. These combined interests, which have this monopoly by virtue of law, demand that there shall be no reduction of taxes, and the people in my State and in other States in this country must continue to pay more than is needed to defray the expenses of this Government.

The greed of these monopolies seems to know no end, and they have their covetous eyes on this money in the Treasury. They have received untold millions which have gone directly from the pockets of the people into their coffers. Other money in excess of what was needed by the Government has gone into the Treasury. Now they demand that that which is in the Treasury be turned over to them, too.

There is plenty of time to discuss these features, because the bill of the Senator from Rhode Island is hovering about us, patiently waiting to follow on the heels of the present appropriation bill, and the sole argument upon which it is made to rest is the surplus of money in the Treasury. Appropriation bills are designed to make a legitimate use of public money in the Treasury, and that is the object of this bill. The bill which is to follow upon its heels is to make a devotion of public funds to a private use.

Mr. BAILEY. I can not quite understand what the Senator means when he says devoting public funds to a private use; and as I support the bill to which he refers, I simply desire to ask him a question. Does he believe it is devoting to his profit and use the money of the depositors in his bank when they deposit it there? The Senator told us that he is interested in a national bank. I take it that, like all other national banks, it receives deposits. Does the Senator regard it as a devotion of that money to an improper use when the depositors place it there to their credit, with the privilege of withdrawing it any hour of any day?

Mr. RAWLINS. I am very glad the Senator has asked me that question. If I have money, I have the power and right to devote it to any legitimate use, according to my own pleasure, without any restriction or qualification. But unfortunately for the interrogatory of the Senator from Texas, when money is collected from the people under the power of law and placed in the Treasury it can be legitimately applied only to the end for which this Government was created.

Mr. BAILEY. I agree to that.

Mr. RAWLINS. And if the Senator will permit me to go one step further, it is no more legitimate for this Government to take funds from the National Treasury and deposit them in the treasury of a private banking corporation, in order to get it into circulation, than it would be to take the money from the Treasury and put it into the pocket of a private individual.

The Senator from Texas says the money may be withdrawn by the Government at its pleasure. We must not deceive ourselves. This is a currency question. I may deposit a limited amount of money in a bank, other individuals may do the same, and the chances are that it can be reasonably estimated by the bank that the daily drafts upon the money deposited by many depositors will not exceed a certain percentage of the aggregate amount of money deposited. There is devolved upon the bank the necessity of keeping only that percentage, or something in excess of it, in its coffers.

But when the Treasury of the United States deposits in a bank twenty or thirty or a hundred million dollars—and there is already deposited in banks $143,000,000—the money is put into circulation; business is fixed with relation to that quantity of money thus in circulation; values are adjusted with reference to it, and are dependent upon the continuance of its volume. If you add $400,000,000 to the money now in circulation, it will stimulate business industry; it will enlarge it; it will expand it; values will be enhanced, and already we know that many outside people are anxious to know whether this legislation is to pass, desiring to buy now in order to avail themselves of the advance of the security or of the property which may result from the passage of this bill. When you thus put money in circulation in volumes of two hundred or three hundred or four hundred million dollars, you do it with the expectation and understanding that values will be adjusted upon that basis, and when you undertake to withdraw it next year you will be confronted with the same proposition with which you are confronted to-day. If the Treasury should demand the return of the $143,000,000 in the banks there would be a crash. It would tear away the foundation on which business has been done. It would bring more ruin to the people than it would be for the Treasury to sacrifice the money.

So when the Senator from Texas says to me that this is but a temporary deposit I say if it is to be a temporary deposit, with a full right to withdraw it next week, there is no purpose in this legislation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. Will not the Senators let me pass my little appropriation bill and then renew this entertaining debate?

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator from Maine, with the permission of the Senator from Utah, that I had no thought of leading him into a discussion of the currency question. I had supposed that this is merely a question as to the disposition of money collected, but the Senator had talked about me and other Senators who favored this bill as devoting the public moneys to private use, and by habit of thought and education that is a little objectionable to me. I thought perhaps he could enlighten me. If he can show me that I am voting to devote public moneys to private use, I shall be glad to join him in his rather indefinite criticism of this bill.

Mr. RAWLINS. I know the principle which actuates the Senator from Texas, and I never would impute to him any such intentional purpose. He views it from the standpoint that it is a temporary deposit; that it is still at the command of the Treasury; that it is still available, and will be to-morrow or next week or next year; that there will be no embarrassment in getting it back. I am not able to view it from that standpoint, because when it is put into circulation——

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to say that I cordially agree with him that it would be a serious embarrassment if it were withdrawn from the banks and locked up in the Treasury, just as I now conceive it will result in serious embarrassment to the business of the country if it be withdrawn from the channels of trade in the shape of taxes and locked up in the Treasury. But I hope that instead of taking it out of the banks and locking it up in the Treasury a system of taxation will be adopted whereby the Government will cease to collect a surplus and will gradually dispose of the surplus we have and let it be released from the banks and go back into channels of trade through expenditure of the Government itself.

Mr. RAWLINS. I notice that the Senator from Maine is a little impatient, and I must apologize to him for speaking longer than I had originally anticipated; but I wish to add that ordinarily we Democrats especially, and I think many Republicans, to do them the honor and credit, favor the economical expenditure of public moneys, and desire to limit them within such scope as will subserve the ends for which the Government itself was created. Some Senators seriously combated the policy of enacting the irrigation law as being rather a stretch of power upon our part in disposing of moneys raised by taxation. I shared with them in a degree that feeling. But the counterpart of economical expenditure is the restriction upon the power of taxation, so that no more money will be raised, abstracted from the pockets of the people, than is necessary to carry on the Government, honestly and economically administered. But we find ourselves in a predicament by reason of our tax laws and other things.

The unexpected prosperity to which our friends upon the other side constantly point has filled the Treasury. Now, how are you going to get rid of the money? We are relegated to the selection of the most advantageous uses to which the money can be devoted. The purpose of this amendment is to point to one use. There is an enterprise in my State which, if it had $3,000,000, would create $25,000,000 of wealth. It can not be initiated. I know of enterprises in the State bordering upon the north where the Government could expend money upon its own property to the advancement of its value while subserving the interests of all the people.

I said I was interested in a bank. My bank does not need it. Suppose the bank is given $1,000,000 or $3,000,000. What will happen then? We pay a bagatelle in return for it. A man seeking a home comes to the bank. He has no security to offer. On the other hand, adopt this amendment and what will happen? The man seeking a home can find a home.

The bank will loan the money, if it can get proper security, and it will exact 6 or 8 or 10 or 12 per cent. That is the only way the money will get into circulation through the bank. But look at this proposition. Who will get the money? Any home seeker: many people who can not now rear families; who can not give their children that degree of education to which they are entitled; people who can not have that equal and fair opportunity with the rest of their fellow-citizens, and who wish to build up and strengthen the Republic in its brawn and muscle and honesty and hardihood. Those people desire to become good citizens. They desire to establish homes on which the strength and the stability of this Republic, together with the perpetuity of its institutions, must finally rest. What does such a person do? He asks the Government to let him take a tract of land, now worthless, to which he will give the necessary brawn and muscle, and he asks the Government to provide the other means for its reclamation, promising that he will return the money which is thus devoted to the creation of his home. The Government loses nothing and the public interest is thus subserved.

I understand a point of order was made against the amendment. I ask the Senator from Maine not to make the point of order against the amendment, but to let the Senate pass upon it on its merits.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have already made the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the proper point the following:

That the sum of $1,200 is appropriated to reimburse the people of Indianola, Miss., and vicinity thereof, for moneys expended by them for carrying their mails to and from Heathman, Miss., and for handling and distributing the same, the said reimbursement to be under regulations prescribed by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chairs sustains the point of order.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SAFE-KEEPING OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 7301) to further provide for the safe-keeping of public money, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

RIGHTS OF WAY FOR IRRIGATION PURPOSES IN HAWAII.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island to yield to me that I may call up the bill (H. R. 11997) granting to the Hawaiian Ditch Company, Limited, the right of way over public lands in the districts of North and South Kohala, in the island of Hawaii, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining ditches or canals and the necessary reservoirs, dams, and the like, for irrigation and domestic purposes in said districts. It has passed the House.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TELLER. That bill will create some discussion.

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to say that this bill has now been agreed upon. The bill as it passed the House met with very bitter opposition. In the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico an amendment was under consideration which was prepared and introduced by myself, which I proposed to offer as a substitute for the bill, and that amendment is acceptable, as I am informed, to everybody in interest. It is an amendment which gives no advantage to anybody, and I think it is proper that it should pass.

Mr. TELLER. If that is the fact, I shall not antagonize the bill. The bill as it came from the House was exceedingly objectionable.

Mr. FORAKER. It was very objectionable. I was opposed to it myself.

Mr. TELLER. If it goes into conference I am not quite certain how it will come out, so that really——

Mr. BURTON. I wish to state that this bill simply reenacts our law on the subject of irrigation. It is in the exact language of our own law.

Mr. FORAKER. With such changes as were necessary to make it applicable in Hawaii, where they have a different land system. There is no objection to it on the part of anybody in interest.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if this is a matter beyond the jurisdiction of the local legislature of Hawaii?

Mr. FORAKER. There was an interpretation of the local laws at one time to the effect that the authorities of Hawaii had power to deal with this question, but the Secretary of the Interior has made a ruling to the contrary. Thereupon they came to Congress as a matter of necessity in order to get a right to construct an irrigation ditch, and the House passed the bill of which I speak. The objection to the bill was that it granted a franchise which in its result would have been necessarily exclusive, as I thought. I was opposed to that. I thought that it would be sufficient to extend the laws now applicable in our Territories to Hawaii, under which all would have an even and equal chance, and the substitute which I propose to offer to the bill is to that effect.

Mr. SPOONER. Is this ditch to be constructed over Government land?

Mr. FORAKER. For a short distance it passes through a Government reservation. That is the necessity for coming to Congress for legislation. It will be largely upon private land. I think when the Senator hears the substitute for it read he will see there is no occasion to take any exception to it. I have shown it to all the parties in interest, and they have all agreed to it.

Mr. SPOONER. The object of my inquiry was to ascertain if there was any good reason why we should not leave this matter to the local legislature.

Mr. FORAKER. The reason why we should not leave it to local legislation is that it has been decided that they did not have authority to deal with the subject, and it was necessary to come to Congress in order to get relief.

Mr. CULLOM. As I understand it, there has been a controversy between the members of the committee having the bill in charge.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. But I understand that all the parties are now agreed as to the bill the Senator proposes to present.

Mr. FORAKER. There was a controversy. I could not agree with the majority of the committee. I thought that the amendment I offered, simply extending our irrigation laws and making them applicable to Hawaii, ought to be the legislation we should enact.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator is now in favor of the bill which he proposes to present to the Senate for consideration?

Mr. FORAKER. No; I propose to call up the bill and offer my amendment as a substitute, that being now accepted. It is satisfactory to all, and everybody is willing to accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will send his substitute to the desk and have it read, then the Chair will ask whether or not consideration shall be given.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the substitute.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. I ask the Senator to allow the substitute to be read.

Mr. TELLER. I think the bill had better be printed and go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. BURTON. Let it be read first.

Mr. TELLER. I am willing that the reading shall be concluded so that it may appear in the RECORD, and it need not be read again if it is not changed.

Mr. FORAKER. I can explain it to the Senator in a moment. I shall not move any amendment to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute will be through in one moment.

Mr. TELLER. Very well.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the substitute, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That the right of way through the public lands and reservations of the United States situate in the Territory of Hawaii is hereby granted, subject to the provisions hereinafter named, to any canal or ditch company formed for the purpose of irrigation, and duly organized under the laws of the Territory of Hawaii, which may hereafter file with the commissioner of public lands of the Territory of Hawaii and with the Secretary of the Interior of the United States a copy of its articles of incorporation and due proofs of its organization under the same to the extent of the ground occupied by the water of the reservoir and of the canal and its laterals and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof; also the right to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of the canal or ditch material, earth, and stone necessary for the construction of such canal or ditch: Provided, That no such right of way shall be so located as to interfere with the proper occupation by the Government of the United States of any such reservation, and all maps of location shall be subject to the approval of the department of the Government of the United States having jurisdiction of such reservation; and the privilege herein granted shall not be construed to interfere with the control of water for irrigation and other purposes under the authority of the Territory of Hawaii as may be provided by law.

SEC. 2. That any canal or ditch company desiring to secure the benefits of this act shall, within twelve months after the location of 10 miles of its canal if the same be upon surveyed lands, and if upon unsurveyed lands within twelve months after the survey thereof by the United States, file with the commissioner of public lands for the Territory of Hawaii and with the Secretary of the Interior a map of its canal or ditch and reservoir; and upon the approval thereof by the governor, and attorney-general, and commissioner of public lands of the Territory of Hawaii, and the approval also of the Secretary of the Interior, the same shall be noted upon the plats of said lands, and thereafter all such lands over which such rights of way shall pass shall be disposed of subject to such right of way. Whenever any person or corporation, in the construction of any canal, ditch, or reservoir, injures or damages the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

SEC. 3. That all rights of way granted under the provisions of this act shall be taken and enjoyed subject to such terms, conditions, and regulations as may be prescribed by the governor, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior; provided the compensation exacted for such rights of way, and all rentals or revenues or other monetary payment exacted on account thereof shall not exceed 2 per cent of the gross earnings of such company, and shall be payable into the treasury of the Territory of Hawaii as revenues of that government to be used for its benefit and support.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act shall authorize any such canal or ditch company to occupy any right of way granted hereunder except for the purpose of said canal or ditch, and then only so far as may be necessary for the construction, maintenance, and care of said canal or ditch; and if any section of said canal or ditch shall not be completed within six years after the location of the same the rights granted hereunder shall be forfeited as to any uncompleted section of such canal, ditch, or reservoir to the extent that the same is not completed at the date of forfeiture.

Amend the title to read as follows: "An act to grant the right of way through public lands in Hawaii to canal and ditch companies formed for irrigation purposes, and to regulate the use of the same."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have been very much opposed to the proposition which has been pending here, and I have not had time to see how this proposed substitute changes the bill as it stands. I agree with the Senator from Colorado that the matter ought to go over until to-morrow morning to give us an opportunity to see the proposition submitted by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not any objection to that course, although the amendment which is now offered as a substitute was introduced here at the last session and has been pending all this while. It received consideration in the committee. The parties representing the conflicting interests appeared before the committee and they have all of them expressed themselves there, except those who wanted the House bill passed, as satisfied with the amendment which is now offered as a substitute. The only difficulty about accepting the amendment was on the part of those who had secured the legislation which passed the House. They opposed it, and now they have agreed to accept it, and all the other parties in interest that I know of have been shown this substitute and they have accepted it.

This is nothing in the world except a literal copy of our own statutes on irrigation applicable to the Territories, with such changes as were necessary to make it applicable to the different condition in Hawaii. For instance, it was required under our Territorial law that certain plats and maps should be filed with the register of the land district. They have no register of a land district in Hawaii, and therefore the proposed law was so changed as to provide that they should be filed in the office of the public land commissioner.

Then, beyond that there is this further provision (and that is the only change) that the governor of Hawaii, subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior, shall determine upon what terms and conditions a franchise shall be taken by any company in any particular case.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. As the bill was read I thought I caught something providing for some payment from the treasury of Hawaii.

Mr. FORAKER. I was just proceeding to state that the governor of Hawaii, subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior, will determine upon what terms and conditions any franchise under this act shall be taken as to payment to the government for its support or on any other account, with a limitation, however, that the compensation exacted shall not exceed in any case 2 per cent of the gross earnings.

Mr. SPOONER. Does it provide for any payment from the Treasury in aid of this improvement?

Mr. FORAKER. No, sir; this Government pays nothing. The payment referred to is a payment by the canal company that gets the franchise to the government of Hawaii, as a contribution toward the support of that government, not exceeding 2 per cent of the gross earnings.

Mr. ALDRICH. I yielded to this measure with the understanding that it would not lead to debate.

Mr. FORAKER. I know the Senator did. I will let the measure go over until to-morrow morning in order that it may be read, and I only ask that Senators, bearing in mind what I have said, will compare the substitute as offered with our own statute on the subject. They will see that they are precisely the same.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In view of what has been said here, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that I may take just one minute to make a statement.

My opposition to this original proposition was because I understood that it practically destroyed the rights of a certain charitable institution in the Hawaiian Islands called the Bishop Estate. I do not understand the facts in the case.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Ohio? He has a statement.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] has just handed me a printed statement, prepared by the representatives of the Bishop Estate, who were before the committee, and who, as stated, expressed themselves at that time as satisfied with the amendment which I have just offered as a substitute. They have sent this statement to the Senator from New Jersey only within the last day or two, as I understand it.

Mr. KEAN. I only received it this morning.

Mr. FORAKER. It sets forth the objections to the bill. The bill which then passed the House is not to be passed, according to the proposition now made, but the amendment which I offered as a substitute. They state, after summing up the objections to the bill, the following:

A substitute measure has been offered by Senator FORAKER which removes all of these objections, but it has not yet been reported by the committee to which it was referred.

I did not report it because the committee refused to report it. I was the only member of the committee present at the time who voted for my own proposition. I did not think fit to make a minority report. But I know this amendment is absolutely satisfactory to everybody, and particularly to the people for whom the Senator from Arkansas speaks when he refers to the Bishop Estate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In reply to what the Senator has just said, I have great faith in the absolute correctness of the position taken by the Senator from Ohio all the time, and I have been inclined to be with him in this matter. But the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] hands me this telegram:

Rumor that Bishop interests have withdrawn objections to Hawaii ditch bill is unfounded.

ARTHUR S. TUTTLE.

I do not know who Mr. Tuttle is or his relation to the matter, but that is the reason why I thought the matter ought to go over until it could be better understood.

Mr. FORAKER. I can explain that in a minute. The Hawaiian ditch bill is still objectionable to those people, and on account of their continued objection to it the people who are urging the Hawaiian ditch bill have abandoned it, and after having abandoned it they are in favor of the passage of the substitute measure which I have offered.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator still persists in his objection, I will let it go over.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the bill go over, and we will look at it to-morrow. I am not willing to take it up at the present time.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the consent of the Senator from Rhode Island and of the Senate to have a little House bill of about ten lines passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not press the request now. I know what his duties are upon conference committees, but I feel obliged to decline to yield at present. I will see that he gets an opportunity later on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. Some time back somebody, of whom I know nothing, sent me a pamphlet in regard to this Hawaiian ditch matter and the interests involved. I have not had time to examine it. I received a telegram similar to the one which the Senator from Arkansas just read from Mr. Arthur S. Tuttle. There must be something about this matter that involves very serious interests, and I propose, if the Senate will permit me, to have inserted in the RECORD the explanation given by those who are opposing the ditch bill. I have not even read it, but all Senators will then be in position to read it, if they want to do so, in the morning in the RECORD. I ask to have it inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. FORAKER. Here is a report on the subject embodying that, I suppose, as well as everything else that was taken. It is a very lengthy report.

Mr. TILLMAN. How does the Senator know that it embodies this paper?

Mr. FORAKER. I made the report myself, and I know what is in it. I want to say another thing. I was in strict accord with all that is in that paper; I opposed the bill myself in the committee; but, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and others know who served on the committee, the Kohala ditch bill is one thing, and my substitute for it is another thing altogether. The one proposed to grant a franchise to certain individuals named. My provision is simply the enactment of a general law, and making it applicable to Hawaii, under which anybody can get a franchise to construct and maintain a ditch who complies with the law, which is just the same thing in its provisions as the law now applicable to the Territories.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Colorado yielded to me. I made a request, and if it has been refused——

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to the paper going into the RECORD, if the Senator wants it to appear.

Mr. TILLMAN. It can do no possible harm.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that a paper which he sends to the desk be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

The paper referred to is as follows:

Objections to the H. R. bill No. 11997 and to the amendment thereto proposed by Senator Mitchell, the same granting to the Hawaii Ditch Company, Limited, certain land and water rights on the Government lands of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii.

THE BILL AND ITS AMENDMENTS.

The bill.—The original bill before the Senate was passed by the House of Representatives on March 14, 1902, no representation having been made to show that it threatened private interests or that it would be otherwise than beneficial to the Territory. It is designated as H. R. 11997, and bears the title "An act granting to the Hawaii Ditch Company, Limited, the right of way over public lands in the districts of North and South Kohala, in the island of Hawaii, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining ditches and canals and the necessary reservoirs, dams, and the like for irrigation and domestic purposes in said districts."

The bill first grants a right of way to construct two ditches or other lines of water carriers within an area for which an alleged boundary is named and which has an area of about 70 square miles, of which the Government owns about 42 square miles. This is followed by a further grant of the same privileges throughout all the remainder of the districts of North and South Kohala and Hamakua, having an area of about 1,000 square miles, of which the Government owns 480 square miles, or nearly one-half. These ditches are to be constructed specifically for the purpose of conserving and utilizing "waters now running waste into the sea." Permission is also given to construct reservoirs and to use such material of construction from the public lands as is available and as may be required.

The grant is subjected to the terms of the act of March 3, 1901, chapter 561, sections 18 to 21, except as to time of completion of the work, which is fixed at six years from the date when the proposed franchise is granted. It has been intimated that this reference to a previous act of Congress is such that it secures to the United States a control over the location of the ditches; that it insures all settlers upon the public land against damage, and that it does not interfere with the control of water by the Territory; but it has been shown by the chairman of your committee that the act of Congress of the date named in the bill had no relation to this subject. The bill also provides that the terms under which the water is to be sold shall be subject to the direction of the United States district court. The purpose, then, of this bill is to give outright in perpetuity to the Hawaii Ditch Company, Limited, and without compensation, a clear title to all of the water which is not already utilized, which can be collected by two ditches on nearly 500 square miles of public lands, the only reservation being in the time of completion of the work and the jurisdiction of the court concerning the use by and charge to customers.

THE AMENDMENT INTRODUCED BY SENATOR MITCHELL.

This amendment is dated June 9, 1902, and stipulates, as an addendum to the original bill, that the Hawaii Ditch Company, Limited, after the completion of the works, shall pay to the Territory of Hawaii the sum of at least $2,500 annually, as compensation for the rights granted under the bill, "and for the use of the waters of the Territory," or such other sum, not less than $2,500 per year for the first five years after the completion of the ditches, as may be fixed upon by the United States district court. It also provides that the charges for the sale of water shall be fixed by the commissioner of public lands of the Territory of Hawaii, and binds the company to preserve the forests and not to divert water from the Waimea watershed. If, in the original bill, there was any question as to the ownership and control of the water on the public lands remaining with the territorial officials, this addition removes all doubt, for its terms not only intimate that the waters upon the public lands do now belong to the Territory, but they are forthwith given to the Hawaii Ditch Company.

THE AMENDMENT INTRODUCED BY SENATOR FORAKER.

This practically substitutes for the bill the general law which is now applicable to the right of way granted on public lands to an irrigation company in any part of the United States, with the sole exception of Hawaii, modifying the same by requiring the approval of the grant by the Territorial officials as well as by the Secretary of the Interior, and also by enabling the Territory to exact a compensation for the privileges granted. This amendment has a general application, and clearly defines the course to be taken by any company desirous of engaging in irrigation; it explicitly leaves the control of water to the Territory, as has been the previous practice in such legislation, and relates to a grant of the right of way only across the public lands. It differs only from the laws which elsewhere apply, partly because of the greater familiarity of the Territorial officials with the peculiar character and formation of the islands, partly because the Territorial authorities are here the administrators of the land laws, and partly because of the great value of water on Hawaii.

SUMMARY OF OBJECTIONS.

1. The bill is misleading. Its title indicates that the grant is to be made for the purpose of constructing ditches in north and south Kohala; in the text the area is first specifically defined as that portion of those two districts and of the Hamakua district lying within certain bounds, those on the east and west being of an indefinite character for the purpose of such a grant, while the one on the south is simply a point; this, again, is followed by an additional grant which extends the range to cover the entire three districts of north and south Kohala, and Hamakua. Under the amendment the additional right to all waters of the Territory in the three districts which are not in present use is distinctly conferred. The text contains a reference to the provisions of another law which in no wise relates to the rights given, but which is so incorporated in the bill as to indicate that the privileges were subject to certain conditions protecting other interests.

2. The bill grants to a specific corporation certain extensive land and water rights in perpetuity to public lands in a distant Territory without giving the local officials of that Territory, who are otherwise charged with the administration of the public lands, any jurisdiction over the terms of the grant, the merits of the claim, or the compensation to be paid, and it ignores all private interests in the water rights affected.

3. The bill does not meet with the approval of the local plantations, the representatives of which have so placed themselves on record. In this statement they explained that their petition to Congress, under date of November 14, 1901, in favor of the Hawaii Ditch Company, Limited, was signed under a misapprehension of the facts. They express themselves as opposed to special legislation of this character, and as favoring a general law.

4. The policy of the United States Government has heretofore been to grant privileges in connection with all public lands, not to individual citizens or corporations, but under a general act applicable to any citizen, association, or corporation desirous of the same and complying with the provisions of the law. The precedent set by the passage of such a bill as is proposed will encourage requests for similar individual grants, to the disadvantage of the Territorial government as well as of all landowners, compelling the latter to secure representation at Washington to insure a protection of their interests.

5. The proposed grant is a monopoly and so sweeping in its character that the corporation to be benefited by the same is given liberty to appropriate lands for its ditches in an area of 480 square miles, or about 18 per cent of the total area of the public lands of the Territory of Hawaii, without restrictions as to the location, and the amendment to the bill further ostensibly legalizes the abstraction of all water which is unused at the present time.

6. The Hawaii Ditch Company have made no surveys of the Territory and no measurements of the stream flow. They have prepared no practical plan for the development of a project which will benefit the Territory; and their representations do not indicate any familiarity with the results of such explorations of the water resources as have been made under the direction of the Hawaiian government or with the actual needs of the adjoining districts for an irrigation supply.

7. The bill, together with the amendment, presents what is apparently a claim on the part of the government to all unused waters flowing across the public lands, disregarding the lack of local laws and of judicial decisions concerning riparian rights, which would substantiate such assertions.

It therefore discriminates against those now in possession of such waters and forces them into a litigation if they desire to retain the rights which they now enjoy.

8. The principal water supplies in the public lands affected by the bill, after leaving such lands, flow across property belonging to the Bernice P. Bishop estate and the Bernice P. Bishop Museum, where they are now partly used and where negotiations are in progress for so developing them that they will be fully used in promoting local interests. If the proposed project of the Hawaii Ditch Company could be carried out, the Bishop interests would be subjected to serious damage, partly by the obstruction of surface water before it reaches their land and partly by the drying up of the springs which now exist on their property.

9. The ownership by the Bishop interests of the gulches bounding to a high elevation on the east and west the richest portion of the water-bearing territory for which a franchise is asked by the Hawaii Ditch Company, and the lack of power of a private corporation to condemn land, necessitates that a ditch, flume, or pipe line can only be brought across this portion of the public lands at such a great elevation as to pass the head of these gulches, where the only water supplies that exist are those tributary to the lands of these private interests. Even if the Hawaii Ditch Company possessed the power to condemn private land, the depth of these gulches belonging to the Bishop Estate and to the Bishop Museum, and of other intervening gulches on the Government land, is so great as to practically prohibit crossing them with any known or used method of conveying water.

10. The mountain water supply on the public lands at the elevation where the Hawaii Ditch Company would construct their works has been measured and found to be so small in volume during the dry season, when irrigation is needed, as to prevent any possibility of success in developing a supply of appreciable magnitude. The quantity of water that may be developed for useful purposes on the lands of the Bishop interests in the valleys is much larger, owing to the cropping out of large, steady springs in the gulches, which springs maintain the volume during seasons of drought. A supply of water can not be profitably developed on the Bishop lands in the valleys, if the Hawaii Ditch Company project is carried out, for the reason that there would be a loss not only of the surface flow, but also a very serious danger of loss in the yield of the springs. The passage of this bill would, therefore, reduce the amount of water available for irrigation in the locality.

11. The project which has been shaped out for a development of the water supply on the Bishop lands is both feasible and practicable, and it has been laid out to meet the predetermined local needs. The development proposed by the Hawaii Ditch Company lacks all such features.

12. The Hawaii Ditch Company is a corporation organized purely from selfish motives and for the purpose of securing a personal profit to their stockholders by the sale of the water to be obtained under this grant. The Bernice P. Bishop estate and the Bernice P. Bishop Museum, whose properties are threatened with serious damage by this bill, are semipublic institutions, created and maintained purely for educational and philanthropic purposes. Their interests are those which appeal to and are shared by all good citizens.

IT HAS NOT BEEN THE POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT TO GRANT FRANCHISES ON THE PUBLIC LANDS TO CITIZENS, ASSOCIATIONS, OR CORPORATIONS, EXCEPT IN A GENERAL WAY.

The joint resolution (55) passed July 7, 1898 (30 Stats., 750), "To provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States," provided, inter alia, as follows:

"The existing laws of the United States relative to public lands shall not apply to such lands in the Hawaiian Islands; but the Congress of the United States shall enact special laws for their management and disposition: Provided, That all revenue from or proceeds of the same, except as regards such part thereof as may be used or occupied for the civil, military, or naval purposes of the United States, or may be assigned for the use of the local government, shall be used solely for the benefit of the inhabitants of the Hawaiian Islands for educational and other public purposes."

The act of Congress of April 30, 1900 (31 Stats., 141), entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," provided, in section 73, "that the laws of Hawaii relating to public lands * * * shall continue in force until Congress shall otherwise direct" (p. 154).

An examination of the several acts heretofore passed by Congress in connection with the public lands of the United States, and privileges granted therein, will disclose that the uniform policy of this Government has been, during the years, not to grant monopolies or to indulge in special legislation, but to confer benefits and privileges to citizens or corporations generally complying with the terms of the particular act.

This will appear from the acts of Congress, reference to which is below given, and which acts cover all grants of rights of way through or privileges or easements in the public lands of the United States.

The act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stats., 482), entitled "An act granting to railroads the rights of way through the public lands of the United States," granted, in express terms, such right of way to any railroad duly organized, etc., which should comply with the provisions of the act.

The act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stats., 1095), entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," provided in section 18 (p. 1101) that "the right of way through the public lands and reservations of the United States is hereby granted to any canal or ditch company for the purpose of irrigation," duly organized, etc.

The act of January 21, 1895 (28 Stats., 635), entitled "An act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tram roads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes," granted such right, under the conditions therein set forth, to "any citizen or association of citizens of the United States engaged in the business of mining or quarrying or of cutting timber and manufacturing lumber."

That act was amended by the act of May 14, 1896 (29 Stats., 120), by which latter amendatory act the provisions thereof were extended to "any citizen or association of citizens of the United States for the purposes of generating, manufacturing, or distributing electric power."

The act of May 21, 1896 (29 Stats., 127), entitled "An act to grant right of way over the public domain for pipe lines in the States of Colorado and Wyoming," granted such right of way to "any pipe-line company or corporation formed for the purpose of transporting oils, crude or refined," etc.

And, finally, the act of May 11, 1898 (30 Stats., 404), entitled "An act to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through public lands for tramways, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes," granted such right to "any citizen or association of citizens of the United States for the purposes of furnishing water for domestic, public, and other beneficial uses," and further provided that "said rights of way may be used for the purposes of water transportation for domestic purposes or for the development of power, as subsidiary to the main purpose of irrigation."

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not want to cut anybody else off; but this matter has gone over until to-morrow morning, and that is the time to discuss it, and not now. If the Senator from Kansas desires to make any statement, I of course yield.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, in view of the fact that I was on the committee and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has not been able for six weeks to be in his seat, except in the last day or two, and he was chairman of the committee that investigated affairs in Hawaii, I should like to say just a word.

The only objection any of us ever had to the Senator's amendment, which probably would have been adopted long ago, was to section 3, which is an addition to our law. The whole bill now proposed by the Senator from Ohio is practically a reenactment of the law which is in force in this country; but section 3 gives additional powers to the governor and local authorities there. However, amended as now suggested there is no objection to it.

The representatives who have been trying to get a bill say that a canal can not be built in the islands there because there is no existing law. Now, it is uncertain what the law is. The amendment as modified by the Senator from Ohio is simply a reenactment of our law, as Senators will see if they will read our law and compare it with the proposed substitute.

I should like to have said something about the Bishop estate while I am on my feet; and I say here and now that neither one of the bills affected the Bishop estate one bit, and I know it. The Bishop estate never was threatened at all by either bill, and no man who has investigated it as I investigated it will for a moment say so, providing he is sincere. That is all there is about it.

I felt like I ought to say this in view of the fact that the Senator from Oregon, who is chairman of the committee, is absent. However, all that is out of the way, and we are simply trying to apply our law to Hawaii, so that anybody can build a canal there who wants to build it in compliance with the law, just as if he wanted to build a canal now in Montana or Colorado or across the public domain; he would file the maps after making surveys, not with the local authorities, but first with the register of the land office and then with the Secretary of the Interior, and go on and build the canal.

This is what the substitute, as presented by the Senator from Ohio, proposes to do, and it came up by reason of the fact that a private bill was asked for, in the first instance, because there was no law by which a canal could be built, and all sides have reached a conclusion that it is best to enact this law, after section 3 has been modified, as it was by the Senator from Ohio. The Senator from Ohio proposes not a new bill; his amendment is a verbatim copy of our own law.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, for the information of the Senator from Colorado and others who may desire——

Mr. TELLER. I do not think I need any information about this bill now. If it is a question of the statute, I will say to the Senator from Ohio that I myself have in mind the law on that question. I do not think anything is to be gained by this discussion now. The bill has gone over and I mean to look at it, and if it is what I now suppose it to be probably there will be no trouble, as far as I am concerned, in its passage, but I do not care about going into a discussion of the bill now. However, if the Senator insists upon it, of course I am not going to object.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not rise to discuss this matter further, but I thought it would be some accommodation to the Senator for me to tell him that he would find the statute of which this substitute is almost a literal copy——

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator thinks I have not read the statute, he does not know what I have been doing for the last thirty years.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I know the Senator has read the statute. I have read the statute, too. But when I undertook to look it up on Saturday in order that I might have it at hand when the bill would be called up, I had a good deal of difficulty to find it. There are irrigation laws, and irrigation laws, and irrigation laws.

The particular statute that I refer to is found on page 946 of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, Volume I, second edition, 1874 to 1891, sections 18 to 21, both inclusive. I thought it might be some accommodation to some of the Senators who perhaps have not examined the law recently.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the act of 1891, is it not?

Mr. FORAKER. It is the act of March 3, 1891.

Mr. TELLER. With any statute concerning irrigation which has been passed in the last twenty-six years I am pretty familiar. I think I have had as thorough acquaintance with that subject as any member of the committee that reports this bill. In the State where I live the irrigation question is a live question. It is a question of more importance to the agriculturists there than any other.

I do not care now or at any other time to discuss the bill. I wish to discuss the bill I was discussing briefly Saturday night, when I was taken off the floor by the Committee on Appropriations which very properly desired to pass a bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I yield to my colleague.

LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12098) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for a right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

In lines 4, 5, 6, and 7, page 1, strike out the words "excepting the commutation provisions thereof, and excepting also the provisions relating to the acquisition of title through soldiers' additional homestead rights."

Also in line 13, page 1, after the word "district," insert the following: "except as now provided by law: And provided further, That no more than 160 acres shall be entered in any single body by such scrip, lieu selection, or soldier's additional homestead right: And provided further, That no location of scrip, selection, or right along any navigable or other waters shall be made within the distance of 80 rods of any lands along such waters theretofore located by means of any such scrip or otherwise: And provided further, That no commutation privileges shall be allowed in excess of 160 acres included in any homestead entry under the provisions hereof."

Also in line 11, page 2, after the word "proof," insert "except as to commuted lands as herein provided."

Also in line 10, page 3, after the word "years," insert "or at such date as the settler may desire to commute."

Also in line 18, page 3, after the words "United States," insert "as heretofore and herein amended."

Also in line 1, page 4, after the word "receiver," insert "except $1.25 per acre on land commuted."

And the Senate agree to the same.

C. D. CLARK,
ROBERT J. GAMBLE,
A. J. McLAURIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN F. LACEY,
F. W. MONDELL,
F. M. GRIFFITH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 7414) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MERCER, Mr. GILLET of New York, and Mr. BANKHEAD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 16842) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 17046) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I suppose there will be no more statehood literature. I want to state that during the progress of the debate Delegate RODEY, from New Mexico, addressed me a letter, in which he gave attention to certain statements of fact as to conditions in the Territory that he represents, made by several Senators who opposed the bill. It was my purpose, if I had made remarks upon the measure, to have had this letter read, but as that opportunity will not arise, believing that common justice to the Delegate of the Territory and to the people of New Mexico requires that what that Delegate has to say should go upon the record, I ask unanimous consent that the letter to me be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. KEAN. As a part of the remarks of the Senator from Colorado on the statehood bill?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; I am quite willing to allow it to be part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Is there objection to the request made by the junior Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none, and such is the order. It will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

COMMITTEE ON THE POST-OFFICE AND POST-ROADS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1903.

Hon. THOMAS M. PATTERSON,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: The action of the opponents on the omnibus statehood bill is such that my duty as the voteless representative of about 330,000 people in New Mexico impels me to ask you to cause to be read in the Senate this statement in behalf of the people of New Mexico:

I have lived in New Mexico for twenty-two years. I have traveled over every part of it many times. I know whereof I speak, and affirm the following facts as the truth, for the information of Senators and the country; and I assert these facts, the census, or any other source of information, to the contrary notwithstanding. I assert that no person, even though he or she be a citizen of New Mexico, unless he or she travels over it, as I have done, can know the vast resources or possibilities of the Territory, much less can Senators, who make but a cursory race through the Territory, or who never have been there, have any adequate idea of these things.

I assert that New Mexico has to-day between 330,000 and 350,000 people living within its borders, practically all of whom are citizens of the United States. This is proved by the fact that we registered at the election in November of last year, 1902, 64,000 voters (males only vote in the Territory). It is impossible to register much more than three-fourths of our voters because of the vast distances they have to travel at times in order to do so. Therefore it can safely be estimated, considering that the native families average from 7 to 8 per family—even if the people who come from the States will not average more than 4—that there is an average of 5 persons to every voter in the Territory. And if we have at least 75,000 voters, that would give us a population of 375,000 people, which is much more than we are claiming. The census was practically not taken at all in the Territory. Contrary to what has been stated here, the people took no interest in it. The more intelligent young men were too busy to stop for the sake of the month's wages that could be had for doing it, and, therefore, it was taken, as a general thing, by incompetent people.

Two or 3 cents per capita were paid for enumeration and $5 per day for a team to travel over the country. A team in that country costs $10 per day in most cases, and as a consequence the enumerators, having a dread of violating the law, erred on the sure side and failed to enumerate. In his report for 1901, made up shortly after the census was taken, the governor of the Territory called attention to this census matter and calculated the population of the Territory from data he had then at hand at a little over 296,000 people, exclusive of Indians. Although since that time the Territory has had built within it nearly 1,000 miles of railroad, and has had established more than 100 new post-offices for the accommodation of the increasing population, and 1,271,000 acres of land have been entered as homesteads, the governor, in his report for 1902, for some reason which is not stated, calculates the population of the Territory at 246,000 people. I disagree with him, and so do many others of the people of the Territory on that point.

I assert from a personal knowledge gained from a long residence and from an investigation carefully made that the present population of New Mexico is made up about as follows: About three-fifths of its inhabitants are people from the States and their descendants, who speak practically no language but English. The remaining two-fifths of the people are American citizens of Spanish descent, a good one-half of whom speak, read, and write the English language reasonably well. The remainder do not speak English very well. A considerable percentage of the population speak both English and Spanish. The statement of the census that there is 32 per cent of illiteracy in the Territory is a gross libel upon our people.

The Territorial superintendent of education made a speech at the Normal University at Las Vegas in the month of December, 1902, wherein he stated that from the data in his possession and the intimate knowledge he had of the people, gained not only from his work in his official capacity, but from a life-long residence in the Territory, there was not to-day to exceed from 12 to 15 per cent of illiteracy among the people of the entire Territory. This corroborates my own idea gained from my own observation in the Territory. There is hardly a person in the Territory more than 10 years of age who does not speak some English, and three-fourths of the people speak it reasonably well. Great stress is laid upon the fact that, owing to the disinclination of the people from the States to serve upon juries, interpreters are used in a few counties, and this, even though the use of interpreters is fast passing away. I assert that in my twenty-two years of residence in New Mexico I never saw or knew of an interpreter being sent into a jury room but once, and even the hearings taken by the Senate subcommittee did not show that any interpreter ever knew of its occurring but once or twice.

The Territory now supports about 90 newspapers. It has a capitol building, a university, two normal schools, a military institute, an agricultural college, a school of mines, an insane asylum, a deaf and dumb asylum, a penitentiary, a science hall, and has 15 cities and towns that are modern, up-to-date places, each having from one to seven large, commodious stone or brick school buildings, costing anywhere from a few thousand to thirty and forty thousand dollars each. Last year the Territory collected from taxes and other sources of revenue more than a million of dollars for school purposes. It has a school population of about 65,000 children. It has in all about 900 schoolhouses and employs nearly 1,100 teachers. It has more than two millions and a quarter of dollars invested in school buildings.

The legislature now in session will compare in intelligence with that of any State in this Union. The Territory had but two business failures, with liabilities of $7,300, in the year 1901, out of 2,100 business concerns; and in the year 1902, just closed, was the only State or Territory in the nation that did not have a single business failure of any kind. The Territory possesses about $300,000,000 worth of taxable property, as was shown before the Committee on Territories of the House of Representatives. It has about 7,000,000 sheep, about 1,250,000 cattle, and hundreds of thousands of horses and other live stock, and is confessedly the greatest pasture country in the nation.

Practically the whole northern half of the Territory is a coal field. Its timber tracts are larger than many of the New England States. Its lumber product since the taking of the census has increased immensely, and some of the largest plants in the world are located there and are now being erected there. The Territory's mineral product is never taken account of, but goes in as the mineral output of other States, because there are practically no reduction works in the Territory, and its ores are shipped out for treatment. The Territory has shipped to the steel works at Pueblo, Colo., from 600 to 1,000 tons of iron ore per day for the last three years continuously. The Territory possesses iron ore in sufficient quantity to gridiron China with steel rails. Of the other minerals it has in abundance gypsum, salt, sulphur, lead, gold, silver, copper, tin, petroleum, and, in fact, almost every product produced anywhere else in the nation.

We protest most emphatically against the claim that we have reached our limit of irrigation. I assert that the Pecos Valley in New Mexico alone has an irrigable area larger than the entire area of the State of Massachusetts. There was shipped from that valley last year to the Chicago market alone more than 200 carloads of fine apples and about an equal quantity was shipped into Colorado from the San Juan Valley, in the northwestern corner of the Territory. New Mexico took the first prize for wheat and the second prize for oats against all the world at the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893.

The Rio Grande Valley from a few miles south of Santa Fe to El Paso, a distance of 250 miles in length by from 1 to 5 miles in width, is every acre of it subject to irrigation and cultivation when the flood waters of that stream are properly impounded. I have calculated that when the irrigation possibilities of New Mexico are properly exploited there will be under actual irrigation between 10,000,000 and 12,000,000 acres of land, which would then, with its other manifold resources, enable it to easily support a population as large as the present population of the State of New York. There still remains more than 55,000,000 acres of unappropriated public land in the Territory. Criticism has been made of the alleged small quantity of land that is now under irrigation in the Territory, but I call attention to the fact that even (which I deny) were it true that there is but about 370,000 acres of land under irrigation in the Territory, that would be, if the census is right, about 2 acres per capita for every man, woman, and child in the Territory, a better showing, considering that it is irrigated land, 1 acre of which is equal to 4 or more acres in the East, than is made by any State or Territory in this Union.

Much has been said about our area, and comparisons have been made as to the density of population being low as compared with Oklahoma; but I call attention to the fact that Oklahoma's density of population would be reduced down from fourteen times as dense to not much more than twice as dense were Oklahoma's population spread over an equal area. New Mexico could give up to the deserts and to barren rocks a tract of country twice as large as the State of New York and still have an area larger than all of New England left upon which to support a population. I assert that there is not to exceed a thousand square miles of the vast area of New Mexico that has not its uses, either for pasture, for timber, or for minerals. I further assert that in the crops which it produces New Mexico, according to her population, surpasses even the great State of New York in the production of everything save, perhaps, the one crop for which New York is famous, that is, chestnuts.

I most emphatically protest against having the good, patriotic, and Christian people of the great Territory of New Mexico made the butt of jokes and thoughtless assertions. I object to having them compared with the Indians, and to having their patriotism questioned, as has been done. A Senator the other day set forth many things which have transpired during the last one hundred years all over the world, and which he asserted the New Mexicans never heard of, and that they would not hear of his speech save through an interpreter.

I reply by saying that one of the most essential things they did hear of was that this country's flag was assailed, and they needed no interpreter to inform them of it, either, but went out 6,500 strong and drove the invader from their soil. They needed no interpreter when the three Territories who are asking for admission raised two-thirds of the President's regiment, went with him to Cuba, were with him at Las Guasimas, El Caney, San Juan Hill, and Santiago—did their full part in giving Cuba a free flag, and took as large a part as any other equal number of troops in the making of a President of the United States.

We protest against our American citizens being called "Mexicans"—we are all American citizens, entitled to all the rights of every other American citizen, although they have long been unjustly denied us—and against the assertion that our people do not want statehood, and point to the action we took in 21 succeeding Congresses begging for our rights. We point to the record of the 46 bills we have had before Congress asking for admission to the Union. We call attention to more than 50 memorials by our legislatures, our conventions, and our people on file with the Senate and House of Representatives asking that we be granted our rights. We point to the fact that for fifty years our land titles remained unsettled, thus retarding our progress. We point to the broken pledges of this nation in its treaties and in its political platforms made with us and for our benefit. We point to the fact that for thirty years we were a thousand miles away from all adequate communication with the outside world, and resent the imputations cast upon us because of our lack of progress under such conditions while we were fighting the Indians for our very existence.

We deny the statement that mining populations and pastoral populations do not create a State and point to many examples in the nation where the contrary is proven. We object to alleged facts being taken from private almanacs and random newspapers to prove slanders against us. We deny that the small amount of internal-revenue taxes collected on whisky and tobacco among us is any proper indication of our civilization, and assert that we have, according to our population, in New Mexico more churches than any State or Territory in this Union. We deny that the Mormon question cuts any figure with us at all, and we assert that there is not to exceed 500 Mormons in all of the Territory of New Mexico, and that these people are the best kind of citizens as we know them.

We deny that there is any sentiment whatsoever favoring polygamy or bigamy in New Mexico, and we assert that no constitution will ever be adopted by the people of the Territory as a State unless it shall have as strong an antipolygamy provision in it as can be put in language, as was contained in the constitution we adopted in the year 1889, when Congress failed to give us an enabling act. We assert that more than a million of dollars collected last year in taxes for schools is a better argument of our progress and morals than $50,000 collected as a tax upon whisky sold in any one year. We point to the fact that we have more than 2,600 miles of railroad in operation and 400 post-offices in our midst, and that these things show a progress which in proportion to our population is as good as can be found anywhere in the nation.

We protest against the use of newspaper interviews dictated by those who have been among us but a few months, as an argument against the granting to us of our rights; and against being called foreigners, and assert that there is in New Mexico a smaller percentage of foreigners in proportion to the population than there is in the State of New York, the State of Indiana, the State of Vermont, the State of New Hampshire, or the State of Minnesota. We protest against any slurs of any kind or character being put upon the American citizens of Spanish descent living in New Mexico, who have proven themselves as law abiding, as moral, and as patriotic as any people in this nation, and who have endured hardships and disadvantages the like of which no other people under our flag have ever experienced.

Our people were taken by conquest into this nation while speaking a foreign language and nothing was done for them or toward their education for half a century, but instead the revenue laws were enforced against them and the money turned into the National Treasury. Even the Indians were better treated, in that they were and are now being educated at Government expense; our new possessions are having large numbers of teachers shipped to them and are being permitted to use their own revenues for their own education and betterment.

We protest against any comparison between our people and foreign immigrants coming to the Atlantic coast. We assert that it is unfair and unjust that all these foreigners can come to this country and enjoy all the blessings of citizenship in five years, when our people have been denied their rights for more than half a century.

We protest against the assertion that the Senators our people would send to the United States Senate would not compare favorably with those from other States in this Union; and against the comparison of our progress with the progress of the Atlantic coast States and the Middle States, and submit that the conditions never were and are not now the same; and we assert that it is unfair in the extreme for anybody to make the good and patriotic people of New Mexico the butt of questionable jokes when we are here for the twenty-second time before Congress making the fight of our political lives for our political rights.

We protest against having the fact that some of the documents are translated into Spanish in the Territory made an argument against the granting to us of our rights, and point to the fact that there is not a State in the Union but what translates its governor's message and other important documents into several languages; and against the fact that one member of our legislature wished to modify our splendid Sunday law being used as an argument against our morality, when the fact is that the bill was killed and our good law permitted to stand, which is an argument in the other direction.

Finally, we protest against the ex parte examination of Professor Newell, and against the statements made in his evidence and against arguments based upon them, and we ask that our rights be protected upon the floor of the Senate in a manner that will comport not only with the dignity of the nation but with the rights of our people.

I subjoin some verses, which I hope will not be construed as another evidence of our illiteracy.

NEW MEXICO.

[G. Cathcart Bronson.]

We're going to be a State, I say!
And trust not one will vote us nay.
We ask a place among the stars
That glow amid the blue and bars
Of our dear flag, beneath whose wave
Our sons have battled, true and brave;
"New Mexico shall be a State!"

Our mountain peaks all proudly lift
Their hoary heads from snowy rift,
And ask in their majestic pride
That "statehood may not be denied."
Our ruby plain bespeaks the breeze—
An anthem soundeth from the trees—
Our emerald rivers scintillate,
"New Mexico shall be a State!"

Strong in our numbers, true and tried,
In wealth and enterprise beside;
And health, the greatest gift of God,
Exhaleth freely from our sod.
Yes, we have earned the right to be
A part of your community!
We must not, shall not, be denied,
The consummation of our pride.

Not after while, but now, we ask
(And we are equal to the task)
To stand with our fair sisters, all,
And with them rise or nobly fall!
Our star of statehood gilds the east;
Prepared, my people, for the feast;
Let every hut and villa glow
With peace and plenty's gen'rous flow.

Come, rally round our worthy cause;
New Mexico rings her applause.
Come, Roosevelt, brave, and add your seal,
Nor lend your veto to repeal.
E'er Senate's session terminate,
"New Mexico shall be a State."

All of which I respectfully submit.

B. S. RODEY,
Delegate in Congress from New Mexico.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, at the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], I ask unanimous consent that, in addition to Delegate RODEY's letter being printed in the RECORD, it be printed as a document for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the junior Senator from Colorado that, in addition to printing in the RECORD the paper submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], it also be printed as a Senate document? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I was on my feet to object. I do not know what is in this paper. I made no objection to its being printed in the RECORD, as is frequently done in such cases, but I think I shall object to its being printed as a document until I can look at it. If it goes into the RECORD where I can examine it, possibly I shall have no objection whatever to its being printed as a document. I think that is perhaps the better thing to do, so that we may all see it. I think I shall object to the request until I can examine the paper.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to say to the Senator from Indiana that I have carefully edited the letter.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have no doubt that will be an additional reason why I shall withdraw my objection to its being printed as a document when I have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. PATTERSON. With the consent of the Delegate from New Mexico, I made some changes in the letter which I thought were wise. I think the Senator from Indiana can now have no objection either to the tone of the letter or to its contents. It was my aim when I went over the letter to expunge anything from it that might be objectionable to any Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is very probable that after I have had an opportunity of examining the letter I may have no objection to its publication as a document. I want to say in this case that this is rather an unusual matter, because the Delegate had an opportunity to get his remarks into the proceedings of the other House in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, without the necessity of coming to the Senate and asking to have his observations printed as a Senate document and also to have them inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. CULLOM. I only wish to remark that I myself suggested to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] that it would be well to print the paper of Delegate RODEY as a public document. I happen to know Mr. RODEY very well. I think he is a very sincere and candid man; and whilst I do not know what is contained in the paper, I think it is just as well that he should have an opportunity to be heard in that way.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have no doubt that the sincerity of Delegate RODEY is equal to his enthusiasm, but I also have no doubt——

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

PROPOSED VOTE ON STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, as the ghost of the statehood bill stalks the Chamber again, I rise to request unanimous consent that at 9 o'clock this evening, if the Senate be then in session, or, if not, immediately upon the convening of the Senate after that hour, a vote be taken on the final passage of the omnibus statehood bill and on the amendments then pending or that may then be offered, without further debate. I think a vote upon that bill—the Senator from Rhode Island will understand my intention—will facilitate the public business.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator, before we either act or omit to act upon his request, whether this is his farewell request on that subject? [Laughter.]

Mr. QUAY. I am not prepared to answer that question, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] asks unanimous consent that at 9 o'clock this evening a vote be taken upon what is known as the omnibus statehood bill, on the amendments then pending, and on the amendments that may then be offered. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. QUAY. Or that the vote be taken at the first convening of the Senate after that hour if the Senate should not then be in session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] not yet having completed his remarks and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] not having completed his remarks, I feel constrained to object.

Mr. QUAY. The remarks of the Senator from New York are printed in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is entitled to the floor.

SAFE-KEEPING OF PUBLIC MONEY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 7301) to further provide for the safe-keeping of public money, and for other purposes.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, before commencing my remarks, I wish to send to the desk and have read an amendment which I intend to propose as an additional section to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following as a new section:

The Secretary of the Treasury may, with the written approval of the President, make use of so much of the $150,000,000 of the gold reserve provided for the redemption of national and Treasury notes by act of March 14, 1900, as is not required for the faithful execution of the provisions of that act, not exceeding, however, $140,000,000; and the amount not withdrawn shall hereafter be maintained for the redemption of said notes, according to the provisions of said act of March 14, 1900.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is already an amendment pending, so that this amendment will be an amendment to that amendment, as the Chair understands.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, on Saturday last I was taken off the floor, as I have before stated, when I was about to conclude the few remarks I desired to make on this bill. I am not now going to take any considerable time.

I notice that it was stated in the public press this morning that some sort of an arrangement has been made for the defeat of this bill by continuous speech-making. I want to say, if there is any such thing proposed, I am not a party to it; that what I shall say will not be with any such view, and I want to add that I know nothing of any such arrangement as that referred to.

I stated on Saturday that I have some objections to this bill. Those objections were largely based on the ground that the bill dealt with a subject which it seemed to me ought to have been dealt with more fully and carefully than it has been by the Committee on Finance, because I thought some amendments ought to have been made, which I understand are likely to be made, but not all which I think ought to be made.

I think it is very reprehensible to bring here in the last hours of the session a bill of the character and of the importance of that which is now presented to us. We are practically at the close of this session, with various appropriation bills to be considered, with treaties to be disposed of, and appointments by the President to be confirmed or rejected; and yet we are called upon to discuss and act upon one of the most important bills which has been presented during this session, involving a policy which, of course, I know has been in existence for many years, but a policy which is to be intensified and broadened, a policy that was born of necessity, and I am afraid a policy that will be strengthened by the passage of this bill—a policy which I can not see how we can get rid of without great detriment to the public interest.

Mr. President, I do not see the necessity for the immediate passage of this bill. The Secretary of the Treasury has practically the authority, it seems to me, to put all the money that we ought to put out in the way of deposits in the national banks. I doubt very much whether he will be able, if this bill becomes a law, for the present, at least until the next session of Congress, to materially increase the deposits in the national banks.

If we take no account of the deposits in the national banks, the Government has from about seventy to eighty million dollars of money which can be used for current expenses or for appropriations that shall now be made. Funds are coming into the Treasury at the rate of about $4,000,000 a month in excess of the normal expenses of the Government.

I saw a statement made in another place which put the surplus at $70,000,000. I think I made it the other night $78,000,000; but I suppose the statement depends upon just when the calculation is made. The sums in the banks vary from about a million to a million and a half, and the revenues increase and decrease from time to time.

So we start with seventy-five or seventy-eight million dollars in the Treasury. We have appropriated $40,000,000 for the Panama Canal, and we are about, I suppose, within a few days to appropriate $10,000,000 more to be paid to Colombia, making $50,000,000 in the aggregate. Then in the bill that made it possible to take the Panama route we appropriated $10,000,000 for the work on the canal.

Of course the last $10,000,000 will not be at once used, but it will be set apart as a fund, I suppose, by the Department for the purpose of building the canal, and will not be available for any other purpose. So, Mr. President, it seems to me there is not any immediate necessity for the passage of this measure.

It is said that this is a needful measure, because we are gradually tying up in the Treasury the money that we are collecting from the people and depriving them of its use. But we have in the National Treasury now as a reserve fund the $150,000,000 of which I spoke on Saturday, and in regard to which I have offered an amendment that it may be used. I know very well that the Senator who has this bill in charge will say that this is a fund reserved by law—a sacred fund reserved for what?

For the purpose of the redemption of the greenbacks and Treasury notes amounting, according to the last Treasury statement, made on the 1st day of February, a copy of which I have here, from which it appears that the Treasury notes and greenbacks amounted to $363,000,000 in round numbers, of national-bank notes $362,000,000 and a trifle over, or a total of national-bank notes and Treasury notes and greenbacks of $725,000,000. That is the paper money of this country, against which stands in circulation or in the Treasury the sum of $1,250,000,000 in gold. If we add to that——

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator in his calculation has left out $400,000,000 of gold certificates.

Mr. TELLER. No; I have not. I am coming to that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Well, the Senator has left it out so far. I beg the Senator's pardon. The gold certificates were, on the 1st day of February last, $376,034,814.

Mr. TELLER. If you put in the gold certificates, which I have now accounted for, you will still have a quantity of gold greater than the entire amount of commercial paper money. There is not anybody here or anywhere else who believes that it is necessary to maintain $150,000,000 of gold in the Treasury of the United States for the redemption of Treasury notes and greenbacks. I will admit that all of the gold certificates that are in circulation are a call upon this gold; but they are no more a call upon the gold in the Treasury than are the greenbacks, because the Government has agreed to redeem them in gold, and the Government has practically redeemed them in gold since 1879.

I know that at one time in the history of this country there was a good deal of fright amongst the people as to whether the Government would be able, if the demand was made in any considerable quantity, to exchange gold for its greenbacks; and for that reason, I suppose, we established this reserve of $150,000,000 in gold. But aside from that, there is in the Treasury to-day nearly $100,000,000 of gold outside of that, which belongs to the Government and which can be used for any purpose for which the Government sees fit to use this money.

We are told that we want to enlarge the power of the Government to put money that it has in the Treasury derived from customs duties into the national banks for fear there will be some day a stringency in the money market that will make a demand for more money and the Government will have it locked up there and can not use it.

In the amendment which I offered a few moments ago, I propose to allow, in an emergency of that kind, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the written approval of the President of the United States, to use at least $140,000,000 of that money, and that thereafter if he did use it, he should maintain a reserve of $10,000,000, instead of $150,000,000. I should like to have some Senator stand up here and say as a Senator that he believes there is a public necessity to maintain more than $10,000,000 for the purposes for which you have locked up and devoted $150,000,000.

What did you think last summer when the Secretary of the Treasury was appealing to the national banks for $16,000,000 additional circulation with your $150,000,000 locked up there, having no influence whatever upon the commerce or the credit of the American people? I have no reason to suppose that there will anything happen that will require this Government to put any more money in the national banks than it has there now.

I think it has as much as ought to be there in normal times; but I have no hesitation in saying that if I were President of the United States or Secretary of the Treasury and such a condition should occur as required it, I would put more money, if I had it, in the national banks, so as to get it into circulation and give the people the benefit of an increased currency and increased circulation. I have never criticised the Secretary of the Treasury for putting that money there.

With my views on this question, the money ought not to have been in the Treasury, but it ought to have been in the hands of the people. The Secretary of the Treasury is not responsible for that. If there is any responsibility anywhere it rests upon this body and the other House. It is the legislative department of the Government that is to blame if more taxes are collected yearly than ought to be collected, and it is not the fault of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Normally and properly I do not think the Secretary of the Treasury ought to have anything to do with public affairs in the way of putting money on the market to-day or of drawing it from the market to-morrow—that is, putting it in circulation or withholding it from the circulation of the country. There ought to be, if possible, a fixed condition as to the amount of money in circulation, so regulated as the growth of the country and the increase of the business of the country might demand that the circulation might be increased, unless you are prepared to say that the Treasury of the United States shall take in hand this question of currency and issue all and the only currency that we have aside from gold and silver.

It would be a very different thing if the Secretary of the Treasury had the power of creating money or issuing money—I speak of creating money in the way of issuing it as we did the greenbacks—and if there is a hundred and fifty millions there that ought not to be there, it is a fault which rests on the legislative and not on the executive department of the Government.

I submit now, whatever may have been the views of Senators when that money—three years ago, within a few days—was reserved and declared a perpetual fund, the time has come when we know that it would be a public blessing to allow the President of the United States to relax that feature of the law and put that money in circulation if the demands of the business of the country demand it.

I have no hope, Mr. President, that that will be done. I thought when the one hundred and fifty millions was locked up it was a mistake. I did not vote for it. I did not believe it was then necessary to reserve any sum. I believed with the plain declaration of the statute that the Government would redeem in gold every greenback presented to it, the Administration would always see to it that it had gold enough to do that without such a reserve, and every Secretary of the Treasury who properly understood his business would do that.

I have one or two other amendments which I want to offer, provided one I have offered is not accepted by the chairman of the committee, which I have not really any hope of his doing. But I desire to say a word or two more about the revenues of this Government. We are now collecting each month not far from four and a half million dollars of money more than is required for the ordinary expenses of the Government.

On Saturday the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who has this bill in charge, wanted to know if I would assist at the next session in revising the revenue system, to the extent that we might reduce this taxation of the people. I am not willing to say now that you can reduce very much the revenue and not take chances of suffering if business should prove slack or if some condition should arise, now unforeseen, in the commercial world. I know that to collect $50,000,000 a year more than you need is a misfortune in some respects, but it is infinitely better than to collect $50,000,000 less than you need.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does not the Senator remember that when we last reduced taxation a good many Senators thought we had so far reduced it that there would not be as much receipts as expenditures?

Mr. TELLER. I know that is a fact. I am not ashamed or afraid to confess that I shared in that feeling. I was very much afraid we had gone so far in that reduction that there would be a deficiency instead of a surplus. I remember that Gen. Fred Grant once said it was easier to deal with a surplus than with a deficit.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from Colorado will bear in mind that I made the suggestion to him with this modification, that if it should appear in December that the surplus was sufficient to warrant it, we should join and reduce the revenue. I agree with him that circumstances may arise under which, instead of having a surplus we may have a deficiency. For that part of the fiscal year which has already elapsed we have had a surplus of about $32,000,000. If that rate should continue until December I am sure all of us will be found cooperating to reduce the revenue.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not care to go into that subject very extensively. I recall that since I have had a seat in this body we came perilously near a deficit, and with it came all the suspicions and distrust that always come when the Government is not collecting enough money to pay its current expenses and have at least a small surplus.

I want to treat this subject fairly. I am not complaining now that the law was improperly made providing for this reduction of revenue. I myself, and I am willing to say it, thought at the time we were in danger of a deficit under it and not a surplus. It is beyond the ken of man so to regulate the revenues that you will always have just what you need. That is why I thought years ago that we ought to have a law to enable us to pay upon our debt any surplus that we might get in the course of business in the years to come.

Mr. President, we are about to ratify a treaty—I suppose it is not out of order for me to speak about what is going to be done in executive session. The treaty is public and when we ratify it it will put upon us a very large expenditure. I do not care to prophesy how much it will be, but it will be a large amount. How much of it will be every year I do not know, but I should say anywhere from ten to twenty-five million dollars a year for some years to come. I refer to the treaty with Colombia, and I have no doubt that treaty is to be ratified, either before the close of this Congress or at a later period.

You are also about to ratify another treaty, I am told—certainly not with my approval, but very likely without it—which will take out of the revenues of the Government the first year not less than $6,000,000, and before the expiration of my term, which commences on the 4th of March, you will live to see $10,000,000, and even more than that, taken out of the revenues by the reduction of duty on Cuban sugar.

I am not in favor of the Cuban treaty, and I am going to say why I am not in favor of it. It will not be out of order, because the treaty is a public document which we all have on our tables. I am not going to enter upon any line of treaty discussion of which the most sensitive Senator can complain.

The doctrine of reciprocity is one which naturally grew out of the protective system. Reciprocity means protection. It means protection to the things that we produce and an interchange of articles that somebody else produces and we do not.

When Senators tell me that reciprocity was the doctrine of James G. Blaine, Garfield, and McKinley, I want to say that you can not find anywhere an utterance of those three men, or of any other political economist worthy of note, in favor of a treaty or a law for reciprocity in which you concede to your competitors in production something that you do not concede to the rest of mankind.

Reciprocity, I understand, rests upon this doctrine. There is a people who produce something that we do not. We let down our bar as to our tariff upon those articles when they bring them to our ports, and they let down the tariff bar upon our products when they go to their ports. I refer to noncompetitive articles and not competitive articles. Here it is proposed to let in the sugar of Cuba at special and reduced rate. I do not know that I can say what a few years ago we said here, that Cuba can produce sugar more cheaply than any other country in the world, but I will say there is but one place in the world where sugar can be produced as cheaply as it can be in Cuba, and that is in the Philippine Islands.

You not only propose that Cuba shall have a reduction of one-fifth of the present tariff duties upon a quantity of sugar which last year amounted to 840,000 tons, and will amount this year to a million tons, but you propose to reduce the duty on Philippine sugar, a community that will be able in five or six years—with the encouragement you propose—to raise all the sugar that the American people want. They will raise it by Chinese labor. They have a million of them there now, and with that labor and those whom they will secure by methods which we understand—in violation of law—they will have a labor there to compete with the American sugar grower, whether he lives in Louisiana or Colorado, Nebraska or Kansas.

Mr. President, I said the other day, when somebody intimated that I was not a protectionist, that I had been in favor of the protection of American labor and American capital when brought in contact with the cheap labor or cheap capital of Europe. I am just as much in favor of protecting American labor and American capital against the labor and capital of Cuba as I am of any other portion of the world.

I have never heard the most violent and enthusiastic free trader whom I have known make a proposition so baseless and outrageous as this one, that you will reduce the duty on Cuban sugar coming into the United States, and it is not for the benefit of the American consumer.

On the contrary, you admit that it is not for his benefit. Well, then, who is? There are only two parties who can. One is the man who grows the sugar in Cuba and the other is the man who buys at our ports for refining—the sugar trust. If you are honest and believe that the Cuban is going to get this bounty—for bounty it is—then for the first time in the economic history of any people in the world it is proposed to give to the Cuban a bounty upon a product as to which he is competing with the American producer, whether it be of beet or cane sugar.

I want some man who is in favor of the Cuban treaty to tell me if that is not a fair and honest statement of the result of the reduction of the duty on Cuban sugar. If the Cuban gets the reduction of 20 per cent, he will get about $7.50 a ton as an absolute bounty. One of the ways of reducing revenue in this country is by putting down the duty upon Cuban sugar and stimulating the Cuban planter to increase his product. If he can send us this year a million tons, he can send us next year a million and a half, and so on, almost indefinitely, and in a few years he will furnish all the sugar we need, and he will furnish it at a rate at which no man can furnish it in the United States.

Mr. President, the beet-sugar industry of the great West has enabled the farmers in that section of the country to do something besides raising wheat and corn. Those farmers have found the raising of beets a profitable industry—the most profitable of all agriculture. I do not care if the men who make sugar in the factories are here saying the reduction of duty on Cuban sugar will not hurt the beet-sugar industry of this country.

They are not the men in whose interests my sympathies have been enlisted. I refer to the men who grow the beets on the farms. And if the reduction of duty does affect the sugar business, then the manufacturers will make a reduction in the price paid to the farmer for the beets. Very likely for some years it may not. It may not just so long as the combination can maintain the price of sugar in the United States, as some of the beet-sugar men and importers and the refiners of foreign sugar are now banded together to do.

That is all out of the line of this bill, excepting incidentally you may say it will reduce revenue. I have made these few remarks on this subject simply because I want the country to understand that there is no principle of decent reciprocity in this proposition. I want them to understand that it is a question whether the American people are now prepared to give a bounty to the people who are competing with thousands and tens of thousands of American farmers who are raising beets. I think myself that the duty might profitably be reduced, but it should be reduced to every man who brings sugar to our ports.

Every foreigner who raises sugar for our consumption should raise it on the same basis. The producer of one country should have no preference over any other foreign producer when the sugar is brought to our ports. But if you say to the sugar growers of Jamaica and the islands of the sea, of Java and Madagascar, and all over the world, "You must pay seven dollars and a half a ton more than the Cuban does when he delivers sugar at our ports," you will turn the attention of the Cubans so to raising sugar that they will raise nothing else. They can outsell all the rest of the world's sugar producers.

Mr. President, should the question whether we are to lower the tariff on sugar from the Philippine Islands come before the Senate, I shall take occasion to say something more upon the question than I have done to-day. I have made these remarks simply because I have a very strong belief that we shall not have the Philippine tariff bill before the Senate at the present session.

The question whether we have a right to change our revenue system by treaty is one which I would not at this time consider it quite fair to debate, because I think if I should take that up I should be charged with a desire to delay the passage of this bill. I shall not vote for the pending bill. I do not myself think it contains so much danger as some of my associates do. Yet I can not bring myself to vote for it as it stands. But I do not desire to interfere in any way with the majority of this Chamber. If there is a majority for this bill I am willing they should have an opportunity to vote on the bill.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read the article I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee sends to the desk an article, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

While it is largely a waste of time to refute the base slanders uttered by defamers of the Army in the United States Senate, the atrocious statement of Senator CARMACK, a member of that body, on February 9, can not be permitted to pass unrebuked. That he, a Senator of the United States, should seriously declare that "murders by American soldiers in the Philippines have become so common that they will not bear investigation" is almost unbelievable. This wicked libel is the topmost note in all the malevolent chorus of misrepresentation with which the "anti-imperialist" demagogues have assailed the honor and manhood of the United States Army. It is a foul insult to every patriotic man and woman. It is a vile affront to the national sense of truth and justice, and will bring upon its author the blistering contempt of an outraged people. Senator CARMACK has a serious matter to explain to his own conscience. (Army and Navy Journal, February 14, 1903.)

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to yield to me that I may make a personal appeal.

Mr. CARMACK. I will yield for the personal appeal.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is that the Senator make his Philippine speech upon the Philippine tariff bill, which is quite likely to follow this bill in course of time, and not upon the pending bill. I know the Senator from Tennessee is always courteous and yields to requests of this kind when he can, and I hope he will yield in this particular case and let us go on with the discussion of the pending bill, which, if it is to pass at all, must pass within a very few hours.

Mr. CARMACK. I am going to occupy only a very few moments in what I have to say at the present time.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, it has not been my habit to pay any attention whatever to newspaper detraction or abuse. I have always endeavored, according to the nature of the case, either to receive it with all humility and to make it profitable for instruction, or else to endure it with patience and serene contempt. If the article in question concerned only myself, I should pass it, as I have a hundred others, without any notice whatever.

I take note of it now not to repel any personal attack that has been made upon myself, but to deal with it as a pointed illustration of a deliberate policy of misrepresentation and misstatement and suppression of the truth on the part of the newspaper advocates of imperialism. Throughout the whole of this discussion they seem to have acted as with a set purpose to overwhelm all legitimate criticism and all plain telling of the truth by the sheer force of impudent and industrious mendacity.

The author of this article pretends to give a precise and exact quotation of a passage from a recent speech made by me upon the floor of the Senate, and then proceeds to vituperate after the fashion of his kind. He could just as easily have given my language as it was uttered; but that, Mr. President, would not have suited his purpose. If he had done so it would have revealed the fact that I was not making an independent statement upon my own authority, but that I was giving the purport of an official paper signed by a distinguished judge-advocate in the Philippine Islands in which he recommended that an investigation, then in progress, concerning the murder of prisoners be summarily stopped, on the express ground that, if it were continued, it would establish the truth of the accusation and involve many others in the commission of the same crime.

If he had told the exact truth, if he had printed my exact language with the immediate context, the author of that article knew very well that he could not have disposed of it by simply denouncing it as a "foul insult" and a "wicked libel," and, by characterizing the author of it as an "anti-imperialist demagogue." His readers would have made embarrassing inquiry with respect to the official communication referred to, and they would have asked if it was really true that a judge-advocate of the United States Army in the Philippine Islands had made such an astounding recommendation, and if it was really true that this had been approved by the commanding general of the army in the Philippines, and had been acquiesced in and accepted as a satisfactory conclusion of the investigation by the Department of War.

If they had investigated it and found that this was the actual truth, that it did not rest, as he would have them believe, upon the malignant vaporings of an "anti-imperialist demagogue," but that it was an official fact, officially established, and to be found in the archives of the War Department itself, they would have seen how utterly irrelevant was all this denunciation of every man who dared to ask for information and to tell the plain truth with reference to what has been done and is being done in the Philippine Islands.

I want to say right now, Mr. President, that although this astounding communication has been read and commented upon with emphasis again and again upon the floor of the Senate, no hint of it has ever appeared in any organ of this Administration, nor has it ever been referred to by any Senator upon the other side of the Chamber.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to read to the Senate the exact language used by me in that speech:

It was proposed to make a vicarious sacrifice of a poor private soldier, one of the men who, under orders, had executed the prisoners; but when this was brought to the attention of the judge-advocate he saw that you could not kill even a private soldier or put him in the penitentiary without a trial, and he said that the soldier on that trial would bring out the fact that he acted under the orders of his superior officer, and that the facts developed would implicate too many others.

So, Mr. President, it was decided—it was officially decided—that there were so many engaged in this bloody business that it was better to wink at the crime of murdering prisoners of war than to expose the actual condition of affairs, and that lame and impotent conclusion was accepted by the War Department without a protest.

The Department itself had ordered an investigation of a charge that American officers had murdered prisoners of war. The answer came back that there had been so many men engaged in this practice, it was too common a practice to bear investigation; and that answer seems to have been entirely satisfactory to our noble and generous and humane Secretary of War.

I made substantially the same statement at the last session of Congress, and it passed unchallenged and undenied. I made it again at the present session of Congress and no man denied it. I wish now again, Mr. President, for the third time in the presence of this Senate to state as briefly as I can the facts in this case.

First, a letter from a private soldier by the name of Brenner, written to his people at home, was published in the newspapers, charging that prisoners of war had been murdered after the battle of Caloocan. A demand for information was made upon the Secretary of War and an investigation was ordered by him. The investigation was conducted by Major Mallory, the inspector-general of the district, who made his report to General Otis showing that there had been a murder of prisoners, and setting forth the substance of the testimony, strongly implicating a Captain Bishop as having ordered the killing of these prisoners, his language in stating his own conclusion upon this evidence being as follows:

The evidence as to whether Captain Bishop was present at the killing of the prisoners, as to whether he was appealed to for advice——

Mr. RAWLINS. What is the Senator reading from?
Mr. CARMACK. I am reading from page 134 of the hearings.
Mr. SPOONER. Before the Philippine Committee?
Mr. CARMACK. Before the Philippine Committee.
Mr. SPOONER. What is the number of the document?
Mr. CARMACK. Senate Document No. 331, part 2, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.

4. The evidence as to whether Captain Bishop was present at the killing of the prisoners, as to whether he was appealed to for advice, and as to whether he made such answer as was construed as advising or suggesting that they be killed is conflicting, his assertions in the negative contained in his letter hereto appended being at variance with the statements alleged under oath to have been made by him on previous occasions.

It is also shown in that report that a private by the name of Putnam admitted that he was one of the soldiers who, acting under orders, had killed these prisoners, though he did not remember, or affected not to remember, who gave the order. That was the report which was sent to General Otis. These papers were sent to Judge-Advocate Crowder for his comment and remark.

And now, Mr. President, comes the astounding part of this business, to which I referred in my speech, and which provoked the article which I have had read at the Secretary's desk.

General Otis in sending these papers to the judge-advocate recommended that court-martial proceedings be had against the soldier who had written the letter revealing these facts and against this private soldier, Putnam, entirely ignoring the grave charges against Captain Bishop.

After Colonel Crowder had considered the matter he wrote back to General Otis, stating that if this soldier should be put upon trial his only defense would be the order of his superior officer, and the probabilities were that the facts developed would implicate many others, and he therefore recommended that no further action be taken in this case, and that recommendation was approved by the commanding general and it was acquiesced in by the Department of War, and that was the conclusion of this investigation, which the Secretary of War himself had ordered.

I have made this statement now for the third time on the floor of the Senate, and while for making it I have been denounced in imperialist papers all over the country as a liar, no Senator upon this floor has ever called it in question, and I challenge any one of them to do it now.

That, Mr. President, is a correct statement of this case from the official record. I will put this recommendation of Colonel Crowder into the RECORD as part of my speech, and I will also publish the order on that subject.

The papers referred to are as follows:

The offense of Private Putnam, if he has committed one, is manslaughter. His only defense would be a lawful order of his superior officer. If put on trial, it is probable that facts would develop implicating many others. I doubt the propriety of his trial and am of the opinion that considerations of public policy, sufficiently grave to silence every other demand, require that no further action be taken in this case.

E. H. CROWDER,
Lieutenant-Colonel and Judge-Advocate, U. S. Volunteers.

[Sixth indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE PACIFIC AND EIGHTH ARMY CORPS,
Manila, July 13, 1899.

Respectfully forwarded to the Adjutant-General of the Army. After mature deliberation I doubt the wisdom of a court-martial in this case, as it would give the insurgent authorities a knowledge of what was taking place, and they would assert positively that our troops had practiced inhumanities, whether the charge should be proven or not, as they would use it as an excuse to defend their own barbarities; and it is not thought that this charge is very grievous under the circumstances then existing, since it was very early in the war and the patience of the men was under great strain. Nothing of the kind has happened of late, and the attendance we give to captured and wounded Filipinos is now giving rise to a great deal of comment on the part of the friendly Filipinos, who think we carry our kindnesses to an unnecessary extent. I hear the best of them criticise our action as the result of too much sentiment.

E. S. OTIS,
Major-General Commanding.

Mr. CARMACK. Now, Mr. President, I say from that it appears beyond any question or denial that the policy adopted by this Government in the Philippine Islands was to suppress the truth wherever an investigation would reveal the fact that crime and outrage had been committed. They were not concerned, Mr. President, to avoid guilt, but simply to avoid shame. They were not trying to suppress crime, but simply to suppress the knowledge of it from the American people.

What I have said here is a part of the record in the War Department itself. No man has ever denied it, and no man can truthfully deny it. I said again in that speech that distinguished newspaper correspondents and the agent and representative of the Associated Press in the Philippines, Mr. Robert M. Collins; Mr. Davis, representing the New York Sun, and Mr. Bass, representing Harpers' Weekly, had gone in person to General Otis and told him that they had themselves seen wounded prisoners of war murdered by being stabbed with bayonets, and he did not deny the statement. But no effort was made to punish them. That letter of his was published broadcast in the newspapers of the United States, and no effort was made by the War Department to have an investigation made of the charges.

It is easy, Mr. President, it is so easy, to denounce Senators as liars, slanderers, and defamers of the American Army, and it is not so easy to take issue with a plain statement of facts. That is what I have demanded that Senators should do. It is easy for newspapers to put language into the mouths of Senators which they did not utter and omit the important parts of their statements, and then denounce them as slanderers of the American Army.

No organ of the Administration has ever printed or will dare to print this official recommendation made by Judge-Advocate Crowder, to stop an investigation for fear it would prove the truth of the charge, or will let its readers know that it was approved by the commanding general and acquiesced in without protest by the Department of War.

In the speech I made here, Mr. President, I did not deal in generalities. I made specific accusations, no one of which was challenged by any Senator upon the other side of the Chamber except one by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], and that unsuccessfully in my opinion. I invite them to challenge the truth of a single statement I made in that speech. Every charge I made rests upon the record and can be proven by the record, and when next these newspapers denounce me as having slandered the American Army I invite them, if they dare, to publish the fact that when an investigation was in progress concerning a charge of the murder of prisoners of war that investigation was stopped upon the express ground that if it were continued it would prove the truth of the accusations and involve many others in the crime.

As I have said, Mr. President, I make that statement upon the record. I have made it three different times upon the floor of the Senate. It has never been challenged or denied. I have challenged and I now challenge any Senator upon the other side of the Chamber to make denial of the truth of the statement I have made, and I will pause for a reply. [A pause.] None being forthcoming, Mr. President, that is all I have to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Several amendments have been proposed. The Chair is under the impression that the amendment proposed by the senior Senator from Tennessee is first in order. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That all the laws of the United States imposing any tax on bank notes issued by banks or corporations or associations chartered or authorized by any State in the Union be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. ALDRICH. Question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I expected to have something to say on the amendment.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Clay,	Heitfeld,	Patterson,
Alger,	Cockrell,	Hoar,	Perkins,
Bacon,	Cullom,	Kean,	Pettus,
Bailey,	Deboe,	Kearns,	Platt, Conn.
Bard,	Depew,	Kittredge,	Quarles,
Bate,	Dillingham,	Lodge,	Quay,
Berry,	Dolliver,	McEnery,	Simmons,
Blackburn,	Dryden,	McLaurin, Miss.	Simon,
Burnham,	Dubois,	Mallory,	Spooner,
Burrows,	Elkins,	Martin,	Stewart,
Burton,	Foraker,	Millard,	Teller,
Carmack,	Gallinger,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Clark, Mont.	Hanna,	Nelson,	Wetmore.

Mr. BAILEY. My colleague [Mr. CULBERSON], owing to a spell of sickness, has left the city and is now on his way to Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

RECESS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that at 6 o'clock the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island that the Senate take a recess from 6 o'clock until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. DUBOIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island for what purpose the recess is desired?

Mr. ALDRICH. For the purpose of transacting the public business.

Mr. DUBOIS. For the purpose of considering the bill now under discussion?

Mr. ALDRICH. For the purpose of considering whatever bill the Senate may wish to act upon, or whatever business may be before the Senate at that time, I suppose.

Mr. DUBOIS. I want to suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island at the same time——

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that debate is not in order, Mr. President.

Mr. DUBOIS. I suggest that I trust the Senator will have his quorum here and be prepared to keep them in the Chamber.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PATTERSON. I inquire upon what question the yeas and nays are demanded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], that the Senate take a recess from 6 until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. PATTERSON. I appeal to the Senator from Rhode Island not to insist upon that.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Rhode Island did not call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is a well-known fact that there is no public business pending before the Senate at this time, except the bill of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. Debate is not in order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURROWS. Let us have the regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the taking of the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS], who has been called home by death in his immediate family, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Montana (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and will therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. As I do not see him in the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi (when his name was called). I inquire if the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator has not voted.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. DIETRICH] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] to the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON], who is paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KEARNS]. That will enable both the Senator from Utah and myself to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KEARNS. That arrangement is satisfactory to me. I vote "yea."

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PATTERSON (after having voted in the negative). I am paired on all votes connected with this measure with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and so I withdraw my vote, as I believe that Senator has not voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. DUBOIS (after having voted in the negative). I notice that the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has not voted. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Aldrich,	Dillingham,	Hoar,	Proctor,
Alger,	Dolliver,	Kean,	Quarles,
Bailey,	Dryden,	Kearns,	Quay,
Bard,	Elkins,	Kittredge,	Simon,
Burnham,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Spooner,
Burrows,	Foraker,	Millard,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Frye,	Nelson,	Warren,
Deboe,	Gallinger,	Perkins,	Wetmore.
Depew,	Hanna,	Platt, Conn.

NAYS—14.

Bate,	Clay,	Pettus,	Tillman,
Berry,	McEnery,	Rawlins,	Turner.
Blackburn,	Martin,	Taliaferro,
Carmack,	Morgan,	Teller,

NOT VOTING—39.

Allison,	Dietrich,	Heitfeld,	Money,
Bacon,	Dubois,	Jones, Ark.	Patterson,
Beveridge,	Foster, La.	Jones, Nev.	Penrose,
Burton,	Foster, Wash.	McComas,	Platt, N. Y.
Clapp,	Gamble,	McCumber,	Pritchard,
Clark, Mont.	Gibson,	McLaurin, Miss.	Scott,
Clark, Wyo.	Hale,	McLaurin, S. C.	Simmons,
Cockrell,	Hansbrough,	Mallory,	Vest,
Culberson,	Harris,	Mason,	Wellington.
Daniel,	Hawley,	Mitchell,

So the motion for a recess was agreed to.

ANTHONY R. RAVENSCROFT.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me for a moment, in order that I may secure consideration of a bill which will not consume any time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. QUAY. I yield if the bill does not provoke debate.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6745) for the relief of Anthony R. Ravenscroft.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that Anthony R. Ravenscroft shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a captain of the Twenty-second Regiment of Indiana Infantry Volunteers on the 22d of August, 1864, by reason of the expiration of his term of service, and it directs the Secretary of War to issue a certificate of honorable discharge for him in accordance with the terms of this act; but no pay or other allowances shall be due or payable to any person by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARINE FISHERIES ON THE GULF OF MEXICO.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7285) authorizing, empowering, and directing the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries to establish in the State of Florida, on the Gulf of Mexico, a station for the investigation of problems connected with the marine-fishery interests of the region.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries to establish at some suitable point in the State of Florida, on the Gulf of Mexico, a station for the investigation of problems connected with the marine-fishery interests of the region, and appropriates $25,000 for necessary surveys, purchase of land, erection of buildings and other structures, and for the proper equipment of the station.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CITIZENS' BANK OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. McENERY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1133) for the relief of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read to the Senate for information.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 4, after the word "Louisiana," to strike out "$242,842.67" and insert "$215,820.89;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana $215,820.89, in full for the claims found due said bank by the Court of Claims; and the money to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. KEAN. How much money is proposed to be appropriated by that bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two hundred and fifteen thousand eight hundred and twenty dollars and eighty-nine cents.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object to the further consideration of the bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. QUAY. I am now compelled to insist on my motion for an executive session. There are but twenty minutes remaining for that business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

CHANNEL IN SABINE LAKE, TEXAS.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask for the present consideration of a bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17243) to amend "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] has had a notice placed on this bill that he desired to be present when it was considered.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe the rule which has been adopted provides that no business shall be considered by unanimous consent in the absence of a Senator who objects.

Mr. BERRY. No.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course, I should like to oblige the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], but this is a matter of considerable consequence to that community. An appropriation of $125,000, which has not been used, was made by Congress, and under the opinion of the officers of the Department it can not be judiciously used because of a proviso in the act. This is simply a bill to remedy that defect. It is approved by the Department and was reported unanimously from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BERRY. It has passed the House of Representatives?

Mr. BAILEY. It has passed the House of Representatives, and has been reported from the Senate committee with an amendment which relates merely to the title. Of course I do not want to take advantage of the absence of any Senator, but there is some question about my right to tie up a hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, which is necessary to prosecute a public work, merely to——

Mr. MASON entered the Chamber.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Here is the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. BAILEY. Here is the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois is now present. The Senator from Texas asked unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 17243) to amend "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1902.

Mr. MASON. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois objects.

Mr. BAILEY. If it is in order, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator from Illinois will withdraw his objection.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not appeal to the Senator because I know the friends who have asked him to intervene.

Mr. MASON. I am informed by some constituents of mine that the proposed change in the river and harbor act would, in their judgment, work a great hardship to their interests in this locality. I have asked for a statement, so that I could show to the Senator from Texas and others who are pressing the bill where it will work this injury to those constituents of mine who are heavy investors in his State. I have not been able to see my mail for the past day or two, but I intend to see all of it this evening, and unless there is some good reason for it I shall have no objection to the bill passing.

Mr. BAILEY. In order to save the time for Senators who wish to call up uncontested bills, I will withdraw my motion now, but I will say to the Senator from Illinois that as soon as we reconvene I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the bill. I am not willing for private interests to obstruct an important public improvement in my State.

Mr. MASON. I do not think the Senator from Texas has a monopoly on public interest. I am just as much interested in the public as he is, and while I do not represent his State, I do represent people living in my neighborhood who have great interests in that State. I hope the Senator will not charge that I am putting forward anyone's private interest——

Mr. BAILEY. I simply charge that an individual constituent of the Senator from Illinois has telegraphed him to hold up this bill. I do not mean to charge that the Senator from Illinois would interfere with the public good to serve a private interest. That was not my intention, and I disclaim any such purpose. But I do say that a purely private interest there has declined to permit the Government to connect with a canal being built, and that in holding up this money it is preventing the application of public money to a public use.

Mr. MASON. As I understand the act, it provides a way in which the canal or the connection shall be made between these two rivers, and that it is satisfactory to the people who are the owners of the railroad that ends at Port Arthur.

JOHN D. CHADWICK.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8186) for the relief of John D. Chadwick. It involves almost a hundred dollars of an account proved by record.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to John D. Chadwick, of Madison County, Ala., $97.04, in full of an account held by him against the Government of the United States, arising from certain transactions in the administration of justice in the Federal courts at Huntsville, Ala.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PINTSCH COMPRESSING COMPANY.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7283) to amend an act entitled "An act to permit the Pintsch Compressing Company to lay pipes in certain streets in the city of Washington," approved May 19, 1896.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 2, line 6, after the word "Commissioners," to insert:

And under the conditions named in said act, approved May 19, 1896.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to permit the Pintsch Compressing Company to lay pipes in certain streets in the city of Washington," approved May 19, 1896, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding a new section, to stand as section 4, as follows:

"SEC. 4. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit extensions of the pipe lines of the said Pintsch Compressing Company to reach the site of the union passenger station or the terminals connected therewith. And the said Commissioners are further authorized to permit the relaying of the pipes of said company to accommodate changes in the authorized grades of streets: Provided, That all such work shall be done according to regulations to be approved by the said Commissioners, and under the conditions named in said act, approved May 19, 1896."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate, under the order heretofore made, will now take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

Thereupon (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

PETITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a joint memorial of the legislature of Montana, in the nature of a petition, praying for the enactment of legislation to confirm forest lieu selections made under the act approved June 4, 1897; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE, HELENA, MONT.

Senate joint memorial No. 2.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas the lieu selection clause of the act of June 4, 1897 (30th statutes, 36), provides: "That in cases in which a tract covered by * * * a patent, the * * * owner thereof may, if he desire to do so, relinquish the tract to the Government, and may select in lieu thereof a tract of vacant land, open to settlement, not exceeding in area the tract covered by his * * * patent," and

Whereas many citizens of the State of Montana, being desirous of securing public lands, purchased the rights of owners of lands within certain established forest reserves for the purpose of exchanging said forest-reserve lands for "vacant land open, to settlement," as provided by said act; and

Whereas certain citizens of Montana to the number of 80 or 81, approximately, residing and living within the limits of the Blackfeet Reservation, embracing all that portion of the State of Montana lying north of the Missouri and east of the Marias rivers, have, by virtue of the surrender to the United States of, approximately, fifteen thousand six hundred (15,600) acres of forest-reserve lands under said act, "vacant land, open to settlement," but situate within the above-described limits; and

Whereas the State of Montana, through its land department, has also selected through the same medium, approximately, eight thousand eight hundred (8,800) acres of "vacant land, open to settlement," within the heretofore described limits; and

Whereas the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office, by letter of October 20, 1902, did reject forest-reserve lieu selection No. 1149, of George L. Ramsey, embracing 80 acres situated in the district heretofore described, for the reason that the act of May 1, 1863 (chapt. 213, 25 Statutes, 113 to 133), provided that lands within said district should be subject to entry under the homestead laws except section 3301, Revised Statutes (Note: This is known as the preemption section), the desert-land, the town-site, and the coal and mineral laws of the United States only; and

Whereas a bill (S. 6339) has been introduced in the United States Senate and another (H. R. 15965) has been introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States, of which the following is the text:

"A bill to confirm forest lieu selections made under the act approved June 4, 1897 (30 Stats., 36).

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all bona fide selections under the act approved June 4, 1897 (30 Stats., 36), of lands in Montana which lie within the territory opened to entry under the provisions of the act approved May 1, 1888 (chap. 213, 25 Stats., 113 to 133), entitled 'An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfeet, and River Crow Indians in Montana, and for other purposes,' made prior to the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated October 20, 1902, in the case of George L. Ramsey, holding that such lands are subject to disposal only under the forms of entry provided by the said act of May 1, 1888, be, and the same are hereby, confirmed, no other valid objection to the acceptance of such selections appearing;" and

Whereas nearly all of these lands so selected have been transferred in legal form to innocent holders, many of whom have placed permanent and expensive improvements upon their lands; in many cases have reclaimed, cultivated, and fenced the same; in some cases desert wastes, which before selection would grow nothing but scrubby grass, are now, by reason of irrigation, in a state of cultivation; and

Where these innocent purchasers and holders will be placed under almost inestimable hardship and privation unless relief is afforded by Congress; and

Whereas it can not be said that any of these lands have been selected for the purpose of timber speculation, for it is a patent and notorious fact that there is not a stick of merchantable timber in the whole of the prescribed district or limits, but, on the contrary, all of the lands selected therein are valuable only for grazing or agricultural purposes, some of the land selected being worth intrinsically not more than $1 per acre, except, perhaps, a water hole at which sheep or cattle might be watered; and

Whereas the bill heretofore mentioned, now before the Congress of the United States, is along the strictest lines of justice and equity, can harm no one, and will inure to the benefit of many worthy, although unfortunate, settlers:

Resolved, therefore, That we, your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the State of Montana, earnestly pray and petition the Congress of the United States to approve said bill, or an equivalent thereof, for the purpose set forth; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Montana be, and is hereby, instructed to furnish a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and our Senators and Representatives, and the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the United States Senate and House of Representatives.

W. M. BIGGS,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

B. F. WHITE,
Speaker of the House.

GEORGE H. HAYS,
Secretary of State.

GEORGE A. ROGERS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask consent to call up a little bill of four lines, House bill 6703.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator withhold that motion, that I may present a conference report?

Mr. DUBOIS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho moves that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it it.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate determines not to adjourn.

Mr. WARREN. I now ask leave to call up the bill (H. R. 6703) for the relief of George A. Rogers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill he has indicated. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $1,951.01, to pay the damages inflicted upon George A. Rogers, a contractor with the Government, while drilling from the lighter Daylight, in the East River, New York Harbor, the damages being occasioned by the running of the United States torpedo boats at an unwarranted and illegal rate of speed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I suggest the lack of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Clay,	Hanna,	Morgan,
Alger,	Cullom,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,
Allison,	Deboe,	Heitfeld,	Perkins,
Bacon,	Dillingham,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. My colleague [Mr. MONEY] is absent because of sickness.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is absent also on account of sickness. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] and my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] are paired. I make this announcement for the evening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 6895) to authorize the promotion of Maj. William Crawford Gorgas, a surgeon in the Army of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 17546) to provide for a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States from Porto Rico; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 12098) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for a right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska;" and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MASON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16990) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 17, 21, 22, 26, 32, 33, 35, 36, and 41.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 14, 20, 23, 24, 25, 28, 29, 34, 37, 38, 39, and 40, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 2, line 11, after the word "offices," strike out the following: "one at $3,500, one at New York, N. Y., $4,000, one at Chicago, Ill., $4,000," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "two at $3,500: Provided, That the salary of the assistant postmaster at Chicago shall be fixed at $3,500 per annum;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 2, line 24, strike out the amount named and insert in lieu thereof "$94,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 10, line 15, strike out the amount named and insert in lieu thereof the following: "one superintendent of money-order division, one superintendent of registry, one superintendent of mails, and one superintendent of delivery, at $3,000 each, $24,800;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 10, line 23, strike out the amount named and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$13,900;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Page 12, lines 3 and 4, strike out the amount named and insert "two hundred and fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 12, line 4, after the word "dollars," strike out the amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of which not more than $190,000 shall be expended in rental of machines: Provided, That no canceling machine shall be rented at an annual rental exceeding the rate now paid by the Department: And provided further, That the Postmaster-General shall, whenever in his opinion it is advisable, purchase canceling machines, and shall report fully to the next Congress in regard to said machines, whether they should be purchased or rented, all facts connected therewith, and what steps ought to be taken to protect the interests of the Government therein;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 14, line 13, strike out "ten" and insert "eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 14, lines 14 and 15, strike out the amount named and insert "nineteen thousand two hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 16, line 8, strike out the amount named and insert "twenty-one thousand seven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 17, line 22, strike out in the paragraph all after the words "Postmaster-General" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "$2,000: Provided, That not exceeding $200 of this amount appropriated may be used for necessary traveling expenses of the First Assistant Postmaster-General within the District of Columbia: And provided further, That a sum not exceeding $300 may be used for the purchase of city directories and books of reference;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 23, line 24, after "four," strike out the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Compensation and expenses of United States delegate to the Universal Postal Congress, to convene at Rome, Italy, not to exceed $7,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 25, after line 8, strike out the matter inserted and insert the following: "For the employment of special counsel to be appointed by the Attorney-General, when requested by the Postmaster-General, and at compensation to be fixed by the Attorney-General, not exceeding this temporary appropriation, to prosecute and defend on behalf of the Post-Office Department all suits now pending or which may hereafter arise affecting the second-class mailing privilege, $25,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. E. MASON,
A. S. CLAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
E. F. LOUD,
GEO. W. SMITH,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ELKINS. I never can understand one of these reports from the reading, and I do not know who else can. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if the provision for Fort Scott is stricken out?

Mr. MASON. It is.

Mr. ELKINS. Is the provision for $2,000,000 mail pay restored?

Mr. MASON. It has passed as it came from the House.

Mr. ELKINS. As to the amendment providing that there should be no deficiencies, is that stricken out?

Mr. MASON. Yes; it has been stricken out.

Mr. ELKINS. I am satisfied, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

KENOVA AND BIG SANDY RAILROAD.

Mr. HANNA. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16138) granting the right of way to the Kenova and Big Sandy Railroad Company through the Government lands at Lock No. 2, Big Sandy River, and at Lock No. 3, Big Sandy River, both in Wayne County, W. Va.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORTO RICO.

The bill (H. R. 17546) to provide for a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States from Porto Rico was read by its title.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the qualified voters of Porto Rico shall, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, 1904, and every two years thereafter, elect a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, whose term of office shall commence on the 4th day of March next succeeding the date of his election. Such Delegate shall have a seat in the House of Representatives, with the right to debate, but not to vote, and shall be entitled to the same compensation for salary and other allowances and to the same rights and privileges as the Delegates from the Territories of the United States. No person shall be eligible to such election who is not a bona fide citizen and voter of Porto Rico, who is not 25 years of age, and who does not read and write the English language.

SEC. 2. That the Delegate herein provided for shall be elected in lieu of the resident commissioner from Porto Rico to the United States, provided for by section 39 of the act of Congress entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900: Provided, That all the provisions of this act shall apply to the present resident commissioner from Porto Rico to the United States.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I wish to say one word about the bill.

I am utterly opposed to the bill, as the Senator from Ohio knows, and I think my opposition to it is shared by a good many Senators upon both sides of the Chamber. The Senator from Ohio has an amendment which he desires to offer to the bill, and which I think is important, and to which I have no objection whatever. I have no objection to the bill coming up in order to enable him to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert his amendment. But I want to debate at some length——

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall have to object to it.

Mr. SPOONER. It will take but a moment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I thought the Senator said he wanted to debate it at some length.

Mr. SPOONER. I shall want to debate the proposition contained in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. FORAKER. On another occasion.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not desire to prevent the Senator from Ohio from amending the bill by incorporating in it provisions which are not objectionable.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope there will be an opportunity to debate at length, as the Senator suggests, the proposition embodied in the bill. I understand that the Senator is opposed to it, and therefore I shall not insist on the proposition as it came from the House, but, consent being given to the consideration of the bill, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert what I send to the desk.

Mr. BACON. It is recommended by the committee?

Mr. FORAKER. Oh, yes; it is recommended by the committee.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a commission of three persons, whose duty it shall be to make careful investigation into titles and claims, legal and equitable, of the Holy Roman Catholic Church in and to any and all real property situate within Porto Rico and claimed, respectively, by said church and the Government of the United States, or the government of Porto Rico or any local or municipal government thereof, and to make findings and conclusions with respect to the said property or any part or parts thereof, and to advise such recognition, disposition, and settlement as may to said commission seem just and equitable and in conformity with the provisions of the treaty of Paris.

The said commission shall make full report of its examinations and findings, together with its opinion and recommendations, to the President within one year after its first sitting; and if the President approve such report, or any part thereof, he is hereby authorized and empowered to deliver possession to the said church or to the government of Porto Rico, or any local or municipal government thereof, any and all real property, or any part thereof, described in said report as property which properly belongs to said church or said government of Porto Rico, or any local or municipal government of Porto Rico, as the case may be; and thereafter any property so delivered by order of the President may be registered as church or other property, in accordance with the findings and recommendations of said commission and the action of the President in pursuance thereof, in the same manner and with the same effect as other property of the same kind under the laws in force in the said island.

The commission shall have full power to subpœna witnesses and to compel the production of all necessary documentary evidence. The commission shall be allowed to employ all necessary clerical help, and all the necessary expenses of the commission, including such compensation for each commissioner as the President may prescribe, not exceeding, however, the sum of $5,000 for each commissioner, shall be allowed and paid on the warrant of the commissioners out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The commission shall organize at San Juan within sixty days after their appointment, and it is hereby made the duty of the governor of Porto Rico to furnish a suitable place for them to hold their sessions.

SEC. 2. That all the applicable provisions of the naturalization laws of the United States shall apply to and be held to authorize the admission to citizenship of all persons not citizens who owe permanent allegiance to the United States, and who may become residents of any State or organized Territory of the United States, with the following modifications: The applicant shall not be required to renounce allegiance to any foreign sovereignty; he shall make his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States at least one year prior to his admission; and residence within the jurisdiction of the United States, owing such permanent allegiance, shall be regarded as residence within the United States within the meaning of the five years' residence clause of the existing law.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of the act approved August 30, 1890, being "An act to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts established under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862," be, and the same are hereby, extended to Porto Rico.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, empowered to authorize the construction or extension of any wharf, pier, dolphin, boom, weir, breakwater, sea wall, bulkhead, jetty, or other structure on any of the lands belonging to the United States which underlie the harbor areas and navigable waters and streams lying in or surrounding the island of Porto Rico and the islands lying adjacent thereto, and to authorize the filling in or dredging of such lands, and to authorize any of the above obstructions in the said harbor areas and navigable waters and streams: Provided, however, That the plans for such work be first recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer what has just been read as an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if there is any provision in the bill changing the status of the Porto Rican, granting him citizenship? I heard something of that kind read.

Mr. FORAKER. There is nothing whatever changing the status of the Porto Ricans, but there is a provision that they may become naturalized. Under the decisions of the court they can not now become naturalized under any statute. There is nothing in the substitute that will affect the question the Senator has in mind.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If I caught the reading of the bill aright, there is nothing in it as amended about a Delegate.

Mr. FORAKER. Nothing whatever. That is stricken out.

Now, Mr. President, if it is in order at this time, I will move to amend the title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not yet in order. If there be no further amendments, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to have the Senator from Ohio explain the provision in the bill about church property.

Mr. FORAKER. The provision is simply that the President of the United States shall appoint a commission consisting of three persons, who shall be confirmed by the Senate, to hear all testimony and everybody interested, and then make a finding of fact in settlement of the question as to title.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, do I understand that the bill is before the Senate for consideration now, or on its passage?

Mr. FORAKER. It is up now for consideration on its merits.

Mr. TILLMAN. I thought the Senator wanted to amend it, in order that it might be printed and let us see what it is. Who can catch the meaning of a four-page bill upon just hearing it read from the desk in this way?

Mr. FORAKER. The amendment I have offered I have taken simply from a bill that has been long pending on a former report, and a unanimous report, from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. There is a printed report in support of it. There is not anything new at all in the proposed substitute.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to say that he intended to discuss this question at some length. Otherwise, I should have objected to the bill having been even amended, and I object now to its being considered. If I have to talk on it I will have to talk; that is all.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that it may go over.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the bill may go over until to-morrow, so that we can read it and see what it means.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to the Senator seeing what is in the bill. It can go over until to-morrow.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is all I want. I want to have an opportunity to read it for myself.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the Senator may allow the bill to be reported to the Senate with these amendments, and then it can stop there and be ordered printed as amended.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is all right; just so it goes over until morning for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio say that he has other amendments?

Mr. FORAKER. No other amendment except to amend the title.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if there is any report accompanying the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio stated that there is a report.

Mr. FORAKER. What is the question?

Mr. ELKINS. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. FORAKER. There is a printed report accompanying the bill, as reported from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. ELKINS. But as to this amendment, which is a substitute?

Mr. FORAKER. As to this amendment. The bill as it came from the House provided that the resident commissioner representing Porto Rico here should hereafter be denominated a Delegate and should have the privilege of the floor of the House and be treated as Delegates representing Territories. The Senator from Wisconsin objected to that provision, and stated that he wanted to debate it. Recognizing that it was impossible to debate it at this stage of the session, I moved to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert as an amendment, by way of substitute, the provisions of the bill which had been reported favorably some time ago from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and in support of which there is a printed report on file.

The amendments as they are now offered provide, first, for the settlement of titles to the lands claimed by the Roman Catholic Church in the island of Porto Rico, which has been an exceedingly troublesome question with which we have been concerned ever since the acquisition of that island. We are pursuing the same method there as was pursued in Cuba.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Rhode Island will bear with me for a moment, I shall detain him but a little longer.

This is, in the judgment of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, where the subject has been long considered, the only practical way in which to settle this very troublesome question.

The other provisions of the bill I know the Senator will not object to. One simply provides that the citizens of Porto Rico may become naturalized if they wish to come here. Now they are in a worse situation than aliens, for aliens may become naturalized citizens of the United States and Porto Ricans can not. Another amendment, I will say, in order that Senators may have it all before them, is a provision that all provisions of law applicable to all the Territories of the United States may be extended to Porto Rico as to the benefits of the agricultural college law. Under that law they would get the same as a Territory gets—that is, $25,000 a year for educational purposes in the way of aiding agricultural colleges.

The last provision is an amendment which was offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], providing that the Secretary of War shall have authority to grant permits on submerged lands which belong to the United States for the erection of piers and docks and other necessary conveniences.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I simply want to say now that it seems to me this commission, if it is going to be appointed for the purpose of making a report, should make that report to Congress, and if the matter is coming here again I think I shall move that amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well. I have no objection to having it made in that way—that the report shall be made to Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut, then, does not desire that this amendment shall be agreed to in the Senate?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No.

Mr. FORAKER. I simply ask that the amendments be agreed to in Committee of the Whole, and the bill as amended be reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been reported to the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. And that it shall remain open for amendment, and be taken up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie over.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me, I wish the Chair to explain the parliamentary status of this bill for to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be on the Calendar to-morrow.

Mr. TILLMAN. And will have to come up by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; or by motion.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, one or the other?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 5, 9, 28, 29, 38, 41, and 42.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 46, 47, 43, 44, 45, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, and 115, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93 and agree to the same with two amendments, as follows:

On page 24, line 12, after the word "deported," strike out the words "in all cases the burden shall be on the alien to show clearly and beyond a doubt that he is entitled to land."

On page 25, line 2, strike out the words "Provided, That nothing in this section or in this act shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from arranging from time to time, and it shall be his duty so to arrange in accordance with existing contracts with railroad and steamship companies in foreign contiguous territory, or in accordance with such contracts as he may enter into in the future with such or other transportation lines, for the examination and payment of head tax of aliens landing at ports in said foreign contiguous territory and destined for the United States. Such examination to be held at such ports or places in said foreign contiguous territory as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate. Such examination shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, dispense with the necessity for further examination at United States border ports under this act;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 29, line 21, after the word "and," insert the word "if;" after the word "it" strike out the word "seems" and insert the words "is proved;" and in line 23, after the word "came," insert the words "and is so certified by the examining surgeon at the port of arrival;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 30, line 16, after the word "prescribe," change the colon to a period and strike out the words "Provided, That no such person shall be allowed to enter as an immigrant;" and the Senate agree to the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the conference report?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think a very brief statement ought to be made concerning this report. I confess I am in the same predicament that every other Senator is when a report of this kind is made.

Mr. LODGE. As the chairman of the committee was unable to be present at the whole of the conference and I was there during the entire conference, if it is agreeable to the chairman, I will explain the matter.

Mr. PENROSE. I wish the Senator from Massachusetts would make a statement in regard to the matter.

Mr. LODGE. The conferees have agreed substantially on the bill as it passed this body. The educational clause is stricken out entirely. The House agreed to take the amendment of the Senate, and they have agreed to all the essential Senate amendments. The amendments from which the Senate receded are a half dozen small verbal amendments of no importance to the bill. I can not say more except that it is a bill with which the Senate is entirely familiar, and that all of the important amendments which were discussed here have been agreed to by the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just an inquiry.

Mr. LODGE. If there is any special amendment about which the Senator would like to ask, I will tell him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just one inquiry, and then I will be through. I have no disposition to delay the matter a moment. I notice that the proviso on page 35, which was a portion of a Senate amendment, has been stricken from the bill. I think I myself, perhaps, might answer the question, but I wish to have the Senator assure me that the elimination of that proviso from the bill does not prevent the Secretary of the Treasury in his discretion from having examinations made at the ports of St. John, New Brunswick, Quebec, Halifax, and other seaports.

Mr. LODGE. It does not. That point was raised particularly in conference, and in order to make sure we asked the solicitor of the Department in regard to it, and he said it had no effect whatever. The proviso was simply stricken out because it was surplusage, all that it contained being in another section of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. With that statement I am content, but I simply wish to make the suggestion that, in my judgment, this is a bill which is going to make a good deal of trouble. I think there are a good many insidious things in the bill which have not been exploited during the limited time we have had in which to discuss it. But of course that can not be taken up now, and with this simple statement I am content that the conference report shall be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. BACON. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7445) to provide for the appointment of a district judge for the western judicial district of South Carolina, and for other purposes, to report it favorably with an amendment, and to ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Georgia how many judicial districts there are now in South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. This bill does not create any new judicial district. There are now two judicial districts in South Carolina; but there is only one judge. It is desired to have a judge for each district.

Mr. MALLORY. As I understand, there are two judicial districts and only one judge?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Do I understand the Senator from Georgia to say that there are now two judicial districts in South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. There are now two judicial districts, and there have been since 1823.

Mr. SPOONER. And only one judge?

Mr. BACON. And only one judge.

Mr. SPOONER. This is for an additional judge?

Mr. BACON. Yes; a judge for the western judicial district.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, section 1, after the word "shall," at the end of line 5, to strike out "reside at Greenville, S. C., and in the said western district shall;" so as to make the section read:

That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint for the western judicial district of South Carolina a district judge, who shall possess and exercise all the powers conferred by law upon district judges of the United States, and who shall, as to all business and proceedings arising in said western district, succeed to and possess the same powers and perform the same duties as are now possessed and performed by the district judge for the two judicial districts of said State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT BRIGHAM.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1517) for the relief of Robert Brigham.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Robert Brigham, late postmaster at Franklin, Pa., $2,266.89, that being the amount lost through the failure of Venango National Bank, where the money was deposited by order of the Postmaster-General.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16910) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 14, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 37, 53, 54, 62, and 74.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 16, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 32, 35, 39, 40, 43, 44, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 84, and 85, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,248,520;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$130,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$37,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of said amendment "for the establishment in the State of California of experiment stations" and in lieu thereof insert "in cooperation with the experiment station of the State of California;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$290,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$674,930;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$312,860;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$170,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$212,480;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 39 of the bill, in line 18, after the word "thousand," strike the words "five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 82, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$65,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows; In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

REDFIELD PROCTOR,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
WILLIAM B. BATE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. W. WADSWORTH,
E. S. HENRY,
JOHN S. WILLIAMS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

JAMES W. FOLEY.

On motion of Mr. HANSBROUGH, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of James W. Foley, accompanying Senate bill 1460, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, copy of same having been left in the files, as provided by clause 2, Rule XXX.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17493) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for prior years, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CANNON, Mr. BARNEY, and Mr. LIVINGSTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17493) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. TELLER were appointed.

PORTLAND, VANCOUVER AND YAKIMA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 7425.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill of the Senator from Minnesota, but I desire to give notice that after that bill is disposed of I shall call for the regular order. I feel that I must do so.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will allow me to call up a little bill, the consideration of which I have been requested to secure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill referred to by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] will be read to the Senate for its information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 7425) authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and granting the same and a right to operate and maintain a line of railroad through the Vancouver Barracks and Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Northern Pacific Railway Company; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "Reservation," to insert "if in his judgment it can be done;" in line 8, before the word "purposes," to strike out "any" and insert "military;" on page 2, after the word "granted," at the end of line 1, to insert "during the pleasure of Congress;" in line 2, after the words "to the," to strike out "Northern Pacific Railway Company" and insert "Portland, Vancouver and Yakima Railroad;" after the words "State of," at the end of line 4, to strike out "Wisconsin" and insert "Washington, its successors and assigns;" and in line 12, before the words "by the Secretary of War," to strike out "submitted to and approved" and insert "prescribed;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to locate a right of way, not exceeding 100 feet in width, through the lands of the Vancouver Barracks and Military Reservation if in his judgment it can be done in such a manner as not to interfere with the uses of said reservation for military purposes by the United States; and when said right of way shall be so located it is hereby granted during the pleasure of Congress to the Portland, Vancouver and Yakima Railroad, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of constructing a railroad and telegraph line thereon: Provided, That the said right of way and the width and location thereof through said lands, the compensation therefor, and the regulations for operating said railroad within the limits of the said military reservation so as to prevent all damage to public property or for public uses shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War prior to any entry upon said lands or the commencement of the construction of said works: Provided also, That whenever said right of way shall cease to be used for the purposes aforesaid the same shall revert to the United States.

Mr. NELSON. I move to amend the amendment in line 3, on page 2, after the word "Yakima," by striking out "Railroad" and inserting "Railway;" so as to read "Portland, Vancouver and Yakima Railway."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I heard some reference to Wisconsin in that bill.

Mr. NELSON. That was a mistake. It should be the State of Washington, and that correction has been made.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the title be amended so as to correspond with the changes which have been made in the bill.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and granting the same and a right to operate and maintain a line of railroad through the Vancouver Barracks and Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Portland, Vancouver and Yakima Railway Company, its successors and assigns."

NATIONAL BANK RESERVES.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7659) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "thirty," inserted by said amendment, insert the word "twenty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
NELSON W. ALDRICH,
JAMES K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CHARLES N. FOWLER,
E. J. HILL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

C. W. COLEHOUR.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimons consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7361) for the relief of C. W. Colehour.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island demands the regular order.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will yield to me to pass this little bill. It will only take a moment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Illinois?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to C. W. Colehour, his legal representatives or assigns, $1,020 for sheltering and subsisting Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16990) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 6703) for the relief of George A. Rogers;

A bill (H. R. 6745) for the relief of Anthony R. Ravenscroft; and

A bill (H. R. 14050) to amend an act to regulate the height of buildings in the District of Columbia.

SAFE-KEEPING OF PUBLIC MONEY.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I now ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 7301) to further provide for the safe-keeping of public money, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will not raise any objection to the request I am going to make. I have tried to get the floor for a considerable while, but I have been unable to do so. A number of other bills have been passed without objection, and I ask unanimous consent that the regular order may be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 6225) in aid of the common schools of Mississippi.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, it is evident that that bill can not become a law, as it is a Senate bill. I think we had better go on with the consideration of the regular order and after a while there may be an opportunity to take up the Senator's bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island demands the regular order.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I did not understand what the Senator said.

Mr. ALDRICH. I said the bill named by the Senator from Mississippi was a Senate bill, and could not become a law at this session.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Is not the Senator's bill that we are considering a Senate bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; but I hope it will become a law.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. And I hope the bill I have called up will become a law, and I think there is about as much hope for mine as there is for the bill of the Senator from Rhode Island. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill named by the Senator from Mississippi retains its place on the Calendar.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the little colloquy between the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] has made, as sometimes happens in small fissures, accidental disclosures and immense revelation of what is going on in this body to-night. There is evidently an arrangement made by which the bill that is now before the Senate is to be passed through the other House under a rule for its consideration, and that there is nobody in that House, particularly a Democrat, who will ever be permitted to have a word to say about it.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to offer an amendment to this bill, which I should like to have read and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 14, on page 3, it is proposed to insert:

Said national banking associations shall preserve said deposits of public money separate and apart from the other moneys of said associations and other moneys in their possession or custody, and on loans of said public money made by them shall in no case charge or receive interest at a greater rate than 4 per cent per annum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I should like to know the exact parliamentary situation of this bill in respect of the amendments that have been adopted, and I would ask that they be stated. They have not been printed separately, and I want to know what they are.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Quite a number of amendments have been offered. All the committee amendments have been agreed to, and the pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

Mr. ALDRICH. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And the bill is now in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not understand that amendments are now in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; and there is one pending.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Are there not more amendments already presented than can be entertained at one time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No additional amendments would, of course, be now in order. The Chair said that the question before the Senate was on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I notice, Mr. President, that the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] has just submitted an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida simply submitted it to have it printed. The amendment will have to be offered. It has not been offered for action.

Mr. BLACKBURN. So I understood. I have an amendment to offer to this bill, Mr. President, but I was waiting until it would be in order under the rule for consideration. It does not need to be printed. It is already in print. I will offer it now, and ask that it may lie upon the table.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to have the amendment read for information, if it be in order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not intend to ask to have it read, because it is in print and I think has been read by all Senators.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to have the amendment read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is, of course, not before the Senate. It is simply offered to lie upon the table when it may be in order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. To be taken up in its order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To be taken up in its order, and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] demands that it shall now be read. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Tennessee can read it as a part of his remarks that he commenced this afternoon if he desires to do so.

Mr. CARMACK. I will do that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the reading of the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I am a little regretful that in the discussion of this question to-night, or, rather, in rising for the purpose of having myself informed about it more than discussing it for the information of the Senate, I do not know precisely the shape in which the bill is now before the Senate; so if I make any blunder it may be attributed to the fact that I have not had an opportunity to ascertain.

I will refer again, Mr. President, to the incident or the interlude that occurred between the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. It is an object lesson, or at least it is a fact which has transpired in the Senate, that shows that this bill does not stand on the same footing with other legislation of Congress, but it is to have, and it is expected to have, and doubtless it is arranged to have, some peculiar advantages.

I take it, therefore, that it is a party measure, and that the Senator from Rhode Island has arranged with his conferees in the House that if this bill can get over there at any time to-morrow, perhaps in two hours' time from the moment that it strikes the door of the House it will be passed as it has passed the Senate—without amendment. There will be no opportunity afforded to the people's particular representatives, as they call themselves and as they are, in the House of Representatives to consider this measure on its merits.

In my estimation it is the most far-reaching and in that sense the greatest and the most dangerous measure connected with the finances of the country that has been before the Senate since I have been in this body. I see that the Senator from Rhode Island smiles at that proposition. Perhaps he is smiling at my want of knowledge of the situation in respect of finance or at the absurdity of my statement, I do not know which.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; I was not. I was supposing that the Senator from Alabama had for the moment forgotten the Panama Canal treaty.

Mr. MORGAN. That is not connected with finance, except the stealing part of it, which is in Paris, and we have no control over that. [Laughter.]

This measure, Mr. President, has had its incubation really within the last five or six days. We have been for ten weeks here deliberating upon a question that seemed to excite all of the abilities and all the strategic and tactical cunning of the great men of the Senate on the other side of the Chamber. We on this side of the Chamber have been quiet spectators, looking on to see what the battle of the giants would result in. It has turned out to be a battle of pigmies, instead of a battle of giants, and the defeated party is about as happy as the party that won, it seems to me. Neither side has lost anything; but one side in that controversy has gained a great deal.

They have shut out from the Senate of the United States, the great focal point of political power for some years to come and perhaps for an age, the right of representation which belongs naturally to that area of country and belongs rightfully also to the people who inhabit it—an area of the country that was covered by the provisions of the treaty that we made in 1853, having previously made one in 1850, in which we made a solemn pledge to the governor of Mexico and to the people of that great area of country that they should be admitted as States into the Union. Not being satisfied with that and not being satisfied also with Mr. Trist's credentials in regard to the making of the treaty called the Guadalupe-Hidalgo treaty, in 1849 or 1850 we sent Sevier, Clifford, and another gentleman down there for the purpose of introducing into the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo a provision in lieu of the tenth article, which provision was the same that was found in the treaty made with Napoleon Bonaparte, under which we acquired what is called the Louisiana purchase, which contained a very express provision, placed in that treaty by French sagacity and French foresight, for the purpose of compelling the United States to agree that the citizens in that country should not be wandering about like these poor Porto Ricans, without home or nativity or allegiance or anything of that sort, pariahs of that political part of the world, without anybody to own them or anybody to acknowledge them. So we transferred the Napoleon treaty into the treaty with Mexico, thereby making the obligation conspicuous, complete, and that was done at our instance.

Now, that obligation has been neglected. After ten weeks' debate it has been trampled under foot and dismissed as a thing of no consequence, and in the meantime there has been settled in favor of the New England States the balance of power in the Senate of the United States, which now amounts under their control to two-thirds of this body. You have 60 Senators. If you had a Vice-President to decide by a casting vote, you would have 61. You have the South and West in the place you want to hold them. You have determined that they shall not get up. You secured that by postponing indefinitely the statehood bill, destroying it, and making it impossible for the Democratic party or such allies as it may muster among the gentlemen of the Republican party who live in the West or Northwest or have interest in and feelings for that section of the country, in years and years to come—perhaps an age yet to come—even to approach the question of the restoration of the equilibrium between the sections.

Having done that, here comes another proposition to throw the financial power of the United States, every bit of it, all of it, in the same direction. You have mastered the subject of territory. You have stricken down the representation of these large and valuable areas in the Senate. You have gotten rid of that, and now you come forward with a proposition to unite all of the financial power of the United States, through the power of tax collection, whether it is internal revenue or tariff revenue, in the hands of a single man.

Mr. President, the method which has been adopted in this bill of transferring the power, the whole financial power, of the United States to the money centers of the East is limited to the action of corporations. There is no individual mentioned in this bill. There is no man, unless he is a member of a corporation, who can get any possible advantage under it. We have been hearing a great deal of trusts, and we all know that the combinations of corporations and the immunities from personal liability for debt in connection with corporations are the real cause of this calamitous condition which is described as a trust, imposed like a plague upon the security and prosperity of the country and the people.

These are arrogant combinations. What are they, after all? They are the mere creatures of the law. They have no existence except by statute. They are fictitious persons. They are allowed to accumulate wealth to any amount that the statute will allow; and when the statute puts a restriction upon one or two or three or four or five or ten of them, and they still want to increase their capital, they will make a combination together and will go to New Jersey, or they will go to West Virginia or to Delaware or some other place, and there the whole bunch of corporations, like a bunch of firecrackers, will be incorporated under a new corporation with an enormous amount of capital.

Mr. ELKINS. What is the objection to West Virginia?

Mr. MORGAN. I have understood that it is a very profitable place to which to go to get a corporation charter.

Mr. ELKINS. It is a very proper and correct place to which to go. The Senator, I hope, does not want to reflect upon West Virginia.

Mr. MORGAN. Not by any means. West Virginia is always able to take care of itself, and it never fails to do it when the opportunity is presented.

Mr. ELKINS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. But these trusts consist most largely to-day, in the greater number of cases, to say the least of it, in these combinations of bunches of corporations, which go to different States and get themselves incorporated into another corporation. It is a double-barreled concern.

So this corporation—I will say it is in New Jersey or in Delaware; I could not say it is in Alabama, because we do not tolerate such things with us—embodies all these different corporate interests into one mass, with one agent, and the corporators raise the corporation capital just as high as the State will give them an opportunity to do, and there is no limit upon the amount of capital stock they can put out.

These fictitious persons are exempt from all obligations for debts due from their respective corporations, except to the extent that obligations are imposed by the charter itself, and they rarely, I believe never, exceed the amount of the stock actually held in the corporation. So one of these corporations can go out on speculation and engage in enterprises of any magnitude or any description, create debts without restriction or limit, and when they come to wind up the creditors have to lose all that is to be lost, except the private obligation that is put upon a stockholder that he will pay the amount of money to the creditor that he put into the concern.

He may be rich as Crœsus. Crœsus did not compare in wealth with some gentlemen we have in the United States. But I do not want to call names, because it is now invidious and considered disrespectful to speak of a man in the United States as being rich. It seems to be a sort of a slam at him. So I will mention Crœsus's name. He has been dead a great many years, but he died very rich.

This man may be as rich as Crœsus. He may have a thousand dollars or a hundred thousand dollars of stock in a corporation that owes millions of dollars. He may have got the benefit of its earnings from year to year, with the increase in the value of his stock, with dividends, vast dividends, which may have been paid to him. But from some motive or design or accident the corporation may go under, it may become insolvent, and then his liability comes back and is settled by the amount of his original subscription to the stock of the company. He pockets all he got out of the people. He pays for the amount of his original stock. That is what the corporation law requires, and he goes scot free for the balance.

These fictitious persons, these creations of law, abound in all parts of the United States. If the number of corporations in the United States were known to the people, they would be absolutely astounded. It is nearly equal to the population in some parts of the country. The authors of this bill have picked certain corporations out of this vast swarm of artificial creatures, with these limited responsibilities, and they say that if you will take the bonds of corporations which have been in existence a certain length of time and have been paying at least 4 per cent dividend on their stock for ten years and put them in the hands of a national bank, the national bank may draw the amount of money represented by those bonds on their face. There is no limit in this bill to the amount of money which may be put into a national bank or with the national banks. There is no pro rata; there is no percentage; there is no distribution among the banks as to the respective amounts they may receive.

A bank out in the West or in the South may have a little capital of $25,000, and under this bill the Secretary of the Treasury can put a millon dollars in one of those banks, provided the bank can make arrangements with a railroad company which has been making money out of the people at the rate of 4 per cent per annum for ten years, and the Secretary of the Treasury can just pile in the money. What have we got? The proposed statute says we have a lien on the current assets of the bank for the repayment of that money. There is no limit at all.

Mr. President, that astounds me. I can not understand how a Senator can draw a bill of that kind and undertake to defend it. He must surely have supposed that nobody would ever discover it, for it is utterly indefensible that you can take a bank with $25,000 or $100,000 capital and that the Secretary of the Treasury can put into the vaults of that bank under this arrangement as much money as he chooses to put there.

Now, this bill repeals an act passed on the 3d day of June, 1864. It is an act that had 64 sections in it. It was an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency, secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and it provides for the circulation and redemption thereof." It was the great national-bank act, and the present bill before the Senate picks out the forty-second section of that act and amends it and changes it. At the time that act was passed this country was involved in the throes of a great civil war, an event to which I do not allude with the slightest degree of pleasure. At the same time it is my duty to do it in trying to ascertain the purposes of the legislation. What was intended by the passage of the forty-second section of the act of 1864? At that time General Lee and General Grant were wrestling for military victory and supremacy between Fredericksburg and Richmond, if I recollect history correctly, and at that time United States bonds were worth about 60 cents on the dollar for gold; not more than that.

It was very necessary to have a means of receiving the money due to the Government of the United States in various places and by various agents, because it did not always happen that the collectors of money, whether they were collectors of internal revenue or collectors of customs, could find their way to Washington City with safety, and it was necessary to have, therefore, in places where there were national banks, the opportunity of making deposits of public money, and the best security that was available at that time was the bonds of the United States. So the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to designate a national bank as a depository, and he was authorized to take bonds of the United States to the amount of the deposit placed with the national banks.

But the bonds themselves were not absolute security. They lacked about 40 per cent of being proper security for deposits, rated at the gold standard. There was a discount on the bonds of about that much. Therefore this language was put into that statute:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall require the association thus designated to give satisfactory security—

Now, the security must be satisfactory—

by the deposit of United States bonds and otherwise.

The United States bonds themselves might not be satisfactory security, for they were not the par of gold. If gold was collected by a customs-house officer or by an internal-revenue collector to the extent of a thousand dollars, and he had a thousand-dollar United States bond, that bond would fall about 40 per cent short of being good security for the thousand dollars in gold. So the section was made to read:

To give satisfactory security by the deposit of United States bonds and otherwise."

Not "or otherwise," but "and otherwise."

Mr. SPOONER. How do you construe it?

Mr. MORGAN. It does not admit of any construction. There are many things in the English language that do not admit of any construction.

Mr. ELKINS. Does the Senator understand that the words "and otherwise" mean any other securities than United States bonds?

Mr. MORGAN. In addition to them.

Mr. ELKINS. In addition to United States bonds?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; not "instead of" but "in addition to."

Mr. ELKINS. He must have some Government bonds.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; he is bound to have some Government bonds, and if they are not enough——

Mr. ELKINS. What would be the Senator's construction of this situation? Suppose a man took up $10,000 of Government bonds, could he take up also a million of State or railroad bonds?

Mr. MORGAN. The Secretary would have the discretion to require the deposit of other bonds in addition to the Government bonds.

Mr. ELKINS. When was the act passed?

Mr. MORGAN. In 1864; right in the midst of the war.

I was about to observe that that statute stood from 1864—nearly forty years—just in that shape, and nobody ever thought about altering it until the speculative idea struck the Senator from Rhode Island. It did not strike him first. It is a carom on him. It first struck the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Alabama is aware that in October or November of last year the Secretary decided that the words "and otherwise" meant that he could take other classes of securities in addition to Government bonds, and he did take certain county and municipal bonds. I should like the Senator to state whether he agrees with the Secretary.

Mr. MORGAN. No; and nobody else does. Nobody agrees with him who can read the English language.

Mr. ALDRICH. What do the words "and otherwise" mean?

Mr. MORGAN. They mean simply that the Secretary of the Treasury could require additional security if he was not satisfied with United States bonds as security for deposits when the bonds were 40 per cent below par. It is as plain as a flagstaff.

Mr. ALDRICH. If he took them at 40 or 50 per cent, that would not be "and otherwise."

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know whether it would or not.

Mr. ALDRICH. It strikes me not.

Mr. MORGAN. At all events he had the right to require additional security. Unquestionably he had, for it says, "by the deposit of United States bonds and otherwise," not "or otherwise."

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from West Virginia asked a pertinent question. Suppose a bank deposits $10,000 of Government bonds and $100,000 of city bonds, does that answer the requirement of the law?

Mr. ELKINS. That is the question.

Mr. MORGAN. If the United States bonds deposited are security for the amount deposited in the bank, then it is legal.

Mr. ELKINS. If the United States bonds are equal to the money deposited, they would not need any city or other bonds.

Mr. MORGAN. Why not, when United States bonds were 40 per cent below par?

Mr. ELKINS. That was forty years ago. We are dealing with the present and are not forty years behind.

Mr. MORGAN. We will get up to date presently. I want to get the reasons of this act. I want to see why they put in the words "and otherwise." It is perfectly plain, Mr. President.

I was in hopes that it would never happen to me that I would find it necessary on the floor of the Senate to criticise the action of the Secretary of the Treasury on this subject, but the matter has come up to-night.

The Secretary of the Treasury found the Wall street brokers and the Wall street gamblers in a tight place, and as all Secretaries of the Treasury, including Mr. Carlisle, have found it necessary from time to time to do, whenever those gentlemen get into trouble, all the powers of the United States were drawn on to help them out, as is always alleged, to avoid a panic. They got the panic. That was the situation. They were the sailors on the ship. If the sailors get the panic, the ship is mighty apt to turn over or sink in a storm.

So the Secretary of the Treasury found that the market for money in New York was getting a little precarious, a little dangerous. They had been overworking, overspeculating, overtrading, and everybody in the world knew it. It became a very serious question as to whether they could make the ends meet. For a solution of the difficulty a liquidation was called for.

Why, Mr. President, a liquidation in New York last fall was as dangerous a thing as a bubonic plague and to be avoided by every possible remedy that was in the reach of human beings.

I rather applauded the generosity of the Secretary of the Treasury, and what we sometimes call the patriotism, but it is only a mock patriotism, for there is no sincere patriotism that violates the law of the land. I admired the generosity of the Secretary of the Treasury in flying to the relief of those people and in opening a congestion that might have produced a panic sufficient to wipe perhaps five or eight thousand of them out of financial existence and bury them beneath the ashes of bankruptcy. I rather sympathized with him in that. But how very unjust it was, what an awful breach of duty it was, that a man should take the conjunction "and," for the sake of carrying a point, and transfer it to the disjunctive conjunction "or" in a statute. "Or other securities in place of bonds," not "and other securities to supplement bonds."

There the Government of the United States and the tax-paying people of this country were robbed of their right, by a grammatical construction of a statute by a Secretary of the Treasury, and he never dared and nobody else has ever dared to carry that before any court of judicature. They would know where they would land when they got to a court. They would know that no court in this country would have the cheek to give the construction to that statute which was put upon it by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, this is a healing act that I am discussing to-night. It is intended to heal that very breach of the law, to carry it out, and to make it entirely possible that hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury can do just as he pleases about this business. And you have given him license enough here; I do not care if he is as honest as Paul, you give license enough to that man even by a mistake or by an accident, a misjudgment, to ruin this country.

How much money does the bill carry into the depositaries of the United States guaranteed by these corporation stocks that I have been talking about? How much is it? Not less than $600,000,000 a year, unless it is intercepted by the Secretary of the Treasury and thrown into the Treasury of the United States instead of going there, for these men have the right to receive the public money up to the standard prescribed to them as depositaries, and there is no standard prescribed in this act whatever. There is no upward limit. There is no difficulty in construing this remedial or this healing act so as to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to receive $500,000,000 a year and transfer it into the hands of these banks. There is no limit in it.

This is a new act. It supplements and it repeals the act of 1864 for the reason that they can not stand together. You can not reach them together.

All national-bank associations designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be depositories of public money, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary.

That is the end of it and that is the beginning of it and that is the whole of it. There is nothing else to it, as our friends say up in the northeast.

Now the statute is revised and amended so as to read as follows: Therefore it is plain that it not only repeals but supplants the other statute. They are not to be construed in pari materia. They are to be construed as if this was the only law on the statute books, and it is the only law on the statute books regulating the liability of these depositories. This is all of it, and there is no limit whatever to the deposit.

What kind of money can go there? Money from the sale of public property, lands, personal property, or any other kind. Money collected on the judgments of courts by marshals of the United States. Money received by even postmasters, unless the Postmaster-General orders it to be sent elsewhere. All moneys collected by the internal-revenue collector, I believe considerably larger—very much larger—than all the sums collected by the collector of customs, and all the moneys collected by custom-house officers. There is no dollar reserved except such as the Secretary of the Treasury may choose to order out of the custody of these people.

There is no penalty prescribed upon a depository for the abuse of his trust. You can not impose a penalty upon a man for using money that he has borrowed in his own way. You change the deposit by this act entirely, in its whole character, from a deposit in trust for safe-keeping to a deposit called a deposit, a loan, for interest, a fixed interest 1½ per cent. You change the whole of it. The law of 1864 is absolutely repealed, and it is changed from a deposit as it was made under that law to a loan at 1½ per cent.

Not only is it a loan, but you take a lien, a lien by law, a lien operative through the statute upon the current assets of the bank for the reimbursement of the loan. Under the act of 1857 that deposit was required to be ready to answer the call of the Government. They might call for it at any time. There was no fixed time named, no fixed conditions upon which they could be made. It was a mere call for the money, and if it was not forthcoming I will read you what the statute says about it. The statute was enacted in March, 1857. It is section 5489 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and it reads as follows:

SEC. 5489. If the Treasurer of the United States, or any assistant treasurer, or any public depositary, fails safely to keep all moneys deposited by any disbursing officer or disbursing agent, as well as all moneys deposited by any receiver, collector, or other person having moneys of the United States, he shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement of the moneys not so safely kept, and shall be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than ten years, and fined in a sum equal to the amount of money so embezzled. [See sec. 3639.]

Now you change that from a deposit to a loan and that statute does not affect him. You turn him loose and retain nothing for your lien except upon the current assets of the bank. I should like to have the Senator from Rhode Island tell me what are the current assets of the bank.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not agree at all with the construction which the Senator is putting upon this act, of course.

Mr. MORGAN. I am asking now what the current assets of the bank are?

Mr. ALDRICH. Whatever they may be. It is difficult to specify them.

Mr. MORGAN. What description of property is the current assets of the bank?

Mr. ALDRICH. All the property belonging to the bank.

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, not its real estate. That is not current assets.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. Not its bonds put up to secure circulation. That is not current assets. That is assets in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. All the property which they have would be assets of the bank.

Mr. MORGAN. Current assets? What is the use of putting "current" in there?

Mr. ALDRICH. It was put in at the suggestion of some Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. But that Senator may not——

Mr. ALDRICH. I explained at the time why it was put in.

Mr. MORGAN. That Senator may not be as high authority in finance as Lord Bacon was on the laws of England. Let us have a reason for it, so that we can understand it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I stated the reason at the time. Originally the Senator from Virginia prepared this amendment, and as originally prepared it established a lien upon the assets of the bank for the security of the deposits. The question was raised whether that permitted a bank in its current business to dispose of one class of assets over another, and it was thought best by the Senator from Virginia to change the phraseology so that the assets at the time the lien was to be enforced should be held for the debt of the United States or the deficiency after the security was sold.

Mr. MORGAN. Then this act, if I rightly understand the Senator from Rhode Island, means that if a depository receives a million dollars to-day, the Government has got for security for that million dollars not the assets that it had in hand, but those that it might thereafter accumulate.

Mr. ALDRICH. After the deficiency, undoubtedly. If the bank had a million dollars deposited for which it had deposited in the Treasury of the United States a million dollars of 2 per cent bonds or 4 per cent bonds, and those bonds should be sold and there was a deficiency, the deficiency would become a lien upon the current assets of the bank at the time.

Mr. MORGAN. At and after the time of the deposit?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; not at the time of the deposit, but at the time the lien was enforced.

Mr. MORGAN. When is that to be?

Mr. ALDRICH. The bank would want to do business in the meantime. Otherwise the provision of the act might close the bank.

Mr. MORGAN. The Government of the United States in regard to this great revenue that its people pay would be in a beautiful fix! It would have to go into a lawsuit to get the money out of the hands of the receiver, and to trust to its rights to current assets in order to condemn them to the satisfaction of the debt.

Mr. President, I would as soon have a note of a pigeon roost or a wild-cat bank. It is all a shinplaster transaction. That is all you can make out of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Alabama is aware that the Government has now no lien at all upon the assets of a bank any more than any other creditor.

Mr. MORGAN. I knew that if there was anything the Government could take off the banks in the way of lien or embarrassment, it would do so. It never hesitates to put embarrassments and liens and prohibitions upon the people; but this pet class of corporations, that is now run up to the number, I think, of 5,500, has always had the favor and indulgence of the Government.

And here is the Senator from Rhode Island, who was very aptly described here the other evening as a king of finance in the United States. He is an uncrowned king. I do not see any crown on his head. But he is a king of finance, and he says that the Government of the United States has got no lien upon the assets of the bank for anything.

Mr. ALDRICH. For its deposits; and I am trying to find out whether the Senator from Alabama now objects to a lien being established. I would be glad if he would state whether he thinks that is an improvement on the existing law.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think it is necessary. I have got lately to objecting to everything that is not absolutely necessary. There are so many new schemes started up that have dead falls and pitfalls that I want to escape the whole of them. A lien on the current assets of the bank! Well, that is better than a lien on a last year's bird's nest, and it may be better than a lien on a next year's bird's nest, but it seems to me that they are pretty much of the same character.

They are trifling excuses for liens, for if the Government of the United States has lost its power to put the depositary in the penitentiary for not paying that money, pressing in answer its calls, and must go to a lien upon the current assets of the bank and work out that lien, I can not conceive that the Government could be robbed any more effectually or that it could be paralyzed with greater certainty than that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Which would he consider the better security if he were the party making the deposit, the right to shut the cashier up as an embezzler or a lien upon the assets of the bank? That is, supposing the Senator was right in his contention, to which I do not agree.

Mr. MORGAN. The right to shut up a cashier, that could be enforced by United States court officers, I would have considered the best lien the Government of the United States could have, the security it could have for the honesty of its administration. That is what I think about it.

Now, let us work out a case. Here is $100,000 deposited in a little $25,000 bank in my State, and the bank lends it out. I will put it $100,000 loaned to a bank of $25,000 capital in Alabama, and when the Government comes to call for its money the banker defaults. You look at the statute and see what can be done with that man who does not observe his contracts and his statutory obligations and duties, and you find that you can not do anything, because you have excepted him from this provision of law. That is wiped out. What, then, have you got? You have got a lien on the current assets of the bank.

Now, let us see what the current assets of the bank are. First of all, the bonds deposited by the bank as security for the deposits that might be put in its vaults do not belong to the bank. They are all required by this act to belong to the bank. The bank may borrow the bonds. They may make an arrangement with some railroad company, some county, or some city, or some State to borrow the bonds and put them up, report them to the Treasurer of the United States as bonds to guarantee deposits that may come from tax collectors into the bank vaults.

The bank does not own them. The act does not require the bank to own them. Now, ought not this act to require a bank to be the proprietor of these bonds? When you come to look at the current assets of the bank, instead of going upon these bonds, you must go and fish out the current assets according to the fine definition given by the Senator from Rhode Island, if you can understand it. I can not understand it.

Now, Mr. President, you have abandoned this penal statute and thrown that out of gear entirely by converting this deposit into a loan, for you can not apply that statute to a man who borrows money and who is paying interest upon it. To a depositary who pays no interest to the Government and keeps it in answer to demands of the Government you can apply it. Having abandoned that, gotten rid of it, then we turn to realize out of the bank assets what we can.

Well, I will suppose that this money is loaned to a county in Missouri that I know of, and I might with equal aptness suppose that it was issued upon the county bonds of the county of Chambers, in Alabama, that I know all about. Here is a county bond. They are deposited with this bank. They amount to $100,000, and the county has complied with all of its obligations prescribed in its statute literally for the time required, so that the county is rectus in curia as to being a safe statutory security. The county is all right. You start with your proceeding and the first thing you do is to sue the county upon the bonds.

If you have as much success as was had against some gentlemen in Alabama, and particularly against a county in Missouri, you would be a long time getting your money. It has been twenty years in Missouri, in a county there, since a judgment was rendered against the county, and the county was ordered to levy a tax upon the people in order to realize the money to pay that judgment of the district or the circuit court of the United States. As fast as a mandamus would come to the judge he would resign and they would elect another, and when a mandamus reached him he would resign.

After a while the plaintiff got a decision made that they could not resign so as to escape an obligation; that they were liable for it whether they resigned or whether they did not; and there is a county jail in Missouri now that for twenty-one years has been the private residence, the dungeon, or the lockup or keep of the probate judges of the county. They put them in jail. A man is elected to the county judgeship, goes to jail, serves a term there, and then they send him to the legislature, and the first thing we may know we will have a lot of them here in Congress.

Now, I have been watching this proceeding. The gentleman who owns this judgment lives in this city, and he makes visits to Missouri for the purpose of locking up county judges. Perhaps he will find out some of these times that on account of rheumatics, or in some other way, he will get so sick he can not stand it and require the county to pay.

Now, that is a fine pursuit we are making when we bring our suit upon the county bonds. The county puts in every defense it knows how, and the Treasury of the United States is bereft of its gold in order to get this kind of obligation to be enforced as a current security of that bank under this act.

I have said that this was a bill for the benefit of corporations. There is nobody else mentioned in it. Nobody else has got any right or privileges under it at all. There is a little difference between the 1½ per cent interest that the bank has to pay and the 6, 8, 10, 15, or 20 per cent that they make out of the people by making short loans and doubling up interest, discount, and premium. I know how it runs, because I have had to undergo it. Look at the contrast. When did we ever give to a private citizen of the United States such privileges as that under the law?

Why, the banking act, Mr. President, from the time of its first enactment down to this day has contained a provision that a bank shall not loan its money on a mortgage of real estate. I have known men who had to go and borrow money in other States upon the credit of themselves and their friends who had plantations unincumbered worth $100,000, and they wanted only a few hundred dollars, five hundred dollars or a thousand dollars. There is not a farmer in the United States to-day who can go and mortgage the best piece of land he has got in the world to a national bank and get a dollar on it. The banks are prohibited from letting him have any.

Here we stand. Here is a bill that speaks of nobody but corporations. It gives them enormous advantages, unheard of advantages, and the farmers through the country can not get a penny out of one of those banks upon a guaranty of the best piece of real estate in the country.

Who has done that, Mr. President? Not this Democratic party that I happen to belong to, but that party of princes and headsmen and monopolists and contrivers of new laws to rob the people. The great financial kings are the men who get the profits. The farmer has to earn the money to pay it.

How did we get this vast amount of money locked up in the Treasury that we are now trying to find some way to get rid of—not back into the hands of the people who paid it, but into the hands of the corporations? How did it happen to be there? Senators have explained that. It is unnecessary for me to do more than to allude to the subject, because it is a subject that is pretty nearly as well known as the family Bible or Webster's spelling book in every house in this country.

How did it get there? By excessive taxation of the laboring people of this land, the producing people of this land, you have housed up this vast sum of money until you are afraid that we will appeal to it, point out your golden god that you have got in your Treasury, and say to the people, "Do you still want to contribute to him?" You want to hide him. You want to divide him up and send him out amongst the people, but never amongst the people themselves, but into the hands of the corporations. That is where we are. That is what we are doing here to-night.

I do not believe in the power of the United States Government to lend its money to corporations or to the people either. I believe that the Government of the United States ought to have the money necessary for its expenses and pay them out in the current course of business, leaving as far as it is possible to do no surplus in the Treasury. A surplus in the Treasury poisons the whole country. Everybody is after it.

I received 12 telegrams last night and my colleague in the Senate received 16 from a single town, urging us to stand by and force an appropriation of $40,000 into the omnibus public building bill. It passed here and I suppose it has passed the other House. People are begging for a little of this money in public conveniences for themselves, and demanding that their Senators shall go on watch and quit the balance of their duties in order that they may see that they are justly dealt with in respect of $40,000.

This shows, Mr. President, not a desire to rob on the part of these people, but a desire to have a little justice done to them. I could not get it; I can not get it; I never will get it, at least not from a Republican Congress.

But if one of these corporations comes and says, "Here, we know what we are doing; we belong to the great and exclusive class of this country; we are fictitious persons who comprise the corporation, and we want you to help us," of course we will help you. We will help you in the tax on sugar. We will help you by refusing to repress the trusts. We will help you any way in the world that we can. We will take the money of the people paid in taxation and hand it out to you at 1½ per cent interest during the year, and you can lend it to these same people at from 6 to 20 per cent and make all the money you please out of it.

They are not going to be protected. It is true that they do not demand it much. They are men who do not like to beg for their rights, and because they do not beg for them or buy them they do not get them.

They call this a safe bill—very safe. Some of the States have not repudiated within ten years, and they are entitled to put in their bonds.

Suppose they repudiated twenty years ago and have not had credit enough to borrow anything since that time. How would it be then? If they have not repudiated in ten years, though twenty years ago they had repudiated, and since then, not having credit enough to borrow any money, they have not made any debts or issued any bonds, can they put them in?

Why, Mr. President, this is a hothouse for the creation of bonds. Of course, if that statute goes on the statute books a very large part of the money that goes into these depositories will never come back. It will be loaned out for bonds and securities of that kind which are applicable to the act, and after that they will commence breaking, and there will be nothing collected.

I recollect in 1842 or 1843 in my own State, when we had a State-bank system there, the members of the legislature got very fond of their constituents, and they concluded to loan out the large surplus in the banks. After a while they struck the capital in the banks with the same enthusiasm, and they loaned it on promissory notes with two indorsers, certified by two members of the legislature of the county which they represented.

In that way they scattered the money all through the State, and for three years we did not collect a dollar of taxes. But the day of liquidation came around after a while, and all of this vast multitude of people turned out to be most of them insolvent. We could not collect any money at all.

What did we have to do? Stop the business, wind up the banks, get all of the assets of the banks that we could, and permit no bank from that time to issue a dollar of currency. It cost our people millions and millions of dollars just because we broke away from the foundation principles of banking and went to loan the money among the people.

Now, what else is this but lending money to corporations? Let some gentleman define, if he can, that when a depositary, so called, receives from the tax gatherer or the custom-house officer a certain amount of money of the Government, secured by the pledge of certain bonds and stocks which are described in this act, he shall have that money as a loan at 1½ per cent interest, subject to call, very true, but when is the call to take place?

When that situation is created by this act and by the transaction, then that is no more nor less than the old act of Alabama repeated—loaning money to the people upon the indorsement of promissory notes. It destroyed the bank system of Alabama and came very near destroying the credit of the State. It cost us thousands and thousands and millions of dollars by a departure from the right duty and purpose of government. There is no government under the United States that can have any just right to lend out money collected from the people by taxation for government purposes into the hands of anybody.

There is not a State in the Union that has not got statutes making it a penitentiary offense, calling it the crime of embezzlement, for any fiduciary of the Government holding the custody of public funds, to lend them to anybody or upon any security whatever; the mere fact of making the loan proves the offense of embezzlement, without reference to the man's bad intention or good intention.

Every State in the Union has got these acts, and they are here now in respect of money of the form of embezzlement that is prohibited by the laws of the United States. It is against the theory and principles of all good government that they should be permitted to collect money by taxation from the people and then go and lend it out to their friends.

Mr. President, put this act into operation and here will come two banks in a heated political campaign. They have each got $500,000 of capital; they are in a populous and important county in a pivotal State; one of them is headed by a Democrat and the other is headed by a Republican, and we have got either a Democratic or a Republican Secretary of the Treasury. Both those banks apply to become depositaries of the public moneys of the United States on giving the securities which are provided for in this act.

The Secretary of the Treasury, whether he is the present Secretary or a future Secretary, or whether he is a Democrat or whether he is a Republican, asks the question, "Does this gentleman coincide with the politics of the powers that be? Does he belong to those who are dominant in the affairs of the Government at this special moment of time?" "No; he does not." "Does the other gentleman belong to this party of which I am a member?" "Yes." He gets the money. Who can restrain the Secretary of the Treasury from the exercise of that kind of power?

What check is there in the proposed law against that? What is that but embezzlement? We must say that nobody is guilty of embezzlement in connection with this act in any form in which is carried on the transaction. From the Secretary of the Treasury down, it may all be done by arrangement; yes, by political arrangement, for political reasons, and there is no penalty; there is no prohibition.

Mr. President, I shall close what I have to say, having spoken much longer than I expected, by saying that this is the most dangerous, the most invidious, the most unnecessary, and the most unjustifiable bill that I have ever spoken to on this floor.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration——

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope we shall have the regular order.

Mr. STEWART. Let us have the regular order and have a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MASON in the chair). The Senator from Rhode Island demands the regular order. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, I do not know whether I exactly caught what was said by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] when I made the request a while ago for unanimous consent to consider the bill to which I then referred; but I understood the Senator to say that further on he would probably consent to it. I now renew my request to lay aside temporarily the regular order and to take up the bill (S. 6225) in aid of the common schools in Mississippi.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have just been obliged to refuse a similar request of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. Later on, after the votes have been taken on this bill, I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Later on, after the votes on this bill have been taken?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; after the vote on the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (S. 7301) to further provide for the safe-keeping of public money, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment; the pending question being on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. I desire to say a few words in relation to that bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. I think this is a bill which requires very serious consideration, referring, as it does, to banking and the deposit of public moneys in national banks.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask the Senator from Mississippi if he will please yield to me for a moment.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion, so that we may have a brief executive session.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope neither motion will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ELKINS. Will the Senator withhold that motion for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho that the Senate do now adjourn. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. DUBOIS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BEVERIDGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and so I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS]. I was requested by him to state that he has been called home by reason of a death in his immediate family. I am advised that I may transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], so that I may vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]; but I will take the liberty of transferring that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]; but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], and vote "nay."

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. My colleague [Mr. MONEY], by an arrangement with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have taken the liberty of transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. DIETRICH] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCCUMBER (after having voted in the negative). I understand that the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] to whom I transferred my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] has a regular pair, and so I will withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bailey,	Carmack,	Morgan,	Teller,
Bate,	Cockrell,	Patterson,	Tillman,
Berry,	McEnery,	Rawlins,	Turner.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16910) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 6895) to authorize the promotion of Maj. William Crawford Gorgas, surgeon in the Army of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 7361) for the relief of C. W. Colehoar; and

A bill (H. R. 16138) granting the right of way to Kenova and Big Sandy Railroad Company through the Government lands at Lock No. 2, Big Sandy River, and at Lock No. 3, Big Sandy River, both in Wayne County, W. Va.

SAFE-KEEPING OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 7301) to further provide for the safe-keeping of public money, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, I have not had time to give to this bill all the consideration that I feel it deserves, but I have some objections to the bill which I will take the liberty of presenting to the Senate in my stammering way.

The greatest objection that I have to this bill is that it will encourage the unnecessary taxation of the people. I heard the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] say that he hoped there would be a reduction of the taxes. I was curious at the time, and I have been curious since, to know upon what the hope of the Senator from Texas was based.

Mr. BAILEY. I will enlighten the Senator from Mississippi, if he will permit me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. If the Senator desires, I am perfectly willing to hear from him.

Mr. BAILEY. It is based upon the hope that the Democratic party will at some time again obtain control of this Government.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. We have here in the administration of the Government of the United States a party that has had unlimited control of it for a considerable while. That party has not kept its promises to the people of this country, its platforms have been disregarded here; its own members in this Senate being witnesses. That proclamation which it made to the people of the country, in which it said that it proposed if power was again given to it to admit the Territories to statehood, was ignored.

Four years afterwards when that party again appealed to the people to recommit the power and the administration of the Government to their hands they made the same declaration. That has not only been faithlessly ignored, but the party in power, the dominant party in this Senate, spent ten or eleven weeks in debate—I will not say for the purpose of preventing a vote because, that might be considered discourteous, but the result of that debate, which I do not see threw any light upon the question, was that no vote was had.

The statehood bill has been for some time doomed to death—not only to defeat, but to death—and probably will not be revived again so long as the party that is now in power controls the administration of the Government. That party has made a number of pledges and has kept none of them.

That is the party that stands for trusts and against the great masses of the people of the country; that is the party that votes down, when it is presented to this Senate, a bill which has received the consideration of the committee of the House of Representatives and the indorsement of the House of Representatives, and which has received the favorable consideration of the committee of the Senate, that it is proposed shall give some measure of relief to the people of the country against the trusts, and yet when there is a proposition squarely and fairly made to this Senate to take up that bill in preference to a bill which I believe ought to be entitled "A bill to fasten the grasp of the bank trust upon the people of the country," the motion is defeated.

So that the Senator from Texas is a great deal more credulous than I am in indulging the hope that there will be any reduction of taxes. I am sure if the Democratic party, the party of which he and I are both members, has again committed to it the administration of the Government of the United States, his hope that taxes will be reduced will be well founded; but the trouble about it is that the Senator is supporting a bill which, in my judgment—of course it is not his judgment, because he is conscientious in his support of the bill—but in my judgment is calculated to postpone the day when the people of this country will again commit to the Democratic party the administration of their Government.

As I understand this bill and as it appears to me it is not a bill to give more money to the people of the United States. It will not, if my judgment is not at fault, give any money to the people of the United States. It takes out of the pockets of the people of the United States their money and practically gives it to the banks of the country—and not all the banks, but the favored banks of the country. How is it proposed to give this money to the people? How is it proposed to put it in circulation?

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me to ask him a question right there? I am sure he does not want to misstate my position.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Certainly not.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator states in one breath that I am supporting the bill, and in the next breath he states that it takes out of the pockets of the people this money.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. That is my idea of it.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator can show me a line of this bill that levies any kind of a tax upon the American people, or that takes one dollar out of their pockets, then I will confess so far I have erred in my advocacy of it. I have never yet in my brief public service supported a bill that laid an unnecessary tax upon the American people. I will not support this bill if the distinguished Senator can show me a line in it that lays a burden of one penny's taxation on the people.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. If the Senator will rest himself in patience, that is just exactly what I was proposing to do. It is not one line, but it is the effect of the entire bill, and it can have no other effect. The effect of the bill is to take from the people the amount of money that will be paid into the banks. It is not going to stop taxation.

You are not going to stop taxation by loaning this money to the banks, which, in effect—as I intend to show, if I am able to make myself intelligible to the Senate, before I shall have concluded—is the donation of this amount of money to the banks, and the only return that we may hope to get will be the small amount of interest that is exacted. There is nothing in the bill that prohibits the Secretary of the Treasury loaning the money to one bank at one rate of interest and charging another bank a different rate of interest.

I have an amendment which I propose to offer at the proper time, which I had hoped to get an opportunity to present to the Senate last Saturday. If that amendment shall be adopted it will provide that the same rate of interest shall be charged all the banks who are made depositories of this money, and that the rate of interest shall be equal and uniform throughout the United States.

Now, there is not any particular line in the bill that can have any particular effect, but the effect is drawn from the entire bill. For instance, as I caught the other day from the Senator from Colorado, there is a certain fund that has in it—I did not catch the name of the fund—$300,820,725; another fund $142,903,773, making $443,724,498.

Suppose you take three hundred millions of that money and put it into banks. You loan it to the banks. The banks loan it to the people. A national banker comes from New York. He takes to the Secretary of the Treasury $10,000,000 in Government bonds, bearing 4 per cent interest, and deposits them there; and it is an advantage to him to have them deposited there, because they are safer there than anywhere else. He draws on the $10,000,000 of bonds 4 per cent interest.

The Secretary of the Treasury loans him $10,000,000 at 1½ per cent interest. He loans the money out at 6 per cent. It goes into the channels of trade and commerce, wherever his business extends. He is receiving on his bonds and on the money he has loaned 10 per cent interest. He is paying 1½ per cent on $10,000,000.

Now, when he borrows that money from the Government, it is never expected by him that it will be returned, for the reason that it is expected that the Government will levy a tax sufficient not to fall behind in its revenues, not to make its disbursements greater than its receipts, and that there will continually, from day to day, be collected from the people of the United States more money than will be disbursed. But this man pays out 1½ per cent interest, and he collects 10 per cent interest. For eight and a half of that he gives nothing. The business of the country is predicated upon that money, which is loaned. As I said, it goes into the channels of trade in every section where his business is conducted.

After a while the Secretary of the Treasury proposes to nudge him up a little, and he says to him "It is about time this money was called in. We have a provision of law that this money is subject to call. It can be collected any day in the world that we desire to collect it, and we want you to pay this money." The banker says to the Secretary of the Treasury "Have you not money abundant in the Treasury?" "Yes." "Do you need the money to run the expenses of the Government?" "No." "Then why call it in? I have only ten millions of it;" or maybe a hundred millions of it, because I am told there are business concerns in this country that have millions—not only millions, but many hundreds of millions—of dollars in bonds.

The banker says "This money is loaned out all over the country. If I go to my debtors and ask them to pay me back the money they have borrowed from me it will cause a panic. You can not afford to have a panic. No good can result to the people of the country from a panic. Great disaster will come to all business arrangements in the country. It will not do to compel me to pay this money. You are not going to compel me to pay it unless you are going to compel all the depositories of the Government to replace what they have borrowed." That will be a potent argument to the Secretary of the Treasury.

It goes on from month to month, from year to year, from decade to decade, and these men never do expect to pay it back. There is no necessity for paying it. The Government is all the time collecting more money than it needs for the economical administration of its affairs, and there is no necessity for repaying this money. These people know when they borrow that they are not expected to return it.

Now, then, you have to levy taxes to replace it. The Government does not intend to stop its collections. The Government does not intend that its receipts shall fall below its disbursements. So you will be taxing the people to replace the money which you have practically given to the banks.

Senators may answer that with a smile. It can not be answered, I apprehend, in any other way. This bill was not brought in here until near the close of the session. It was not brought in here in time to allow reasonable and necessary debate on it. I suppose Senators will supply the necessity of debate by laughter. But I ask Senators in all seriousness and in all consciousness if it is not a fact that when this money is loaned out they can not point out any way whereby it is ever expected to be returned?

It is not an answer to it to say there is a provision in the bill for its return to the Treasury whenever the Secretary shall demand it. It is not expected that the Secretary will demand it. The same necessity that exists for depositing the money with the bankers will exist for leaving it there as long as there is money in the Treasury to pay the expenses of the Government.

Now, I ask if there is a necessity to deposit this money in the banks as a loan or a deposit or whatever you may call it (because you are loaning it at a very cheap rate of interest when you are loaning it at 1½ per cent, and paying the banker 4 per cent on the bonds that he deposits as security for the loan; on some 2 per cent, on others 3; on some 4 and on others 4½ per cent) what produces that necessity?

Senators tell me that it is necessary to loan it out in order that the money may be put in circulation, and that we want more money. The very party that is advocating the putting out of this money in order to get more money in circulation is the party which has been trying to contract the currency of the country by all legislation possible for lo these many years.

If it is necessary to loan out the money in order to put it in circulation, and if it is necessary to enact a law to do that, will not the same necessity exist for the money to remain in circulation when there is a proposition to return it to the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. TILLMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. I yield to both Senators.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Mississippi says that the party in power has been trying to contract the currency all the time in recent years. I should like to have him specify a little about the time and place and circumstances, and when and how.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. If the Senator does not know that that is a fact, then it would take weeks and years to specify sufficiently to impress it upon his mind.

Mr. ALDRICH. It not only is not the fact, but it is the direct opposite of what is the fact. The only legislation in relation to currency in the last twenty-five years has been in the direction of expansion. There never has been any contraction of the currency within that time.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. I will leave it to the Senators who hear us and to the reading public who read the debate to say whether that be so or not.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me?

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] says that one of the reasons for opposing this bill is that the very condition which necessitates the deposit of money will prevent its withdrawal. If I believed that, I would follow him and oppose it.

But I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that this money could be withdrawn from the banks, and, under what I would consider a wise administration of Government, it would be withdrawn from the banks without ever locking it up in the vaults of the Treasury. For instance, according to his view and mine, there is none too much money now in the country.

Our party, coming into power, would undoubtedly adopt every means to avoid a contraction of the present volume. Given the power to deal with this question, it would simply reduce taxes, and, without taking this money from the banks and locking it up in the vaults of the Treasury, and thus withdrawing it from the channels of trade, it would simply pay it out through the banks to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government, if it were needed for that purpose, and if it were not needed to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government, then to meet the extraordinary expenses occasioned, as I should hope, by a redemption of the bonds of the Government, even though they had to be redeemed at a premium.

I can not conceive of a condition under which the party that sought to avoid the accumulation of a surplus and to dispose of it would ever withdraw this money and lock it up in the vaults of the Treasury. It could easily keep it in the channels of circulation by reducing the deposit in the banks by drafts on it in the usual course of business. Now, if that were done, the Senator will concur with me, will he not, that the surplus could be disposed of without producing the menace of a panic? [A pause.] I ask the Senator whether he agrees with me?

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. I will answer the Senator when he gets through.

Mr. BAILEY. I wanted to see if we agreed as we proceeded, because, unless we agree, it is hardly worth while to proceed with the discussion, and, of course, if the Senator does not choose to meet the questions as we progress, I think it would be polite in me to wait until he finishes and then make such reply as I can.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. I will say to the Senator from Texas that the question, according to my understanding of it, does not admit of a yes or no answer, and for that reason I wish to wait and explain it when I make my answer to him.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. When the Senator from Texas gets through. I want to say to the Senator from Texas that I do not mean any discourtesy by that.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course not.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. I do not mean to avoid answering any position taken by the Senator from Texas, but, according to my conception of this matter, I can not answer by a yes or no answer. For that reason I will wait to hear his position, and then I will explain my position on it.

Mr. BAILEY. I was going to reduce the issue between the Senator and myself to an absolute agreement on the facts or——

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. I should be glad to agree with the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. While I am on my feet I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi, with his permission——

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. To the fact that the statement has been made on this side of the Chamber, and repeated perhaps a dozen times, that this is a novel departure in the financial or fiscal operations of the Government. I myself prefer to call it fiscal, because I do not think it involves the financial system of the country. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi, and the other Senators who maintain that this is a perpetual loan, that if they will take the law as it stands upon the statute book to-day and cut out the mere exception of about six or seven words——

Mr. ALDRICH. Three words.

Mr. BAILEY. Taking out of the present law the exception of customs receipts, they would have the law as it is in this bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Three words.

Mr. BAILEY. I think it is a little more than three words. "Except receipts from customs"—four words.

Mr. ALDRICH. Four words; that is right.

Mr. BAILEY. If you take out those four words you would have the law as it stands to-day in this new bill, except the new bill further extends the kinds of securities which may be deposited.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. I will yield to the Senator from South Carolina in a moment.

Now, it seemed to me that we did have a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate, and we partially had a Democratic President at one time, and yet there was no proposition to repeal this law, which has stood there for many years. Nobody has heretofore contended that we were making a perpetual loan to the banks. But under the new bill, which will never become a law—and, by the way, with the Senator's permission, if he will indulge me for a moment, I want to say to the author and finisher of this bill that he might as well withdraw it.

There is no more chance for it to pass this body at the present session than there is for the statehood bill to rise out of its narrow grave and become instinct with life. You will have nobody to blame but yourself. For fourteen weeks you stood here and filibustered against a bill which accorded to a brave and capable people the right of self-government; and now, when gentlemen on this side, mistakenly as I think, retaliate by filibustering against your fiscal measure, it comes with bad grace from you to complain.

Mr. President, I want here and now to record a prophecy. It is not my wish, it is simply my prediction, that unless the practice of filibustering against every bill to which some Senators object is discontinued, the American people will compel the United States Senate to change its rules. That is a consummation which most of us devoutly wish to avoid.

American intelligence believes that the majority ought to rule, and under given limitations I believe it, too. I believe the right to filibuster ought to be reserved for a great occasion and a vital question, a kind of reserved right in this the greatest legislative body in the world. If it be invoked on every occasion, slight as well as great, and to defeat any measure, unimportant as well as vital, American public sentiment will drive this body to change its rules.

I am one of those who believe in a full debate and a prompt decision. I served in another body where we were compelled to decide before we debated, and I regret now that I belong to a body which debates forever without deciding. Somewhere between these two extremes there is a safe and middle ground, and surely the common sense of the United States Senate is equal to finding it. You filibustered for fourteen weeks against a measure involving the happiness of a great and sturdy race of pioneers who have gone to our Western plains to make gardens out of its waste places. Then, in the closing hours of the session that you have wasted by a filibuster, you bring in a bill which I think important and ought to pass; but gentlemen on this side, who differ with me on that question, propose to administer to you a dose of your own medicine.

Mr. SPOONER. Is that the object of the opposition?

Mr. BAILEY. I am not in the confidence of the gentlemen who are conducting this fight, because I happen to be on the outside at this time. But I do know——

Mr. ALDRICH. Is the punishment, in the view of the Senator from Texas, to be administered to us or to the country?

Mr. BAILEY. Well, I think they believe the country can stand it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am sure we can stand it.

Mr. BAILEY. You have stood a good deal. You can stand a great deal more.

Mr. TILLMAN. The people of the Territories are standing a great deal, too.

Mr. BATE. May I interrupt the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, as one of those who belong to the party to which the Senator from Texas belongs, I must protest against the language he uses here in regard to the Democratic party when he says that we are a party that debate forever and never decide.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not say that of the Democratic party.

Mr. BATE. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. No. The Senator does not want to misstate what I said.

Mr. BATE. I do not. I wish to bring to the attention of the Senator from Texas the fact that he was off sick for the last two weeks, and that no Democrat made a speech here for three weeks or more. I had something to do with the matter, and the Democrats all stood silent, and the discussion for the last two months was confined almost entirely to the Republican party.

The Democrats had nothing to do with the discussion, except now and then a little short speech was made by one in answer to a statement as to historical facts. Therefore I, as a Democrat, must object to having the idea go abroad that we are a set of men who talk always and never decide. We do decide, and we decided from the beginning not to go into any filibustering, but to be present and let our Senatorial colleague, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], who was in full accord with us on this question, practically take charge of the matter.

Mr. ALDRICH. "Colleague" is good. [Laughter.]

Mr. BATE. We decided to let him lead, as the Democrats were in the minority and needed help to pass it, and he led it very well, as far as he could, until his own party associates went against him. There are only thirty-two of us Democratic Senators here, and out of that number we had thirty every time the roll was called and it was necessary to answer it, and we stood firm for the statehood bill as it came from the House without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i." We did that, and we were practically silent, not doing much speaking in order to stop the delay purposely organized and carried out by Republican Senators. We were decided from the beginning to the end.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Tennessee simply misunderstood what I said. I did not say the Democratic party debated always without deciding.

Mr. BATE. The Senator said the party to which he belonged.

Mr. BAILEY. No. I did not say that, if the Senator will pardon me. I said the "body" to which I now belong, contrasting it with another branch of Congress of which I once had the honor to be a member.

Mr. BATE. I will stand corrected if you meant the Senate instead of the House; but I think we are the best part of the Senate, so I must be pardoned for that.

Mr. BAILEY. But the Senator has just vindicated me against aspersing the Democratic party, because he said they did not do what I complained at our adversaries for doing.

This session there have been four propositions before the Senate, any one of which would have passed by a safe majority if a vote could have been reached. First was the omnibus statehood bill, which under a kind of compromise was reported to this body on the third day after it reconvened for the present session. Then there were two treaties here, one of which I am very much opposed to, and the other one I am inclined to favor. Both could have been ratified—one by an overwhelming majority, the other, I regret to say, by a safe majority. Neither has been permitted to come to a vote. Here comes a third and an important measure; and I take it that the vote for it would stand 50 to 30. But no vote is to be had.

Mr. President, there is something wrong either in the rule or in the practice that enables a minority constantly to defeat the will of a majority. The Senate for a hundred years has lived up to the high ideal that there should be no limitation on debate in this august assembly. I hope it will be able to live another hundred years under the same high ideal; but, without hesitation, I record the prophecy that it will not live another generation without the previous question or some form of cloture if it continues to be demonstrated to the American people that the measures which they desire and which a majority are willing to pass are being defeated by debate, intended merely for delay and not for elucidation.

I myself was as earnestly in favor of the statehood bill as is the Senator from Rhode Island in favor of the passage of this bill. He believes and I believe that this bill will favorably affect the interests of the entire country, but the effect on those interests can at least be measured in dollars and cents, and my deliberate judgment is that a bill which touches the inalienable rights of one American citizen to his right of self-government is incomparably more important than another bill which affects the pocket of every man under the flag. And I believe that it was a higher duty on you to meet and decide that question than it is upon my associates here to allow this question to be decided. It is one of those mistakes that have bred mistakes, and in turn they will breed more and probably worse ones. If there had been no filibuster on the statehood bill there would have been no filibuster on the treaties, and there would have been no filibuster against this fiscal measure.

But as we can not turn back these days and weeks——

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Texas let me ask him a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator says that this side of the Chamber has been filibustering against the passage of the pending measure. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that there has not been exceeding eight hours' debate upon this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I know, but there is going to be.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator from Texas may know exactly what is going to take place. Senators can debate it but one more day to say the most of it. Since I have been in this Chamber I have never known a bill of the general importance of this one to pass the Senate without three or four or five or even ten days' debate. This bill was introduced on the 9th day of February, 1903. It was referred to the Committee on Finance, and it was reported back February 11, 1903. This bill was not taken up in the Senate until three days ago, and since that time there has not been consumed eight hours in its discussion.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me——

Mr. CLAY. I desire to say that there has not been a speech made against the passage of this bill which has consumed two hours.

Now, for myself, I agree with the Senator from Texas. I do not believe in filibustering; I do not believe that we ought to have consumed ten days in discussing the statehood bill. I believe that every Senator who desires to speak for or against this bill purely on its merits ought to be entitled to do so without being charged with being a filibusterer.

I simply say this, that it ought to be debated on its merits. We ought to have an opportunity to understand it. There ought to be reports from the Finance Committee. We ought to know what it contains.

Take Senators here to-day, take a dozen Senators, and you will find that they have been in committees of conference during the day and yesterday, and they have not had an opportunity to examine this bill.

I say in all candor to the Senator from Rhode, Island who reported this bill, that it ought to have been introduced and reported back here at least ten days ago, and we ought to have been given an opportunity two weeks ago to understand it and to debate it, and to have every feature of it discussed.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will permit me a moment in answer to the Senator from Georgia, the reason I did not take it up was because the statehood bill was here by the votes of the Senator from Georgia and his colleagues, preventing the passage or consideration of any legislation, and when it was finally taken up it was against the vote of the Senator from Georgia and his colleagues, who——

Mr. CLAY. Let me say a word to that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Another word, if you please.

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. What have been the subjects of the speeches made since this bill has been before the Senate for consideration? But a single Senator outside of the Senator from Texas, sitting upon the other side of the Chamber, has discussed the merits of this bill. Almost everyone of them spoke upon the statehood bill or upon irrigation or upon anything except the bill which was before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. ELKINS. What did those who spoke against statehood discuss?

Mr. CLAY. I say to the Senator from Rhode Island that he has stated the proposition correctly. The Senator states that he could not report this bill and bring it before the Senate because the statehood bill consumed the entire time of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not say that. It was because the statehood bill was kept here by the votes of the Senator from Georgia and his colleagues to the exclusion of all the other public business.

Mr. ELKINS. That was the majority of the Senate.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator from Rhode Island knows this fact. He knows that the majority of the Senate by 14 or 15 votes were in favor of the passage of the statehood bill, and the Senator is correct when he states that it was kept before the Senate to the exclusion of every other matter, and the Senator knows that he assisted in keeping it before the Senate by keeping a vote from being taken on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have trespassed too long upon the indulgence of my distinguished friend from Mississippi. In reply to the Senator from Georgia, whom I always delight to call my friend, I will simply state that resentment against this charge of filibustering amuses me. I heard a distinguished Senator on the other side declare the other day that he had never seen any evidence of filibustering against the statehood bill.

Mr. ELKINS. And the oldest member of the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. That designates him. I did not want to go that far.

Mr. ELKINS. I think the public ought to know.

Mr. BAILEY. Senators over there smile complacently. Here my distinguished friend from Georgia replies with much warmth that there is no evidence of filibustering here.

I assume no right to speak for anybody, but I know one Senator in charge of this matter who has a habit of calling a spade a spade, and I know if he will stand up and have anything to say it will confirm what I say to the Senator from Rhode Island. It is a waste of the Senate's time to keep this bill before the body, because I know that he, with some able assistance that has been volunteered to him, would find it easy to debate this bill until 12 o'clock next Wednesday a week instead of 12 o'clock next Wednesday.

So it seems to me we might as well recognize conditions as they are, and let us all make a high and firm resolve that the next time we will let the majority, after a fair debate, reach a free decision, and we will have no more filibusters here until some proposition reaching the very roots of the Republic is presented; and then, possibly, the right to filibuster will be left to us. But no right which is exercised to the inconvenience of a body and to the disappointment of the public will be left very long impaired.

I beg the pardon of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SPOONER. Did the Senator ever know of a measure which had been filibustered against which did not reach the root of the Republic in the opinion of the filibusters?

Mr. BAILEY. I believe the right to govern themselves is a question going to the root of the Republic; but if the Senator from Wisconsin means that a filibuster against that right goes to the very base of the Government, I answer yes; but he does not think this bill would reach the very structure of the Government, and yet it is to die under the merciless hands of a filibuster, a milder one than the fourteen weeks against the statehood bill, but still a filibuster.

I imagine those people could have been trusted in Arizona and New Mexico to govern themselves entirely and to participate in some small degree in the government of Rhode Island, Connecticut, Massachusetts, and other Commonwealths, which, though small, have contributed their full quota to the statesmanship and patriotism of this Republic.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not sure——

Mr. BAILEY. Again tendering my thanks to the Senator from Mississippi for his indulgence and begging his pardon for this long trespass, I yield the floor to him.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would like to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question, if it does not trouble him.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Mississippi is a distinguished representative of his party, and his lucid statements in regard to the pending bill must have attracted the attention of the Senate.

He has undertaken to criticise the policy of the dominant party in regard to the deposit of public money in banks. I should like to ask him, if it will not overtax his patience and his strength, to state what the policy of the Democratic party is in regard to the deposit of public money in banks from Mr. Jefferson's time down to the present.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Mississippi kindly yield to me?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not want to answer the long question which my friend from Rhode Island has propounded, but I want to rather balance some accounts here, as it seems to be washing day in the Senate.

It does not seem to me that it comes with good grace from one side of this body, which has filibustered so persistently, to charge the other with filibustering when the balance sheet is so unequal, being two days or three days against four weeks. What is sauce for the goose ought to be sauce for the gander; and those who filibuster against what they think to be wrong or contrary to the interests of their people or of the country at large have no right to charge anything that is dishonorable or unpatriotic on those who filibuster on some other question about which they are concerned.

I do not hesitate to say here that I believe the Democratic party has been bunkoed by the most astute politician in the United States, and that was MATTHEW STANLEY QUAY. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUAY. I am deeply indebted——

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will permit me, my reason for saying that is that the most important matter confronting this Congress when we met here was not statehood, it was not the canal treaty, but the question of trust legislation, and he and his party associates got the Democrats here to agree, all but two of us—the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and myself—he got my party associates here to fall in behind him and a dozen or so of his colleagues on the other side to rush these Territories into statehood.

When the time came, there was no chance for trust legislation otherwise than the humbuggery which has been practiced on this country in the so-called antitrust legislation. As an illustration, the bill which came out of the Interstate Commerce Committee, of which I have the honor to be an humble member, is claimed as antitrust legislation, when that very bill in the middle of it—I mean the part which we brought out and which passed here has been there pending for three years, having on one end of the bill a pooling regulation and on the other an enlargement of the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The whole committee was agreed about the rebate and the discriminating question in freights; but we could not agree on the other two propositions. Finally we lined up and brought in the bill which passed both Houses unanimously, and—lo and behold!—the President and Mr. Knox rush forward and cry out, "This is our antitrust bill."

The other antitrust legislation which we have had is just as big a humbug as that, and the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has more trusts in his State than any other man I know of, has simply, as I said, bunkoed my colleagues here into wasting the time of the Senate, with no intention of doing anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUAY. I am deeply indebted to my friend the Senator from South Carolina for his tribute to my astuteness as a politician, but if the Senator from South Carolina will take the trouble to recur to what happened here last June before ever the trust question became a question of paramount importance, before, I might say, the trust campaign was opened, he will remember that then a unanimous-consent agreement was made putting the statehood bill forward at the beginning of the present session.

As to the Senator's implication that on account of my State or on account of any trust in it, although I am interested very much in my State, and also, as I mentioned the other day, somewhat in trusts, I had any intention whatever of interposing the statehood bill as a protection to the trusts, in behalf of the trusts, the Senator has said what is not true. If he will reflect a moment about what has transpired in relation to the bill he will know that is not true.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then the Senator from Pennsylvania has been bunkoed by the Senator from Rhode Island and his colleagues. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUAY. He has not. The Senator from Pennsylvania has not been bunkoed. The Senator from Rhode Island has been lurking in the background of opposition to the statehood bill, it is true, but——

Mr. ALDRICH. Not very much in the background.

Mr. QUAY. I will say then in the foreground, and nobody misunderstood his position. He bunkoed no one.

Mr. BERRY. Except the Senator from South Carolina. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUAY. Except the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. He never bunkoed me. [Laughter.] I knew all the time whenever my friends on the other side got ready to fall down Mr. QUAY'S colleagues, who were back of him on statehood, would surrender.

Mr. QUAY. I must say that the charge of the Senator from South Carolina as to——

Mr. TILLMAN. I make it in perfectly good faith, not with any intention of casting any reflection on anybody. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUAY. I did think that some of my colleagues might have more resolutely antagonized what transpired in a certain conference which is said to have occurred somewhere, but otherwise it is my belief that all those on this side of the Chamber who favored the statehood bill and who stood resolutely against the advice and the influence of their influential colleagues on this side and against the abuse of the newspapers of the North and of this city were faithful to the last, except I say in that one instance I thought they might have stood more directly and stoutly.

Now, I do not think it is necessary to say anything more in reply to the Senator, except that during the progress of the discussion and the voting I never understood that the Senator from South Carolina for one was following very persistently under my leadership until he mentioned it to-night.

Mr. TILLMAN. While we are clarifying the atmosphere before we are ready to go into eclipse on the 4th of March, to reappear in executive session later on, I want to say that I made my attitude perfectly clear on the statehood matter here about three weeks ago, in which I said I would never vote for that bill unless it was changed so as to admit the Indian Territory along with Oklahoma, or keep them apart and have the Indian Territory left on its own resources as to its own people.

I did not believe it was just or proper to give Oklahoma statehood and allow its citizens to frame a constitution and then absorb the white people of the Indian Territory, equal to them in number and with a much richer area of territory, and allow it to come in by benevolent assimilation as it might see fit. That was my opposition to the statehood measure. I wanted to see all the Territories admitted, but I wanted the white people of the Indian Territory to have equal and exact justice with the white people of Oklahoma, and I did not follow the Senator from Pennsylvania, nor did I follow my colleagues over here.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Territories, I am quite unwilling to let the record stand that the Democratic members of that committee are accused of being dupes either of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] or those upon the Republican side who follow him, and I am quite unwilling either to allow the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to take the ground unchallenged of "I told you so," when he, during the entire statehood struggle, with another Democratic member was found, whenever votes were taken, in close alliance with the Republican majority that opposed statehood.

Mr. President, the truth is, so far as every Democratic member of the Committee on Territories is concerned, that we have now and we have had the most implicit faith in the good faith of the Senator from Pennsylvania in this statehood fight. The only fault that we have to find with him is that he did not keep up the fight to the last and either secure a vote upon the statehood bill or force an extra session.

He simply stopped short of standing for the statehood bill and keeping it in the foreground when he was confronted with the alternative of keeping up the statehood fight or forcing an extra session, and I am inclined to think that there is room for honest difference of opinion between members of this body when confronted by such an alternative.

Mr. President, the Democratic members of this body, with two exceptions, were honestly and sincerely in favor of the admission of the three Territories mentioned in the omnibus bill that came from the House, and they volunteered to follow the Senator from Pennsylvania, knowing the solid front that was presented on the Democratic side, because we thought that by thus doing we could strip from the struggle a political complexion and not give to the opponents of statehood a chance to say that it was a Democratic measure and that it was being urged for Democratic purposes.

In standing for statehood I knew, and my Democratic colleagues knew, that New Mexico was as unerring Republican as the State of Rhode Island; that the status of the politics of Arizona at least was in doubt; and that Oklahoma would in all human probability make a Republican State. But we stood for statehood because we believed that these Territories possessed the area and the population and the character of population and the assets that were necessary to make them coequals with the other States of this Union.

We did not allow the fear of political adversity in the event of their admission to stand between us and what we conceived to be our duty, not only as American citizens, but as members of a party that declared in its national convention for the admission of these three Territories, as those who opposed the admission of the Territories are members of a party that likewise declared in favor of the admission of these three Territories. I do not like to see a friend of statehood, upon whatever side of this Chamber he may be, accused of acting in bad faith under the circumstances as we know them to exist.

There is one other matter, Mr. President, that I want to refer to before I take my seat, and that is at least the very broad insinuation that the Democratic members of the Senate are engaged in filibustering in opposing the bill which has been presented and is being urged by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. President, when a measure of that importance has been under discussion only about forty-eight hours, and out of that length of time but eight hours have been consumed in discussion, it does not come with good grace for a member from this side of the Chamber to insist that his Democratic friends have been engaged in filibustering.

It had been my purpose, Mr. President, to speak upon this measure. I know that there are seven or eight Democratic members who are anxious, desirous, and ready to speak upon this measure, and that if this measure was kept before this body until Wednesday at 12 o'clock the Democrats who desire to speak and oppose it would not have time to be heard.

We feel, Mr. President, that this measure should not only be discussed in this Chamber, but it should be discussed before the people of the country before it is placed upon the statute books. However Democrats or Republicans may look at it, no man can investigate it with any regard of calmness or consideration without realizing that it means the most radical change, so far as the dealings of this country with the banks of the country are concerned, which has been instituted since the inauguration of the banking system.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand the statement of the Senator from Colorado to be tantamount to a statement that it is the intention of the Democratic members of this body to discuss this question beyond the 4th of March.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Rhode Island is not justified in stating that that is the conclusion from anything that I have said. I have said that there are Democratic members in this body sufficient in number, who desire to be heard and who intend to be heard, to continue this debate longer than Wednesday at 12 o'clock.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is all I said.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he considers that filibustering? As well might the Senator from Rhode Island have kept this bill back until to-day at noon and, because those who opposed the measure determined to be heard, accuse them of filibustering to prevent a vote.

Mr. ALDRICH. That depends upon whether we call it filibuster or not, on our relative or mutual understanding of the word "filibuster."

Mr. PATTERSON. No.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is discussing the bill to death. It is talking the bill to death.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. ALDRICH. Whether it is one hour or one day or one week or fourteen weeks——

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is simply talking the bill to death.

Mr. PATTERSON. No, no, Mr. President.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senators who have been nominally discussing this bill to-day, I repeat, have been making speeches upon every other conceivable question except the bill itself, and there has been no discussion of this bill upon its merits, and I think I shall not exceed the facts when I say there is no intention of discussing this bill upon its merits.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] rose to a personal matter. He made his speech in this body ten days or more ago, after delivering which he was accused by a journal that is believed to be respectable of having uttered deliberate falsehoods and of having disgraced himself and the Senate by reason of that speech. He occupied less than twenty-five minutes in the presentation of that personal question. So far as my colleague [Mr. TELLER] is concerned, his argument was a logical deduction from the provisions and the possibilities of this bill. The argument of the Senator——

Mr. ALDRICH. I made an exception in behalf of the Senator's colleague.

Mr. PATTERSON. And the argument of the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] was more pertinent to this measure, in my judgment, than any other speech which has been made upon it, for the simple reason that it brought out in more glaring contrast the two propositions as contended for either directly or by inference by Democratic and Republican Senators, the one proposition being that all the money should go to the banks in order to get it into circulation, and the other proposition being that all the money, if there was too much in the Treasury, should go to the reclamation of the desert places of this country, making homes for the homeless and giving lands to the landless, in order that our population may be increased by a thrifty, a brave, and a prosperous people.

I have no hesitation in asserting that the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island is not borne out by the facts when he says the arguments upon this side of the Chamber have not been directed to the measure. Every one of them was pertinent, and every one of them tended in one way or another to elucidate the hideousness of this measure when it is properly and clearly understood.

I say, Mr. President, as to the Senator's idea of filibustering, that it is not my idea, and it is not a correct idea. It has been received as a gospel truth by every Senator upon this floor that every measure of importance is deserving of a full and a fair and a free discussion and debate; and when a Senator interposes a measure of vast importance in the closing days of the session and attempts to shut off debate by crying out "Filibustering!" he is doing injustice to the Senate and is violating the rules of fair and honorable debate.

So, Mr. President, as a member of this side of the Chamber, I protest against being put down as among the filibusters.

I came here two years ago, and the first thing I was greeted with by one of the Senators from Illinois, a Republican Senator, was the charge of filibustering, as it was conceded upon every hand, and he himself conceded it, to prevent the passage of a river and harbor bill.

I have said a number of times during this short session that the Republican members were setting a bad example to new Senators when, without rhyme or reason, they stood in opposition to the requests of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], made day by day, that some time should be fixed before the close of the session when a vote upon the statehood bill might be had.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has declared more than a dozen times that, so far as the two Philippine bills were concerned which were passed at the last session, there was nothing but fair and honorable debate upon them and that there was no evidence of any attempt at filibustering upon the part of the enemies of the measures; and I say now, so far as my experience in this body is concerned, during the past two years there has never been the slightest evidence of a purpose to filibuster in the sense of filibustering for the purpose of defeating any measure, however obnoxious that measure may have been.

Senators on this side have declared against filibustering, except as to those who have in mind the struggle upon the force bill, years and years agone, when they believed that the very foundations of their social fabric were about to be destroyed. With that one single exception, I have heard them declare unanimously against filibustering, and I have not seen a single evidence of an attempt or a purpose upon their part since I have been here to do aught contrary to their express views upon the subject.

I say, Mr. President, that the Senator from Rhode Island has no one to blame but himself for the short season given for debate upon this bill—too short for its proper consideration. He was connected with the Senators who so managed the business of this Senate that it was impossible for him to call up his bill before. Otherwise doubtless he would have done so. But this measure ought to have been presented long and long ago, because it is not the incubation of an hour. It has been thought upon and dreamed over and discussed months and months ago by those who are the intended beneficiaries of it, and I can not understand why even its introduction was withheld until less than a month ago.

Mr. President, I say that no Democrat has filibustered. We have not countenanced it in any way. The filibustering has all been done upon the side of which the Senator from Rhode Island is a distinguished member; in all human probability, when everything is considered that enters into leadership, the leader of that body. He could have changed the whole aspect of the legislation of this session if he had been guided by proper impulses. When I use that phrase, I mean the impulse against delay, against filibustering, in order that the members on this floor might, after fair and free debate upon the statehood bill, have had an opportunity to vote their sentiments.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Colorado with a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PATTERSON, Yes, sir.

Mr. HANNA. I am aware that the Senator from Colorado was not present at the short session two years ago, but I ask him, for his information, to learn how it was that the shipping bill was defeated.

Mr. PATTERSON. I would ask the Senator from the State of Ohio to go over to the House of Representatives and ask how the shipping bill came to be defeated.

Mr. HANNA. No.

Mr. PATTERSON. It was strangled in the house of its friends.

Mr. HANNA. That bill was not reported by the committee of the House; but it was before this Senate fully as long as the statehood bill has been, and it was nearly talked to death on that side of the Chamber.

Mr. PATTERSON. Of course, I have no personal knowledge of that.

Mr. HANNA. I said you had not, and I was simply advising the Senator.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am talking about my knowledge since I have been here.

Mr. HANNA. I supposed the Senator was talking for that side of the Chamber.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am talking for this side of the Chamber, so far as my personal knowledge is concerned.

Mr. HANNA. And I was advising the Senator to acquaint himself with the facts.

Mr. PATTERSON. There are those on this side of the Chamber, I have no doubt, who can answer fully and completely the question propounded by the Senator from Ohio.

But in any event the shipping bill is buried—buried by the political associates and friends of the Senator from Ohio—buried in committee; and I say well done to the political associates of the Senator from Ohio who prepared the coffin, placed within it the corpse, filled in the grave, and wrote its epitaph. The shipping bill, like the bill of the Senator from Rhode Island, was a measure that should be, with it, condemned by those who regard the national banks of the country as the chief beneficiary for all the legislation that the Congress of the United States can enact.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to say a few words?

Mr. CARMACK. I have only a short time, but I will yield to the Senator if he wishes——

Mr. ALDRICH. I only want two or three minutes.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I am perfectly willing to yield, but I wish it to be understood that I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I am willing to yield the floor to the Senator from Tennessee or to the Senator from Rhode Island, but of course I desire to go on when they get through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield for the present?

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator will yield to me, I will occupy only a few moments.

Mr. ALDRICH. I thought the Senator had yielded to me.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I will first yield to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] and afterwards to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I was simply about to say that the situation of the Senator from Rhode Island under the present circumstances reminds me very much of an incident in the story of Barnaby Rudge. I refer to the failure of the hangman to respond when it came his turn to be hanged. The Senator from Rhode Island now has an opportunity to see how it is himself.

He was supposed to be the inspiration of a very long and desperate filibuster here in this Chamber, which has caused the present congestion of business in the Senate. For fourteen long weeks the Senator prevented this Senate from having its will, from having an opportunity to vote on a bill which a majority of the Senate favored and wished to pass. By the holding up of that bill for that long time the result has been that the business of the Senate is congested, and there are a number of very important bills thrown upon us here at nearly the very closing hours of the session.

I agree with a great deal that my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has said in respect to filibustering. I am no advocate of that means of dealing with public questions; but I say, Mr. President, when we are confronted with important measures right here in the closing hours of a session and called upon to act upon them at once it is perfectly legitimate to delay proceedings until the Senate can have an opportunity fairly to scrutinize the pending measures and fairly to debate them, and even though speeches are made here avowedly for the purpose of delay it is legitimate delay. This measure ought not to pass at this session of Congress, because there is no opportunity for its fair and full consideration.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] referred to a few remarks of mine. I do not know whether the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has mentioned them or not.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think so.

Mr. CARMACK. I did not know whether he had or not.

Mr. President, as I was saying, I did make some remarks here not at all pertinent to this bill, and I expect to submit some more.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Tennessee permit me?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I want the Senator to know that I distinctly disclaim any thought of attributing to the Senator from Tennessee the motive of filibustering.

Mr. CARMACK. I knew the Senator would not attribute such a thing to me.

Mr. BAILEY. Because I think the Senator had just and sufficient occasion for his remarks, and they had no reference to the final result on this bill.

Mr. CARMACK. None in the world, Mr. President. I attempted to get an opportunity before to say what I did say while this bill was pending, and there are things that I have wanted to say not pertinent to this bill. I do not care particularly about saying them in the time of this bill, but I want to say them at some time before we adjourn, and I might just as well say them when this bill is pending as any other, because this bill is not going to pass, and I freely confess that I am one of those who have determined that it ought not to be allowed to pass at this session of Congress.

If we had full and fair time for debate, if the Senate wished to pass the bill, I should not attempt to obstruct it by filibustering; but I do say in these closing hours of the session, when we have no time for fair consideration of the question, it is legitimate to adopt obstructive tactics, if necessary, to delay the consideration of such a measure until we can have time for its full consideration.

Now, Mr. President, I have something more here that I wish to go into the RECORD. I do not want to take the time to read it, unless the Senate insists upon it. I will say, briefly, that it is some testimony, if it can be called such, bearing upon the conduct of this Government in the Philippines Islands—testimony that we desired to bring before the Philippine Committee, but we were not permitted the opportunity to do so; and I and some other friends constituted ourselves a committee and took a little of this testimony. I desire to have it printed in the RECORD. I will not ask to read it to the Senate unless some one objects to having it printed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines, I trust the Senator from Tennessee will withhold his request with reference to the printing of this matter in the RECORD until some other hour when the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines is present.

Mr. DUBOIS. If the Senator from Tennessee will permit me, I second the motion of the Senator from Indiana, and then, perhaps the Senator from Tennessee will have the opportunity to read it to-morrow. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARMACK. Very well.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think that will be better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee withdraw the request?

Mr. CARMACK. I withdraw the request.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, now I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. ALDRICH. In the midst of this torrent of disclaimers, the frank remarks of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] are refreshing to say the least.

Mr. CARMACK. I think the Senator needs to be refreshed, and I am glad to refresh him.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Tennessee is quite willing to admit what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] seems so anxious to deny. I am surprised that the Senator from Colorado should be so sensitive at the suggestion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. I made no statement about filibustering at all. It was one of the Senator's own associates on that side of the Chamber who made that suggestion.

We are none of us deceived among ourselves about what is being done. We all know that the Senator from Colorado and his associates intend to talk this bill to death, and I am quite willing, so long as the country knows who is responsible for its defeat, that that shall be the result. Not willing, I will not say that, because I think it is a great misfortune to the country and to the business interests of the country that these gentlemen, not on account of the merits or demerits of the bill, but because some of us in discharge of what we believe to be our duty in regard to another measure, have taken a certain course, have determined that we are to be punished and the great business interests of the country are to be punished through us in this method.

Mr. CARMACK. Did I understand the Senator to say that I said anything of that sort was being done for the purpose of punishing him?

Mr. ALDRICH. No. I said the Senator from Tennessee frankly admitted that he intended to kill the bill. He said they intended to bring this lesson home to us because of the position we had taken in regard to the statehood bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. In what way are the business interests of the country suffering for this bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. I will try to find an opportunity to-morrow to tell the Senator, and I expect, before this debate is finished, to get such an opportunity.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will excuse me and allow me to go on for a moment further; the Senator made some allusions to the fact that this bill was not presented here before; he stated that, as chairman of the committee, I ought not to have brought this bill here for discussion at this late day, and he further stated that this bill had been prepared somewhere else. I wish to say that this bill never was prepared outside of the room of the Committee on Finance and that it had no consideration by anybody outside of the room of the Committee on Finance.

I prepared it as a simple business proposition; I submitted it to my associates on that committee, to Democrats and Republicans on that committee. We discussed it and agreed upon every one of its provisions from beginning to end, and there was never an intimation on the part of any member of that committee, and there never was an intimation from anybody until the bill reached this Chamber, that it was intended to make it a subject of partisan discussion and that it was to be killed for political effect.

It was an entire surprise to me, because there was, I repeat, no suggestion on the part of the Democratic members of that committee—and they are equal to any of their associates on this floor in ability and knowledge of this subject—that we were doing anything except what I suggest—preparing a plain, business proposition that would help the business interests of this country. There is nothing else in it. There was no appearance of anything else until it came here, and the gentlemen who lead the Democratic party to defeat by adopting one policy last year are now seeking to lead that same party to defeat again by adopting another policy this year.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I wish to reply to one word which fell from the lips of the Senator from Rhode Island, to the effect that we on this side were trying to punish the other side for filibustering. I disclaim anything of that kind.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was only adopting a suggestion of the Senator's colleague [Mr. CARMACK].

Mr. BATE. I say that we on this side are not doing that. We are trying to do our duty to our convictions in regard to this bill. But I will say that people who live in glass houses should not throw stones, and as you Senators on the other side tried to filibuster, we thought it came with bad grace from the Senator from Rhode Island to say we were filibustering.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CARMACK. I hope the Senator will yield to me for just a moment to say a word personal to myself.

Mr. PATTERSON. Very well.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I made no suggestion that we had adopted these tactics for the purpose of punishing the Senator from Rhode Island or punishing anybody else for his attitude on the statehood bill. I have not had any such motive. As far as I am concerned, I have never had any intense feeling with respect to the statehood bill. I supported that measure because I thought it was just and right, but I have never had any intense feeling over it, either of resentment or otherwise, and I have never had any desire to punish the Senator from Rhode Island or to punish anybody else.

I have just simply remarked that the Senator was in the position of the hangman in Barnaby Rudge, when it comes home to him; not that I desired to see the Senator in that position at all. My position was simply that we ought not to consider or attempt to pass a measure of this importance in the closing hours of the session, when we have not time for full and fair consideration of it; and that is the only reason I have had for the part I have taken in it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I desire to read a very short extract from the Evening Star, an Administration paper, and, I think, in full sympathy with the political views and the financial policy of the Senator from Rhode Island. The article says:

Interest centered about the Senate situation during the early part of the day. The question heard on every side was, Would the Aldrich financial bill pass? No measure of legislation of recent years has excited more attention in Congress than the pending financial measure which bears Senator ALDRICH'S name.

Strong pressure from influential financial and corporation quarters is being exerted upon Congress to get the measure through. The banking interests of the East, and especially of New York, are putting every pound of pressure they can bring to bear upon both Houses of Congress. This is supplemented by pressure from the great railroads of the country, whose bonds would be favorably affected by the legislation. The only opposition comes from a faction of Democrats.

The great banking interests of New York, the great railroads of the country are putting every pound of pressure upon both branches of Congress, according to this Administration paper, in the first column of the first page, to rush this bill through.

Mr. CARMACK. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. PATTERSON. From the Washington Evening Star of to-day.

Mr. ALDRICH. I can only speak for myself in this connection, but I will say that the only letter or communication that I have had from any bank in the city of New York was in opposition to this measure.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am not impugning the Senator's motives at all.

Mr. CARMACK. I suggest that if some of the banks are opposing this measure we ought to take a little more time to consider it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON. Then, in the second column of this Administration organ, we have the following upon the same subject:

A decision was reached by the House Committee on Rules this morning to take no action on a rule for the consideration of currency legislation until action on the Aldrich bill has been taken by the Senate.

Unless the Senate passes the Aldrich bill to-day, the prediction is made that no financial legislation will be had at this session.

If, however, the Senate passes the Aldrich bill to-day or early to-morrow, a rule will be brought in by which the combination Fowler-Payne-Aldrich bill shall be considered as a substitute for the Aldrich bill as it comes from the Senate. In this way the combination bills of the House and Senate can be referred to a conference committee and the result of the deliberations of this conference report will undoubtedly be adopted by both Houses.

Now, is not that a nice programme?

Mr. ALDRICH. This particular newspaper writer does not seem to have been in the confidence of the Senator from Colorado, or he would not have written that article.

Mr. PATTERSON. The writer of this article was evidently in the confidence of the managers in the other House. I read something of the proceedings, and the statement made by this writer is true, that no rule was adopted, that the making of a rule was deferred by the House until action by the Senate upon what is known as the Aldrich bill. And it was evidently for the purpose of saddling on to the Aldrich bill the obnoxious financial legislation in the House and then rushing them through in a conference report.

Of course the Senator from Rhode Island is in no wise responsible for that. Whether he could have defeated it when these several measures were incorporated in one in an agreement made by the committee of conference, of course, I do not know; but all of these things go to show, I suppose, of course, without the knowledge of the Senator from Rhode Island, that there is a compact, a well-organized body, and a complete understanding as to what will be done with this measure by those who control both branches of Congress if they can only get it through the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I am reminded by a fellow-Senator that the cars stop running at 12 o'clock, and I therefore move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, I want it understood that I have the floor in the morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 3, 1903, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 2, 1903.

[Continuation of legislative day of February 26, 1903.]

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 11 a. m. by the Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the pending motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays. A quorum is not needed to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There must be a quorum to transact business, and we have not been in session for eighteen hours. I insist that we should have a quorum.

Mr. LACEY. It is not necessary to have a quorum to order the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must bear in mind that the thing that the gentleman from New York asks does not need a quorum. The Chair must overrule the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the Chair hold that it does not need a quorum to transact business? Is the Chair going to hold that it does not require a quorum?

The SPEAKER. Speaker Randall and Speaker Carlisle both held that a quorum was not needed to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Of course.

The SPEAKER. And the present occupant of the Chair so holds, and overrules the point of order. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 203, nays 7, answered "present" 21, not voting 120; as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.

Mr. CANNON with Mr. MCRAE.

Mr. GILL with Mr. MAHONEY.

Mr. CONNELL with Mr. COOPER of Texas.

Mr. MILLER with Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

Mr. HASKINS with Mr. LAMB.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts with Mr. NAPHEN.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. LIVINGSTON.

Mr. METCALF with Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. LANDIS with Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN.

Mr. BLAKENEY with Mr. ELLIOTT.

Mr. SHELDEN with Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana.

Mr. WACHTER with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. KNOX with Mr. SNOOK.

On this vote:

Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. NEWLANDS.

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. SMALL.

Mr. SOUTHWICK with Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN.

Mr. TOMPKINS of New York with Mr. MAYNARD.

Mr. NEVIN with Mr. MADDOX.

Mr. BARNEY with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. SCHIRM with Mr. REID.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know how I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. FLOOD. I should like to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in his seat and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. FLOOD. I do not know about that.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the gentleman can not vote.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be recorded.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I was detained at the Post-Office Department.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17046) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 7414) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FAIRBANKS, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. TURNER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JAMES M. MOODY, late a Representative from the State of North Carolina.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect the Senate, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do adjourn.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Also:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. PETER JOHNSTON OTEY, late Representative in Congress from the Sixth Congressional district of Virginia.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended that proper tribute may be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the Senate will, upon the conclusion of these memorial exercises, adjourn.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate its message of February 28, 1903, requesting the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 16775) establishing United States courts at Duncan, Maryetta, and Comanche, Ind. T.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolutions of the House Nos. 475 and 479, have considered the same and report with the recommendation that it do pass the following in lieu thereof:

"Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this order, or at any time thereafter, the Speaker may lay before the House the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, now on the Speaker's table, and, the Senate amendments thereto having been read, the question shall be at once taken without debate or intervening motion on the following question: 'Will the House disagree to said amendments en bloc and ask a conference with the Senate?' And if this motion shall be decided in the affirmative, the Speaker shall at once appoint the conferees, without the intervention of any motion. If the House shall decide said motion in the negative, the effect of said vote shall be to agree to the said amendments.

"And further, that for the remainder of this session whenever a conference report shall have been presented and read, there shall be ten minutes of debate, and at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on agreeing to said report."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, the rule presents two propositions for the consideration of the House. The first makes it possible to bring up at a time within the discretion of the Speaker the immigration bill, which passed the House and has passed the Senate with amendments. The provision is that whenever the Speaker is ready to lay that bill before the House it is in order to do so.

The second proposition involved in the rule is that for the remainder of this session whenever a conference report shall have been presented and read there shall be ten minutes' debate upon the report, and no more, and at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on agreeing to said report. The House will see that that eliminates one roll call on each conference report and limits the debate upon the conference report. Mr. Speaker, if there is no debate demanded or required, I will ask for the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman yield to us the usual twenty minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly; if the gentleman from Tennessee desires twenty minutes he can have it and control it. I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; for a question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. According to this rule in the case of conference reports there are ten minutes of debate. Why is not the same principle accorded to the immigration bill? I understand the immigration bill has been changed in the Senate beyond recognition, and it seems to me the House is entitled to know what the bill is at the present time. If the bill is passed without an opportunity for discussion, I think it is not quite fair toward those who take an interest in that question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is enough to say, Mr. Speaker, that the subject-matter has been before Congress for a long time, and only by unanimous consent can we have any debate upon it.

Mr. PAYNE. Let me ask the gentleman, is not that the same provision already adopted in relation to appropriation bills?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; it is the same.

Mr. PAYNE. And in regard to the discretion given the Speaker, I suppose that is provided for in order that the Speaker may lay before the House appropriation bills?

Mr. GROSVENOR. So the appropriation bills may have their right of way. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of reasons why this rule should not be adopted. In the first place, the most important part of the rule is that section that provides that the great conference reports coming before this House, carrying millions of dollars, items involving the great expenditures for the Government, shall be considered in this House with only ten minutes of debate.

The Republican party presents this spectacle before the country: That it is unable to do business and give that business consideration. It shows that the individual members of this House are no longer to be trusted in the councils of the nation; that a few men who constitute the leadership of this House, and the men who are on the conference committees, must determine what legislation the country shall have, and the membership of this House, regardless of the responsibilities which they owe to their constituencies, must be forced under whip and spur, with their mouths gagged, to appropriate millions of dollars without knowing what items they are voting for. That is the effect of the first clause of this rule which is brought in here for you to adopt.

The second clause provides that you shall reject every Senate amendment to the immigration bill without an opportunity to consider it—that you must either pass the bill as it comes from the Senate, with the House bill emasculated practically in full, or send it back to the Senate with your conferees practically instructed to lie down and accept the bill as passed by the Senate.

There is one provision in the bill as it comes back from the Senate to which I would agree, and most heartily. I refer to the clause inserted here in the House bill that will prevent the selling of liquor in the Capitol of the United States. But outside of that single provision there is not one part of the House bill left that amounts to anything. It is merely a codification of the old laws with a few immaterial changes. The House bill raised the head tax from $1 to $1.50. The Senate bill puts that tax at $2. That is practically all that is left of the House bill. I ask you what has become of the provision of the House bill to protect the American laborer against the pauper labor of Europe?

Mr. SHATTUC rose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have but five minutes and can not yield. I ask the gentleman not to interrupt me.

That provision of the House bill has been stricken out. The bill as it passed the House of Representatives provided an educational qualification for immigrants, so that the honest American laborer should not be forced to come in contact and in competition with the scum labor of Europe. It was not at the instance of the great transportation companies that that provision was put in this bill, but it was at the request and instance of labor itself. The united labor of this country petitioned Congress to protect it against the pauper labor of Europe; and yet to-day, when the Senate of the United States, at the instance of the great transportation companies of this country, has stricken out that provision from the bill, the measure is brought back here, and under the order of this rule you are told to surrender the rights of those whom, as you showed by a very large vote when this bill was before the House, you were in favor of protecting.

You are ordered to surrender the rights of honest labor to corporate greed, with no chance left to protect the rights of your constituents.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, it is said that babbling brooks have their lessons and that there is a sermon in every stone. Perhaps there is a lesson in the present parliamentary situation. The partisan Republican press is solicitously trying to persuade the country that the Democratic minority, out of "revenge" because we did not "keep a Democrat in his seat," are attempting now to "hold up" the Government, to "stop the appropriations," "to stab the Government," and "suck away its life blood," and all that sort of thing. The country ought to know that present appropriations continue until July 1 next. It is well enough for the country to know that this situation is broader than that—very much broader in the lesson which it ought to teach.

Mr. Speaker, the Democrat minority is not acting simply out of a spirit of "revenge." It has had Democrats turned out, not once, but many times, without resort to present tactics. It has become necessary to teach the majority that it must respect the rights of the minority on this floor now and hereafter. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is what this situation means. Had your rules been more generous, or if, with the strength of a giant, you had not attempted under your rules to act like a giant—brutally and unreasonably; if you had not attempted to bring 2,300 pages of evidence into this body and turn a member out upon that evidence before a single member of this House could learn its import—evidence that could not possibly be explained to the House in less than two legislative days; if you had allowed reasonable discussion—five hours on our side—and then had gone on and done what was right, there would have been no complaint. Had you done that, there would have been 28 or 30 members on the other side of the Chamber, fair and true—and, in my opinion, more than that number—who, hearing the testimony, would not have joined in perpetrating the outrage which you perpetrated the other day—not on evidence, but from personal prejudice and partisan blindness—this situation would not exist.

This situation means that the minority is hereafter going to use every constitutional and every parliamentary right which it has on this floor to make itself respected. And if, in the Fifty-eighth Congress, you turn out this or another man elected by 6,000 majority, just because you have a giant's strength, and choose to use it like a giant under your rules, then you will find that in that Congress, as in this, you will have to reckon with the minority.

You will lose time, prestige, and respect.

Suppose you have, by your unjust conduct, forced an extra session. You ought to welcome it. You would get a chance to pass the Littlefield bill, for which all of you voted in the House, through the Senate. You would get a chance to give the Interstate Commerce Commission power to fix reasonable freight rates for interstate commerce. You would get time to keep your statehood pledges to Arizona and New Mexico, time to deliver the goods you have promised to the bankers in the shape of a Fowler bill or an Aldrich bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this morning you bring in another rule. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what you and your Republican colleagues remind me of? You remind me of the hero of the story of the first funeral at Wolfville in Alfred Henry Lewis's Tales of Wolfville.

The town had grown. It had baseball, it had put up a theater and opera house, and it had six or eight keno places. It was thriving like young towns in Arizona do. They had bought a cemetery and put an iron fence around it, and all that they waited for was a "stiff," as they called him, "to plant." After a while a gentleman was unfortunately killed one morning. The entire town met in mass meeting and concluded to have a funeral worthy of the deceased, a funeral which would do honor to the village. They met in solemn conclave and decided that every citizen would turn out and each should say something about the corpse. Some fellow explained that the chief thing at a funeral was to remember "de mortuis nil nisi bonum," which upon being explained was interpreted to mean that you "mustn't say nothin' bad about the stiff;" whereupon they all went out and all obeyed the rule until a certain man was reached, who felt that he could not help going into the character of the deceased just a little bit. He said, "Gentlemen, I must say this much," after having praised him a great deal, "that the corpse did have one serious defect. He hardly ever played a game to the finish without wanting to change the rules to suit his hand." [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Now, this is the second time you gentlemen have come in to change the rules to suit your hand, and yet you have told us frequently beforehand that you have rules under which you could do business. I will tell you why you did business under them. You did it because you had a patriotic minority that wanted right business done, and whenever you fail to respect the rights of that minority they will show you that under whatever rules you may adopt—because there are some few things which you can not change, the constitutional right for a fifth to have the yeas and nays and a few things like that—they will teach you now and hereafter that their rights must be respected. We ask nothing but right, not favors nor generosities, and I want the country to understand that this fight is upon a higher plane than mere revenge for a contested-election case. I remember another thing in the Wolfville Tales that might be inscribed upon the tombstone of the Republican party when it comes to die. [Laughter and cries of "Oh" on the Republican side.]

Oh, it will die. Every "old party" that has ever faced the Democracy has died. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is just a question of time. We are the old historic party. You change your clothes from time to time, and your name, but you are under your clothes the same old Federalistic skeleton and the people always after a while find it out. [Applause on Democratic side.] There is another saying in the Wolfville Tales, as I was about to say, which I think ought to be inscribed on the tombstone of the Republican party when it dies, and that was the utterance of one man who——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, he said that "the straight sort of a fellow is not the fellow who holds the best hand, but the fellow that makes a bad hand win." [Applause and laughter.] He foresaw the Republican spirit. Now, I want to call attention to this first rule that changes the rules of the House to suit your hand. Here it is. Here is the question. Have you gentlemen noticed that whenever the Speaker gets up to put this question he raises this thing up and reads it, for fear he might make a mistake? [Laughter.]

Will the House agree to said amendments en bloc and ask a conference with the Senate?

Why, that is not even law French. That is good French, and it is the first time in the history of the world that good French was ever put in an English law. Have you ever noticed that when people want to do or excuse something mean they clothe the idea in French?

I am confidentially informed, although I do not want to give away the secrets of a committee, that when this matter came up in the Rules Committee the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] turned at once to the Speaker and said: "Mr. Speaker, what do these words 'en bloc' here mean? Of course I am going to stand behind you, and I am going to defend whatever we do, but it is nothing but right to let me know what I am defending before I get in." [Laughter.] Whereupon the Speaker is reported to have said: "Joe, upon my soul, I don't know what they mean myself." [Laughter.]

And he is reported to have turned to that scholastic linguist, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and to have said: "John, we have got to defend it. What do those words mean?" Whereupon the gentleman from Pennsylvania is reported to have said that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], the chairman of the Republican national Congressional committee, had informed him that it had something to do with putting the amendments through by blocks of five. Whereupon the gentleman from Illinois said: "Oh, well, I can stand for that; that is a recognized principle of the party," and the Speaker assented. [Laughter.] But, Mr. Speaker, I not only object to the unprecedented linguistics of this resolution—real good French in a statute, you know, is a thing that never was heard of before; nothing but Norman and law French being put into statutes—but I object to its logic still more. Listen to this magnificent "therefore," this irresistible "sequitur." What is it?

Will the House agree to said amendments en bloc and ask a conference with the Senate? And if this motion shall be decided in the affirmative, the Speaker shall at once appoint the conferees—

And so forth. That is well enough, but listen to this magnificent "therefore" from the one premise:

If the House shall decide said motion in the negative—

Namely, that they do not agree to all the amendments "en bloc"—they may object to one or two amendments that are not en bloc, or something of that sort, but—

The effect of said vote shall be to agree to all of said amendments.

The unwillingness to talk plain English is worthy of the Republican party. The logic is worthy of the Republican party. The situation is worthy of the Republican party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining of my twenty minutes?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes remaining.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he is going to close with more than one speech. If so, I think he ought to put forward one of his speakers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I shall not have more than one in closing.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How much time is left to the other side, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. They have thirty-six minutes of the hour left.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I supposed the gentleman would use the same time he accorded to us. I do not know whether he will do that or not. I ask the gentleman what his purpose is in that respect?

Mr. GROSVENOR. How much time have I used?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used four minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will only use sixteen minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will you use it in one speech, or more?

Mr. GROSVENOR. In one speech.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then I yield the remaining six minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, since the question of the composition of the rule is before the House, it seems to me that at least passing justice ought to be done to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. I have reason to conclude that, as he has very lately been in authorship pretty largely, he really is the gentleman who interspersed this bit of French with a considerable amount of English.

Now, I do not think it is just to our Republican friends to criticise them for employing a foreign language for the expression of part of what they intend. It must have required a good deal of desperation—I will not call it courage, because I wish to be as accurate as I can under the circumstances [laughter]—to formulate and bring forward this rule. It is asking too much to demand that it should be expressed in English.

The gentlemen, I think, deserve credit for the fact that they managed to get along with so little foreign language in the formulation of the rule. Of course, the thing to be accomplished by the rule is foreign entirely to all of our legislative history and to all legislative precedent in this House, and everywhere else, where people are supposed to govern themselves, or have respect for law or for the proprieties under the law. But the very fact that that is true affords an additional reason why these gentlemen should resort to a foreign language, inasmuch as they are to resort to foreign methods.

The gentlemen had a little session yesterday. I wonderd at first what it was called for, whether it was to instruct our new member [Mr. WAGONER], the neophite in legislative operations, or whether it was to receive instruction from the new professor of political economy, hurried into this House without a quorum.

We were not enlightened by the proceedings. The country is yet left in doubt sublime as to whether our new brother [Mr. WAGONER] received instructions, or whether we received instructions from our new brother [Mr. WAGONER]. At all events, the traditions of the majority of the American citizens who believe in the observance of the Sabbath day, who believe that six days a week are sufficient to do the work necessary to be done, and that every seventh day even the Republican majority of the House might afford to rest from its vehement labors, was disregarded and a session was held.

Gentlemen here suggest that there was necessity for it. They know very well, as the country knows, that there was none. If you mean that you desire to get through Congress and into law a lot of measures that ought not to go through, then six days of the week of ordinary procedure are not enough for their enactment; then there is a species of necessity; but if you have reference to necessary and proper legislation, with proper and decorous procedure, then there could be no occasion for the desecration of the Sabbath, no necessity for disregarding everything sacred in legislative history and riding roughshod over the minority by a majority, having taken a seat here without the sanction of a majority. It is in accordance with the beliefs and practices of the people who sent you here to respect the Sabbath, but the reverse of that goes to effectuate a state of things such as you design to perform.

There is a suggestion that upon this side we are blocking legislation and unnecessarily consuming time. It is a great misapprehension by those who may have it. It is a great misstatement by those who know it is not true. We are merely employing the methods of the Constitution. We are merely affording you a new and novel spectacle of legislating in accordance with the requirements of law, of the higher law, the Constitution of the United States, a law which all of us swore to obey. That is all. We are not forcing upon you anything revolutionary, we are not standing in the way of progress or order or the Constitution, but we are insisting that your progress shall be as the Constitution prescribes, and that for your conduct you shall take the responsibility of the roll call, so that there shall be seen upon the records, to be read of all men concerned, the story of what you do and how you do it. We are in no way revolutionary, are not repressing anything. We are not interfering with the progress of legislation; but in our course is everything to be commended and everything to be emulated, nothing to be regretted and nothing to be condemned.

It was suggested by my colleague from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] that under this rule here we are to deal with this immigration bill without knowing what is in it. The gentleman says that it is brought here so amended that its best friend would not recognize it. It may be, as he says, a little hard, but it is the kind of hardness that you are bringing upon yourselves. That is the purpose of this resolution, and gentlemen who vote for it must know it. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri has quoted a text from the Bible: "Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work." That proposition was enunciated when the maker of the Ten Commandments did not, apparently, foresee the possibility of the presence upon the earth of the Democratic party. [Laughter on the Republican side.] However, with a sort of foresight of what might happen, there was a proviso put in somewhere, that if on any occasion on the Sabbath day it should be found that the ox or the ass of anybody had fallen into a pit, that it should be the duty of good men to get it out. [Laughter.] That seemed to be a foresight of the possibility that there might be a Democratic party, and it might get into the fix that the Democrats of this House are in now. [Renewed laughter.] Now, the ox is pulling the ass out [renewed laughter] and we hope to land it on safe ground before Wednesday next.

Now, I want to refer to the proposition made by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi in regard to the language of this resolution. I know the authority from which I am going to read will commend itself to the gentleman. I read from Jefferson's Manual, page 194 of the Constitution and Manual, that I hold in my hand. The criticism of the gentleman is that if we vote upon the question of agreeing to these amendments all at one time, or vote in the negative, that it is a non sequitur to say that that carries the inference with it which we have provided for. Now, I want to show the gentleman how utterly ignorant Thomas Jefferson was in his day in regard to this:

> Either of these concludes the other—
> That is—
> First, to agree; second, to disagree. Either of these concludes the other necessarily, for the positive of either is exactly the equivalent to the negative of the other, and no other alternative remains.

I will publish a little further extract in my speech.

Then he says:

> It does not raise so necessary an implication as may authorize the Secretary by inference to enter another vote, for two alternatives still remain, either of which may be adopted by the House.

It was unfortunate that Jefferson did not have the learned criticism of the gentleman from Mississippi before he wrote his manual of parliamentary procedure. Now, as to the character of the language used. On one occasion we had a bill pending in this House with 600 amendments. Six hundred! That was all. It had become a bill of infamy; the Democratic President said it was a measure of "perfidy and dishonor;" that is, a disgraceful bill—a bill that was so dirty that he would not sign it, and the Democratic minority in this House discharged the conference committee——

Several MEMBERS. Democratic majority!

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes. I have got so used to talking about the Democratic minority that the other word does not come readily to hand. [Laughter.] By a special order of the House they decided to recede from its disagreement and agree to all the amendments at once without any debate. Here is the language that they used, and I submit to gentlemen with intelligence which is the better language:

> Resolved, That after the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order in the House to move that the order heretofore made requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on H. R. 4864 (the tariff bill) be rescinded; that the conferees heretofore appointed on the part of the House be discharged from further duty in that behalf, and that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments to said bill in gross, and agree to the same.

"In gross." Now, that is Democracy as against "en bloc." [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me a suggestion?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. They not only perpetrated that infamy, but did it when the papers were absolutely in the hands of the Senate and not before the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. On the attempt to pass that rule we demanded to know whether the thing itself, the papers that we were going to create into a revenue law, were in the House, and it had to be admitted that they were not in our possession; but we went right ahead "in gross" and did the infamous act. That was branded as an act of "perfidy and dishonor" by a Democratic President, and the people of the United States have branded it as a double infamy from that time to this every time they have had a chance to vote. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is not a man in this House but knows exactly what these questions are, and I was glad to see a glimmering of conscientious conviction in the language of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], when he said it was not at all the expulsion from this House of a Democrat and the seating of a Republican, but it was much broader than that about which all this trouble is made. Well, it has been broadening out ever since the caucus resolution. The Democratic caucus published its resolution and we have it, and it charged simply and solely that we had improvidently and unwisely expelled a member and seated another, and therefore they would take revenge.

And now, gentlemen, the whole country understands that making an excuse—a flimsy, an unwarranted, an unworthy excuse—of the settlement of a contested-election case, you have tried to paralyze this Government. [Applause on the Republican side.] I do not say in the language of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that you are going to do that, for you can not do it. There is a power here greater than your power. There is the power of the people of the United States delegated to the majority on this side, and it has orders from that high tribunal to pass these appropriation bills and keep the institutions of the country running, and we are going to do it. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

We are going to take every necessary step in order to do it. We will do it because it is our duty; we will do it because you have thrust this challenge in our face; we will do it because the people of the country expect us to do it; and we will do it because we are willing to sacrifice our time, to stay all night answering roll calls on your demand, and do anything that the interests of the country shall not suffer. [Applause on the Republican side.] The Army shall not be destroyed. [Derisive cries on the Democratic side.] The Navy shall go on to completion. The Agricultural bill shall be passed, that agriculture shall flourish. The Post-Office bill shall be passed, that the mails shall be carried. And in the end you will come out just where revolution, insurrection, mobocracy, disregard of law, and disregard of duty always land a political organization. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, if it is a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is not the gentleman from Ohio aware that the present appropriations continue until July 1 and that the President can call an extra session to pass these appropriation bills and also give you a chance to pass some other bills like the Littlefield antitrust bill? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. If I was a candidate for Speaker or for the place of leader of the minority and had the pledges necessary for my election, possibly I might be willing to have an extra session. [Laughter.] But under the existing circumstances I think it would be better to let our Democratic friends go home and come back here next December instructed by such elections as we are going to have in the country, and I do not believe that when we turn somebody else out of this House or refuse to turn him out there will be another "insurgent" insurrection started on the Democratic side. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, this is the plain duty of the hour. No harm can come to the legislation of the country as compared with an extra session or with the constant obstruction that has been going on. It is the wisdom of the Republican side of the House; it is the assumption of their duty, and having discharged that duty they will answer to God and the country for an approval thereof. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of the adoption of this rule——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask for the previous question.

The question was put.

The SPEAKER. The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand a division.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 17046) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, and move the adoption thereof.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls up the conference report on the fortifications appropriation bill. The Clerk will read the report and the statement.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17046) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

GEO. C. PERKINS,
F. E. WARREN,
B. R. TILLMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. HEMENWAY,
LUCIUS N. LITTAUER,
THOS. C. MCRAE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The statement on the part of the managers of the House is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 17046) making appropriations for fortifications, submit the following written statement of the effect of the action agreed upon in the accompanying conference report on each of the Senate amendments, namely:

On amendment numbered 1: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate relating to the purchase of land on Cushings Island, Maine.

On amendment numbered 2: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate with reference to the expenditure of moneys appropriated by the act under the respective bureaus of the War Department.

On amendment numbered 3: Appropriates $199,473.22, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $145,000, as proposed by the House, for manufacture of guns under contract.

On amendment numbered 4: Accepts the language proposed by the Senate in the paragraph appropriating $265,000 for steel breech-loading field guns and their carriages.

On amendment numbered 5: Appropriates $40,000 additional, as proposed by the Senate, for the Emery elevating carriage, and adds a further provision that the sum shall be available if in the judgment of the Secretary of War it can be completed for the sum named and when completed will be of service to the Government.

The bill as finally agreed upon appropriates $7,188,416.22, being $94,473.22 more than as it passed the House, $110,538.78 less than the appropriations for the current year, and $8,036,903.78 less than the estimates.

J. A. HEMENWAY,
LUCIUS N. LITTAUER,
THOS. C. MCRAE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. HEMENWAY rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to know the ruling of the Chair under this special rule. I think the Chair has indicated it, but I will ask the Chair to state as to whether or not the minority are entitled to any time whatever under this new rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana controls the time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if it is his purpose, under the ten minutes allotted for debate on this question, to recognize the minority's right to have any of that time.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman now, if he desires it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wanted to know what the purpose of the gentleman was.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield the time right now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I will yield it back to the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD called for a division.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 202, nays 14, answered "present" 9, not voting 126; as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. LESTER.

On this vote:

Mr. CANNON with Mr. MCRAE.

Mr. WANGER with Mr. ADAMSON.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN) laid before the House the Senate amendments to the bill (S. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

The Senate amendments were read.

During the reading of the Senate amendments,

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi said: Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I rise to a point of order. This is a very important matter before the House, and I suggest that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The last roll call disclosed the presence of nearly three-fourths of the House. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the Chair see three-fourths present now?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor. The other day, in the presence of two votes, each one disclosing that there was not a quorum, it was held that the suggestion of the absence of a quorum was dilatory. Now, if it is not held that two votes showing the absence of a quorum must bind the House, then, can it be held that one vote showing the presence of a quorum can bind the House? There is, as an ocular fact, no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that the last vote, taken but a very few moments ago, discloses the presence of nearly three-fourths of the House; he overrules the point of order made by the gentleman that no quorum is present.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. My parliamentary inquiry is, would the converse be true? If the last vote taken by the House had shown the absence of a quorum, would the Speaker hold himself bound by that?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was not the case. The Chair is deciding on the facts as they do exist, not on hypothetical questions.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. There are not 50 Republicans in the House at this moment, as an actual fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will continue the reading. The Chair recognized the gentleman for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will not the Chair recognize the gentleman to make the point of no quorum when he sees that no quorum is present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen will be in order. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House disagree to said amendments en bloc and agree to the conference asked by the Senate?

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee demanded a division.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 181, nay 1, answered "present" 13, not voting 156; as follows:

So the motion to disagree to the Senate amendments was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. EVANS with Mr. ELLIOTT.

On this vote:

Mr. GILL with Mr. FEELY.

Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. SMITH of Kentucky.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. LLOYD.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following conferees on the part of the House—Mr. SHATTUC, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. ROBB.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill of the Senate (S. 7414) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, etc., insist on the amendments of the House thereto, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska moves to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill 7414, to suspend the rules, insist on the amendments of the House, and agree to the conference asked.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MERCER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee objects. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. MERCER, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. RICHARDSON, as tellers.

The House divided; and tellers reported—ayes 149, noes 10.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MERCER. I make the point of order that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point. Every vote to-day has disclosed the presence of a quorum, and the last vote, only a moment ago, disclosed the presence of a quorum. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska to control the time upon his side.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a request from the Senate for a conference, the Senate having nonconcurred in the House amendments to the Senate bill. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I could not hear what the gentleman said.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska reserves the balance of his time. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, there is a matter to which I would like to call the attention of the House, because I believe the House would like to know something in regard to what it has been doing for the last day or two. The way in which we are legislating here we only find out when the legislation is over what has been enacted. I do not suppose a member of the House knows, or at least only those who were engaged in the conference know, that yesterday we increased here in the District of Columbia the cost of street lighting by oil lamps on the citizens of the District from $20 to $24. And we cut down the requirements of the law as to the candlepower of gas from 25 to 22 candlepower without reducing the price, and we did that notwithstanding the fact that it was shown in this House last year that the company had never paid less than 10 per cent on its capital. It started with a capital stock of only a few hundred thousand dollars—less than half a million—it increased it to more than two and a half millions. For many years it declared dividends of from 40 to 50 per cent, and in one year it declared two dividends of a little less than 100 per cent on the capital stock; and yet for that company, making that enormous amount of money, yesterday the conferees provided for reducing the requirements of the law and thereby increasing the profits of the company.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if the House would investigate a little, if it were permitted under the rules which we are passing here from day to day and changing from hour to hour to suit the occasion, to investigate these questions, that there would be a little less hurry in this legislation that comes before the House. Not only that, but a great deal of this legislation is put upon this bill in conference without an opportunity for either this House or the other legislative body to pass upon and consider the legislation. They are brought back here and, under the provisions that you bring in by these special rules, they are rushed through under a pell-mell vote. Members on the other side are obliged to follow the leaders like a flock of sheep, without even time to find out what is in the proposition. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

If the exercise of our constitutional privileges prevents you rushing through any such legislation, then we are performing a public duty; if it forces you to call an extra session, we will take our share of the responsibility. We can kill nothing but the private raids on the Treasury. The needed legislation, such as the Littlefield bill, the statehood bill, the much-needed tariff revision, the regulation of railroad rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission, you have already killed.

I want to call the attention of the Chair and the attention of the House to some of the precedents that you are making here for the benefit of future legislation. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, it is easy enough for the Chair, with the majority, having the brutal power behind you, and determined to use it as brutally as you may, it is easy enough to ride roughshod over the minority; but the precedents that the Chair makes go into the RECORD and stand forever there to haunt you in the hereafter. There will come a time, sooner or later, as you all know, when the Republican party will not be in the majority in this House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Thank God! [Loud applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. COWHERD (continuing). And it behooves you as honorable men, as conservative men, as men desiring, at least in the establishment of precedents, that shall your action result in the end in the preservation and not the destruction of representative government, it behooves you to consider somewhat, Mr. Speaker, not the fleeting triumph of the moment in the record that your party is making here, but the precedent that is to stand against you when it may be that we or some other party shall follow you in the control of this House.

I refer not alone to the precedent you establish of turning out a man elected by 6,000 majority, elected, not in a State or in a city where elections are what you call contaminated with the negro vote, but elected in a city north of Mason and Dixon's line, elected in a city under election laws as fair, and I venture to say it with the laws in my desk of practically every Northern State, with election laws as fair as any in any State of this Union. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Overturning the will of the people, turning him out not only with this enormous majority, but without reading the testimony and practically without a hearing, and overturning your own rules and the Constitution of the United States in order to do it. I call your attention to that precedent, a precedent of anarchy and revolution, that you are setting before us, and I beg that my party, when it reaches power, shall refuse to take advantage of this infamous precedent that your party is making. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But I want to call attention to the fact that you are going further still. The other day I made the point of order that a conference committee, without authority, in direct violation of the rules of the House, had seen fit to put new matter, new legislation, into an appropriation bill. The Chair promptly overruled the point of order. I want, in order that it may go into the RECORD, to call the attention of the House to that ruling, and I hope that, too, will not become a precedent; for, if it does, not even the great chairman of the Appropriations Committee, either in the chair or on the floor, can save the Treasury of the United States from the raid and looting that is to result from the precedent you have established.

There was a bill here making appropriations for the District of Columbia. On that bill the House appropriated a certain amount of money to carry on the work of the filtration plant. The Senate raised that appropriation $200,000, and put in a provision that the work should be completed by the 1st of December. Now, mark you, by a law duly enacted Congress has heretofore declared that the filtration plant should not cost above $2,768,405.

The appropriations neither of the House nor of the Senate changed that existing law nor increased it beyond the limit fixed by the law then on the statute books. It was the law of the land. The bill went into conference, and the conference committee, without authority from either House or Senate, in direct violation of the rules of this body, changed the existing law and raised the limit of cost $700,000. The point of order was made upon it, and it was admitted by the gentlemen who had charge of the bill on the floor of the House that the limit of cost had been raised $700,000, and yet that point of order was overruled that you might continue to ride roughshod over the minority. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Yes, and upon an appeal from the decision of the Chair—and I submit that such an appeal no Speaker ought to refuse, because the Speaker should have recognized that any member had a right to question such a ruling—that appeal was denied, and we were refused the poor privilege of passing upon the ruling of the Chair. And yet that is one of the precedents you are making in these closing days in order to continue doing business, as you claim, under the rules.

Here is another one. There was an appropriation in this bill for $12,000 for paving according to a schedule submitted by the Commissioners of the District, in a certain portion of the city. The Senate raised it $41,000. This was the only amendment made to the paragraph. And then they went into conference on what? I ask you gentlemen fairly and honestly on what did they go into conference? Whether it should be $12,000 or $41,000, the disagreeing vote between the two Houses. What did they do? They went into conference and put in a piece of legislation affecting, not this appropriation, because this appropriation is for the next fiscal year, but this piece of legislation provided that hereafter in the years that are to come in making their estimates the Commissioners of the District of Columbia should follow a certain course and pursue a certain plan. Was not that new legislation?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. COWHERD. I appeal to you gentlemen, not here in the heat of passion, not determined to ride over the minority regardless of what the laws may be by which you accomplish your purpose, but I appeal to you as legislators who must be confronted with the record you make, who must remember that some other party and some other Speaker will be entitled to take the precedents you establish as a club some time and apply them to your own heads; I appeal to you, is there any man in this body that can support such a ruling? And yet when I ask the poor privilege given to me under the rules you have established of appealing from that decision simply in order to present it to the House, for I did not believe this House, upon a fair presentation, would care to make such a precedent, the appeal was ruled out of order that you might go on doing business under what you call rules, the rules that you yourselves are only too eager to disobey. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, history records that we have a republican form of government; but the evidence of it is not found in the House of Representatives. This House has been governed with a rod of iron, under the sanction of these iron rules. This is not a survival of the fittest, but a triumph of the powerful. History records that we have a republican form of government; but, sir, under these drastic rules, we find a majority of the majority scourged in conscience and in action with the party lash, and party fealty making cowards of you all, while this House exists only as a relic of a proud and historic form of people's government, intended by our fathers to have been transmitted to their posterity. This situation, so depressing to independent manhood, so dangerous to the country, is known throughout the land—is the daily subject of comment in the press, in the coordinate branch of Congress, and in this House; yet those who have the power hesitate; they raise their hands, but they have not the courage to strike the blow.

On the discussion of the election contest the other day the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], in his remarks, challenged a denial and dispute of the proposition that he in his opening argument presented; and on four successive occasions, by the power lodged in his hands by this tyrannical majority of the House, he refused an opportunity for answer—refused time for discussion, after his challenge had been thrown down. He mentioned the St. Louis Republic as being in favor of some proposition that supported his contention. And now I propose to have read an extract from that paper that he may know the result of the action of the majority of his committee—a majority that was not a majority, for the gentleman from Maine never attended a session of that committee, I am speaking of open sessions, for all were open save two hours—and he does not give his approval to this majority report unseating Mr. Butler, and another member, the gentleman from New York, never attended an open meeting, and he did not have the opportunity to attend, being prevented by sickness. And I believe he has not read the evidence in this case, and I ask him to rise up and deny my statement. He was not present before the committee during its open sessions. I say that there are but two members of the Elections Committee majority who read any considerable portion of the evidence in that case. And yet we have the spectacle of this House unseating a member—trampling upon the right of Missouri to representation. I want to have this article read by the Clerk, to show the answer that the St. Louis Republic of February 28 gives to the action of the majority on this side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following:

WANTONNESS OF POWER.

By unseating James Butler the House of Representatives has committed a high-handed outrage upon Missouri, a deprivation of the right of representation and self-government.

Manifestly a juggling with fact and principle, the act is peculiarly susceptible of explanation. A simple analysis leads irresistibly and inevitably to the conclusion that the House was actuated solely by ulterior partisan motives in the exercise of an arbitrary and despotic power, and that it resorted to a base subterfuge to conceal a crime against fundamental rights of the people of Missouri.

But having heard the contest and discovered that Butler had been fairly elected, a conclusion which the legal evidence—facts well known to every person familiar with local affairs—could not fail to prove beyond a quibble, the House might still have excluded him upon the ground that he was not acceptable in person.

But the House wanted to be rid of Butler for political reasons. His case was prejudged. It had been decided long before the testimony was even begun in St. Louis. It had been decided by Republican politicians. In Washington the men who sat upon it were not Representatives in a judicial capacity determining the rights of an official delegated to serve by the people. They were star-chamber politicians, subverting the rights of the minority party and perpetrating a practical disfranchisement of Missouri voters; they committed an abuse of power, opportunists taking undue advantage of a numerical majority to oppress merely because they could, and prostituting the high delegated powers of the nation's people to mean partisan ends.

Had there been other than an unworthy partisan motive for ousting Butler, undoubtedly their considerations would have had to do with the question of qualification, and their action would have had reference to that question. But by expressly excluding him upon the so-called "evidence" adduced they are not exercising a high prerogative, the privilege of determining the character of members, but are practicing a mere ruse designed to cover up the political reason, adopting the only sure way of filching a seat from the minority and appropriating it themselves under cover of technical false records.

Wagoner was not elected. Every Republican in St. Louis knows it. The gangsters of both parties operated in common in the Twelfth district and were about equal in number. Their combined numbers, however, if subtracted from Butler's actual majority, would have been insufficient to change the result. These truths are as patent to Congress as to the average St. Louisian.

The Twelfth district is entitled to representation. The House has taken away its right. Wagoner does not represent its voters. The crime is against Missouri's right of self-government, suffered because Missouri's political complexion differs from that of the ruling power in Congress. It is the basest of offenses, wholly repugnant to the people's institutions and going deeply to the fundamentals of government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (before the reading of the article was concluded). The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield the remainder of my time—three minutes, I believe——

Several MEMBERS. Let the rest of the article be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I promised some time to the gentleman from New York. If he does not wish to use it, I ask the Clerk to complete the reading of the article just sent to the desk.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the article.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. This is the evidence of a paper uniformly against Mr. Butler; and it shows the sentiment created by the arbitrary and unjustifiable action of the House.

Now, if there is any member of the majority of Elections Committee No. 2 who desires to stand up in my time and say that he has read this evidence through, I give him the opportunity now to do so; and I pause for that purpose.

Mr. OLMSTED. How many minutes have I? I should like to occupy that time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] then, as I understand, is one such member. Let us have another.

A MEMBER (on the Democratic side). He does not say that he has read the evidence.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am still waiting for any member of the committee to stand up and say that he has read this evidence so as to be able to pass upon it judicially.

Mr. MILLER rose.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] is another.

A MEMBER (on the Democratic side). He does not say that he has read the evidence.

Mr. MILLER. How much time——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield for the statement of any member of the committee that he has read this evidence through.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, during the last three or four days we have heard so many complaints and so many charges made by the minority of this House that it seems to me it is entirely proper that we should look at the situation—the situation that has led to the events that have been so seriously criticised.

A few days ago, near the end of the session—at a time when there were nearly or quite forty reports from conference committees awaiting final action—action upon which much of the legislation of this House heretofore had was dependent—when nine of the great supply bills were still either undergoing amendment in the other House, or were in the hands of conference committees, necessitating action, imperative and final, with regard to those bills—action that must be had, or else the wheels of the Government stop for want of supplies—at that time it was rumored that there was to be a report for action from the Committee on Elections No. 2. At once what was the attitude of the Democratic party in this House? Without waiting, they at once announced the threat—their threat—that if the majority saw fit to consider that case, they would then prevent by every means possible all of that action necessary to complete the legislation of this session. That was the threat that you made.

When the report was brought in, immediately their tactics of delay were begun. You announced that there should be no vote without a roll call—that there should be no business save by an active majority—that at all times there should be a quorum. In other words, you took the position upon yourselves of stopping legislation, so far as you could, if the majority saw fit to legislate as their consciences should direct. [Applause on the Republican side.] That was your attitude. Now you complain. You say that there is not that deliberation, that attention given to business that should be given. We are all willing to admit that. No one denies that. Who is responsible?

Mr. GILBERT. You are.

Mr. HEPBURN. If there is not more of debate, who is responsible? [Cries of "You!" on the Democratic side.] Certainly the minority. You are the responsible parties. We would infinitely prefer, infinitely, to use that time in appropriate discussion which you compel us to use in calling the yeas and nays. [Applause on the Republican side.] Day before yesterday you compelled us to consume seven and one-half hours in calling yeas and nays. There was no necessity for any one of those roll calls, for in nearly every instance you yourselves voted for the bills. [Applause on the Republican side.] I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is time that the country knew how these gentlemen are deporting themselves. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] It is time the attention of the country was called to the wasteful and prodigal manner in which they are spending the precious moments, the last moments of this session.

Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt but that the gentlemen are dissatisfied with the rules of this House. Why? Because they compell you to act, and I tell you, gentlemen, you can fritter away all of the time possible, but I warn you that the legislation is to be had. We are going to have all that is necessary; we are going to hold you up to your own positions, and all of these efforts of yours, I warn you now, are to be abortive. The legislation is to be had. It may be inconvenient to many of us. It may be that it will be less pleasant than otherwise it would be, but you have got to take your medicine, gentlemen. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.] We do not intend to allow you, rebellious as you are, to frustrate our purposes in completing the wholesome legislation of this session. Mark that. [Applause on Republican side, and cries of "How about the unwholesome legislation?" on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BURLESON. Let us make it an extra session.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the rules of this House [laughter on the Democratic side]—and I want here to say that I am especially aggrieved by the action of these gentlemen, for I have for a long time been complaining of the severity and rigor of the rules as they have been adopted [laughter], and especially do I dislike being compelled in the public service and in order that righteousness may prevail to force upon you other rules that are still more hateful to my sensibilities. [Laughter.] Therefore I have a personal quarrel with you because of your procedure—that you have insisted upon imposing this undesirable duty upon us.

But after all, Mr. Speaker, the rules that I would complain of are not the rules that we have been compelled to insist upon here. They are rules which you gentlemen yourselves have participated in enacting. [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the Democratic side.] In substance, at least. You complain of the arbitrary procedure of the Speaker in ruling upon dilatory motions. Have you not aided in investing that officer with that power? [Cries of "No!" on the Democratic side.] Undoubtedly you have, and it was exercised in the Fifty-third Congress. Have you not aided in giving to the Committee on Rules all of the seemingly arbitrary powers that it has at any time indulged in? [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the Democratic side.] Surely you have. Every rule, every thing that you complain of, all of the rulings that you complain of, you yourselves have been parties to in times past. [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the Democratic side.]

You are now exceedingly fearful of precedent. You are very fearful that we are creating precedent which at some time may affect the virtue of that possible majority which you hope, you tell us, some time to have in this House. [Laughter on the Republican side.] But, gentlemen, if there is peril in precedent, it is a peril that now you are suffering from, because that which you complain of is in harmony with precedent; that which you now decry is but the following of the example which you have established, a precedent that you have enacted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has just expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to say anything further in this case, but the remarks just made lead me to break that resolution.

The Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri, embracing 116 election precincts, extends across the city of St. Louis from east to west, embracing some of the most respectable and some of the most disreputable portions of that city.

In 53 precincts, undisputed, uncontroverted, admitted by both sides, WAGONER had 2,053 majority. In 41 precincts there was in every one of them such fraud, every conceivable kind of crime against the elective franchise, false registration, false personation of voters, stuffing of the ballot box, robbing of the ballot box, duplication of ballots, and false return of ballots that it was impossible for any man to ascertain the honest vote, if there was any honest vote in those precincts.

We therefore cast out those 41 precincts, following the precept and example set us in a case to which I desire to call attention. It is Finley against Bisbee (1 Ellsworth, 74) in the Forty-fifth Congress, where it was held—

That where the result at a poll is shown by the returns to be false and fraudulent, and it is impossible to ascertain from the other evidence in the case the true vote of said poll, the vote of said poll must be entirely rejected.

That report was signed by Judge Thomas W. Cobb, of Indiana, John T. Harris, of Virginia, Milton A. Candler, of Mississippi, E. John Ellis, of Louisiana, William M. Springer, of Illinois, Jere N. Williams, of Indiana, and adopted by a Democratic Congress, presided over by Samuel J. Randall as Speaker. That report was indorsed by John G. Carlisle. It has been the law from that day to this, followed by Congress, by courts, and by State legislatures. It fitted here exactly.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not yield until I finish my statement.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are you talking about the Philadelphia election?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee is not in order.

Mr. OLMSTED. Any man in Philadelphia perpetrating such crimes would have gone to the penitentiary within thirty days. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Which would have reduced your Republican majority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When the gentleman from Tennessee desires to interrupt a member, he will first address the Chair.

Mr. OLMSTED. Many of the perpetrators of these crimes in St. Louis are under indictment there to-day. In addition to these 41 precincts thus rejected there were 22 in controversy. One gave a small majority for WAGONER. The others gave majorities for Butler. WAGONER'S counsel contended that they should be thrown out. The committee, not agreeing with him, retained them, reducing WAGONER'S majority to 767, on account of which majority he was seated in this House.

Now, one word as to partisanship. There have been twelve contests in this Republican Congress. Every one of them save two has resulted favorably to the Democrats. If that is partisanship, make the most of it. These gentlemen are sitting upon that side of the Chamber to-day as the result of our action in committee and the action of this Republican House.

Mr. RUCKER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. Are the gentlemen referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania entitled to sit here or not?

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, I will say that as to some of them we had serious doubts; but as the evidence did not clearly prove a case against them, we found in their favor.

Mr. RUCKER. That is, you graciously permitted them to stay here, as I understand.

Mr. PAYNE. No; he gave you the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. OLMSTED. No; we gave you the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. RUCKER. May I ask the gentleman another question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will yield to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. I will ask you if you or your committee made the least effort on earth to ascertain what legal votes were cast in that district?

Mr. OLMSTED. Why, Mr. Speaker, I personally sat up nights, days, and Sundays. I went over and compared every vote as recorded from the ballot box, every poll book kept at the polls, and I say it is impossible for any man to say what the honest vote was, because ballots were literally abstracted that the poll book showed to have been cast. Nobody could tell, for they were not there.

Mr. RUCKER. I will ask the gentleman if he does not know that a nonbiased man would have found scores and hundreds of honest votes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri must wait until the gentleman yields to him.

Mr. OLMSTED. It was absolutely impossible on account of the frauds that had been perpetrated for any living man to tell what honest vote had been cast in any one of these 41 precincts. Let me give you one instance. In one precinct 434 people had voted. Not one of their addresses was given in the poll books required by law to be made at the polls as the voting progresses by entering the name, address, and number of the ballot of each man who votes, and the evidence showed that the poll book was made up two days after the election. Three hundred and forty ballots found in the box, including 73 duplicates, bore Butler's name. The judges gave him 392.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. VANDIVER. The gentleman's apology is not accepted. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] desires time.

I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that this situation reminds me of a story I once heard about two sailors. [Cries of "Oh, do not tell it!" and cries of "Tell it!"] Mr. Speaker, it is really a good story [laughter], and before I attempt to say anything about it I desire to call your attention to the fact that we are discussing or supposed to be discussing the propriety of having this omnibus public-building bill go into conference. The election contest has been settled. Drop it. Now, if any gentleman cares to hear my story, come with me to the cloakroom when this resolution passes. I yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I am going to occupy the time of the House just two minutes. I desire the members of the House to know——

Mr. SULZER. Louder.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is out of order. The House will please be in order. A reasonable degree of order will permit all gentlemen to hear every gentleman who speaks.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I wish the House to know, Republicans as well as Democrats, that the position taken by the Democratic minority upon the Wagoner-Butler contest is at variance with the position taken by the reputable Democrats of the city of St. Louis and the reputable Democrats of the Twelfth district of Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I shall not yield.

Mr. RUCKER. No reputable Democrat has authorized you to speak for him. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I speak for a good many of them. They wash their hands of the colossal frauds which have been perpetrated in that district, and claim that the Democratic party of the city of St. Louis and the State of Missouri is not responsible for those frauds and crimes. [Loud applause on the Republican side.] The position of the Democratic minority here makes them shoulder the responsibility for these crimes and these frauds, and you really identify yourselves with them before the country.

Mr. KLUTTZ. That does not justify the rulings of the Chair. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There has been no attempt made, Mr. Speaker, on the part of any one of the five Democratic daily newspapers in the city of St. Louis to go into the merits of that case, not even the paper said to be controlled and owned by the father of the contestee. Not one of these papers has denied that ten or fifteen thousand fraudulent names had been placed upon the registration lists.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can not yield.

Mr. RUCKER. I just wanted to say these newspapers are like the Elections Committee.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. You can make your speech in your own time. I say from what I know of this case, Mr. Speaker, and I think I know many of the details, that there has never been such a contest before the House, and I hope the proceedings that have been enacted here during the last two or three days will result in making it a national issue.

Several MEMBERS on the Democratic side. It will.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If it is made a national issue and an election is to be held upon that issue, I predict that the Democratic minority will barely elect a corporal's guard. [Loud applause on the Republican side, and jeers and laughter on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon suspending the rules and agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska to disagree to the Senate amendments and to agree to the conference asked.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask for a division.

Mr. PAYNE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 225, nays 14, answered "present" 13, not voting 99; as follows:

The following conferees were appointed on the part of the House: Mr. MERCER, Mr. GILLET of New York, and Mr. BANKHEAD.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PENROSE, Mr. FAIRBANKS, Mr. LODGE, Mr. CLAY, and Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DELEGATE TO UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FROM PORTO RICO.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following bill, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17546) to provide for a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States from Porto Rico.

Be it enacted, etc., That the qualified voters of Porto Rico shall, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, 1904, and every two years thereafter, elect a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, whose term of office shall commence on the 4th day of March next succeeding the date of his election. Such Delegate shall have a seat in the House of Representatives, with the right to debate, but not to vote, and shall be entitled to the same compensation for salary and other allowances and to the same rights and priviliges as the Delegates from the Territories of the United States. No person shall be eligible to such election who is not a bona fide citizen and voter of Porto Rico, who is not 25 years of age, and who does not read and write the English language.

SEC. 2. That the Delegate herein provided for shall be elected in lieu of the resident commissioner from Porto Rico to the United States, provided for by section 39 of the act of Congress entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900: Provided, That all the provisions of this act shall apply to the present resident commissioner from Porto Rico to the United States.

SEC 3. That all act and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as tellers Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin and Mr. UNDERWOOD.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 2.

A second was therefore ordered.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, this bill, excepting two slight amendments, was originally reported from the Committee on Insular Affairs on the 20th of May last. The report was unanimous. It provides for the election of a Delegate from Porto Rico to the House of Representatives, that Delegate not to have the right to vote here, but to have the right to speak here, and to have other privileges accorded under the law to Delegates from the Territories of the United States. It makes provision also that the act, if the bill becomes an act, shall be applicable to the present resident commissioner from Porto Rico to the United States.

Under the Government of Spain, Porto Rico elected 16 representatives to the Chamber of Deputies and four to the Senate of the Spanish Cortes.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. For a question.

Mr. GILBERT. From the reading of this bill, it appears that the present resident commissioner from Porto Rico is to act as Delegate until the expiration of the Fifty-seventh Congress, which expires on the 4th of March next. The bill further provides that the Delegate hereafter to be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1902, and every two years thereafter. There appears to be an interregnum between the Fifty-seventh Congress and the next election as provided for under the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, I will say that the bill which was read from the Clerk's desk is amended by striking out of line 5 of section 1 the word "two" where it first appears; so that the language now reads "the election of 1904;" and that it is further amended in line 20 of page 2 by striking out the words "whose term of office is hereby extended to the date of the expiration of the Fifty-seventh Congress," these words being unnecessary, as the present resident commissioner, now here, has been re-elected to the Fifty-eighth Congress.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, when interrupted, Porto Rico elected 16 representatives to the Spanish Chamber of Deputies and 4 to the Senate of the Spanish Cortes. The present resident commissioner, with whom I think the great majority, if not all the membership, of the House are well acquainted, was himself elected from Porto Rico as a delegate to the Spanish Cortes, and was a member of that body on the breaking out of the war between this country and Spain.

Porto Rico has 1,000,000 inhabitants. It is, I think, forever to belong to the United States of America. Its people are industrious and law-abiding. They are now prosperous and exceedingly desirous that they shall be treated on this floor as are the people of the Territories of the United States. There is no reason in the opinion of the Insular Committees, nor do I think there ought to be any reason in the mind of any person who reflects upon the subject, why Hawaii, with less than 200,000 people, should have a Delegate entitled to speak for her on this floor, while Porto Rico, with her 1,000,000 people, is denied that privilege.

To-day the resident commissioner from Porto Rico is obliged to consult members of the House in their rooms at hotels or boarding houses, in the lobby of the House, or do the best he can in a whispered consultation on the floor. Under all the circumstances the Committee on Insular Affairs were unanimously of the opinion that this bill ought to pass, and I sincerely hope that it will pass without opposition from our friends on the other side.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment before he takes his seat?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the gentleman's position, that Porto Rico ought to have, as the other Territories have, a Delegate on this floor. I want to supplement that remark by saying that instead of this demand being unjust or premature, I think it has only been too long delayed and that Porto Rico ought to have this Delegate according to the provisions of the bill now presented.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent that she may be allowed a Delegate?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; I think the usual procedure is being pursued, under the "Reed rules."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] controls the time for twenty minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Republican side of the House that in the expiring hours of this Congress they are at last willing to do justice to one of our colonies. I wish to call their attention to the fact that when the first bill was passed creating a colonial government in Porto Rico, the Democratic party on the floor of this House insisted that the people of Porto Rico should have a Delegate on this floor to look after their interests and attend to their business. It is true that it has taken four long years for the Republican party to wake up to the fact of the injustice that they were doing those people; but we now congratulate you on the fact that you have at last consented to come to the position taken by the Democratic party four years ago.

Mr. TAWNEY rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman explain why he longer delays the granting of this right to Porto Rico by the speech which he is just now making?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, simply from the fact that the people of the United States are entitled to some extent to know the legislation that the Republican party is "railroading" through this Congress, and when we have an opportunity to explain what legislation is going on and what you are doing, we propose to let the country know, by the records of this Congress, what is being done in these last hours.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman in favor of this bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am.

Mr. MANN. Then I make the point of order that the gentleman is not entitled to control the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And I make the point of order that that comes too late.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; there was no way of finding out the gentleman's position until he declared himself. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope that this interruption is not coming out of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the rules provide that forty minutes for debate on a motion to suspend the rules shall be divided equally between those in favor of the motion and those opposed. The gentleman from Alabama now states that he is in favor of this bill; and I raise the point of order that he is not entitled to control the time in opposition to it.

Mr. HAY. I raise the point of order that the point of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is "dilatory." [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker —

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will suspend. When this matter was called up the gentleman from Alabama demanded a second, which was his privilege. Presumably he is on the other side of the question. But now, after he has addressed the House for some little time, the gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that the gentleman from Alabama is not opposed to the bill and should not be allowed to represent the side in oppostion to it. While the Chair has not had an opportunity to listen to the argument of the gentleman from Alabama, the presumption is that he is opposed to the bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman stated a moment ago that he was in favor of the bill. It is not a question of argument.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will suspend a moment. It seems this argument has been going on, and now, after the argument has thus far advanced, the point of order is made. While the Chair is not entirely satisfied with the ruling, he will be compelled to hold that the objection comes too late, and will allow the gentleman from Alabama to control the twenty minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will say that there are others to whom I intend to yield the time. I was merely voicing my own opinion on this question. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, yesterday when the District appropriation bill was under consideration I attempted to secure two minutes from the gentleman in charge of that bill. It was not my purpose at that time to attempt to discuss the report before the House. Rather, I had intended to explain why it was impossible for me to submit some remarks pertaining to one branch of the government of the District of Columbia which I desired to present to the House. When the District of Columbia appropriation bill was before the House in Committee of the Whole an item was taken from the bill on a point of order raised by myself. I have too great respect for this House to have it trifle with me in its present mood, and for that reason I do not at this time purpose discussing some of the vicious features of the District government which I had intended to.

I have been for some time gathering information and statistics regarding one feature of the District government. I have them here. If it were possible to have this House consider in an impartial and judicial manner the things that I have collated regarding the efficiency of the police department in the District of Columbia, I would be pleased to present them to the House. At some other time, when members have the time and will take the time to consider these matters, I will present them to the House. I do not charge that the police department of the District, as an entire force, is either corrupt or inefficient, but I have reason to believe, Mr. Speaker, from the information at my command, that under its present head it is not only inefficient, but, I am inclined to believe, in some aspects very corrupt.

The District Committee increased the salary of the chief of police of the District without a recommendation from the Commissioners. They disagreed to an item placed in the bill by the Senate increasing the salaries of the 10 lieutenants of police to an amount which did not require $100 a year for that entire increase more in addition to the amount provided for the chief's salary. The House conferees insisted on a provision of the bill which legislated out of office the present chief of the fire department because he had no previous experience in any organized fire department in the country, while they permitted a different rule to apply in respect to the chief of police. I do not intend to comment at this time upon these facts, but I wish to put upon notice those who are interested, for various reasons, in the welfare of the present chief of police of this District, that in the fullness of time—and there are several sessions of Congress at which I expect to be present—with what matter I may secure additional to the little volume I have here regarding the effectiveness of this force, I will present these facts to the House and to the country, and I am quite convinced——

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. PEARRE. May I ask the gentleman when he began this investigation of the efficiency of the superintendent of police of the District of Columbia?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; the gentleman may ask that.

Mr. PEARRE. Will the gentleman answer it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. PEARRE. When?

Mr. FITZGERALD. About the adjournment of the last session of Congress.

Mr. PEARRE. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. PEARRE. What was the gentleman's motive in making that inquiry?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The same motive that prompts the gentleman in the discharge of his duty.

Mr. PEARRE. Was there no personal motive?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not particularly.

Mr. PEARRE. May I not ask the gentleman whether he did not run counter——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask the gentleman from Alabama to yield me a minute or two to answer these questions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield the time.

Mr. PEARRE. May I ask the gentleman whether he did not run counter to that superintendent of police in the proper performance of his duty upon inauguration day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all. The chief of police ran counter to the gentleman from New York in the improper discharge of his duty after inauguration had passed. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEARRE. Then I assume the gentleman from New York believed that he was controlling the police force of the city of Washington at that time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman mean me when he says "he?"

Mr. PEARRE. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; the gentleman's assumption is so erroneous that I could not take time to explain his misapprehension.

Mr. PEARRE. This same gentleman was superintendent of police at that time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Undoubtedly. He has been for four years, as the gentleman knows better than I do.

Mr. PEARRE. Was not the gentleman stopped by a police officer in crossing the street?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Unquestionably.

Mr. PEARRE. And did not that make the gentleman very indignant?

Mr. FITZGERALD. At that time; yes.

Mr. PEARRE. Is not that the motive for this investigation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, not at all. The motive that prompted me was the fact that the chief of police of this city, in the carrying out of a threat, maliciously and falsely uttered an interview in a public print in my city which, at the time he did utter it, he knew to be false. And it was done for the purpose, as he imagined, of injuring me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's additional time has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I dislike to disagree with a colleague upon a question of this sort, but I want to say that the superintendent of police of the city of Washington discharges his duties with as much ability as any man in this country. [Applause.] He is a gentleman who is incapable of being guilty of any charges which the gentleman from New York may hereafter be able to bring against him. The gentleman certainly has not brought any against him yet, and this attack by innuendo is, in my opinion, not worthy of the gentleman from New York. Now, the gentleman says that he has a reason for it, because the superintendent of police gave out an interview to a newspaper. I say upon the authority of Major Sylvester that he never gave out any such interview, and that if any such interview appeared it was a fabrication, and that he informed the gentleman from New York of the fact, and yet the gentleman from New York now makes that charge upon this floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the denial of the authenticity of the interview did not come until the chief of police feared that an increase of his salary would not be granted?

Mr. HAY. I am not aware of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I assert to the gentleman that that is a fact.

Mr. HAY. And I will say to the gentleman that the superintendent of police was not aware of the publication of that interview until the gentleman from New York brought it out for the purpose of keeping down the salary of the superintendent of police, even when the superintendent of police had not asked to have his salary increased.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will state to the gentleman that the information that that interview had been issued was brought to the knowledge of the chief of police within at the latest two weeks from the time that he himself gave it out, and I know what I am speaking of, and the gentleman speaks from hearsay purely.

Mr. HAY. I do not. I speak from the same sort of hearsay that the gentleman from New York does.

Mr. RYAN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HAY. Oh, yes.

Mr. RYAN. Is it not a fact that this purported interview did appear in a Brooklyn paper?

Mr. HAY. Yes; it is a fact, I believe.

Mr. RYAN. Is it not a fact that the opportunity has been denied this gentleman [Mr. FITZGERALD] to prove positively that that interview emanated from the superintendent of the District police?

Mr. HAY. It is not a fact that the superintendent of the District police had any opportunity whatever to know it. He did not know it when it appeared there. He can not read every newspaper in the United States, nor can any of us do it.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman understands that within two weeks after it appeared his attention was called to it.

Mr. HAY. If it was, it was denied at the time. I am authorized by the gentleman to say so. Now, I say, Mr. Speaker, that if there is an attack to be made upon a public official of the Government, it should be made and proofs brought. The gentleman from New York went so far as to say that the police department of this city was corruptly administered. That is a very severe charge. It is a charge which should not be brought unless the gentleman is ready now with his proofs; and I say from my knowledge of the superintendent of police that a more high-minded gentleman, a man of more integrity, a gentleman upon whom any member of this House can more implicitly rely for any statement which he may make, there is none. And I say moreover that I am sorry that the gentleman from New York should have ever brought this matter into this House; because while we can all understand that the gentleman from New York was very much enraged on the occasion of which he has spoken, we can not appreciate that he should bring the matter here.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] if he is going to consume any more time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I desire to close the debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has three minutes remaining.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as no discussion of the Butler case was allowed before Mr. Butler was turned out, in the three minutes which I have I wish to refer to that case very briefly. I want to call the attention of gentlemen on the other side to the fact that it is not a question of whether Mr. Butler or Mr. WAGONER was elected that has caused the complaint on this side of the House. But our protest is against the desperate methods used. We insist that when a member is elected to this House by 6,000 majority and comes here commissioned by the governor of his State, before turning him out he is entitled to a fair trial; and what you call the trial of the Butler case is as great a farce as was ever perpetrated in the House of Representatives, and you know it.

I shall not go into the merits of the case, for I can not say that I know any more about its merits than you gentlemen over there, who voted to turn him out without knowing anything about it. I admit the gentleman from Pennsylvania spent five or six days and nights, as he claims, studying this long and intricate case. But he must remember that it takes a very able lawyer to present in an intelligent manner a case like that in one hour to men who know nothing about it after he has taken one week to get an understanding of the case himself [applause on the Democratic side], and yet he says it was a very laborious case, and he came in here and in less than one hour presented to the House a case in which it required him several days and nights to read the evidence and I do not believe he claims he read it all. I took time to read the gentleman's speech—I had nothing else to engage myself with at that time, and I read it, and I find no evidence in it to justify throwing out 41 precincts, no evidence upon which to unseat Mr. Butler, except the mere conclusions of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

I do not wonder that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is very sensitive on the question of frauds, since he has a city in his own State that has made some reputation on that question. And in that connection I desire to have read from the Clerk's desk a paper which I send up.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I will read it hereafter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has fourteen minutes remaining.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, for the first time since this remarkable day began, now more than a hundred hours ago, I am going to give to the House a few moments of debate pertinent to the bill under consideration. [Applause.] I have been interested in the report on this bill, which recommends that the present commissioner from the colony of Porto Rico be given the power, privileges, and emoluments of a Delegate in the Congress of the United States. I can not but help contrast that meager allowance to the representative of nearly 1,000,000 people with the privileges which they enjoyed under the ancient and, as we are in the habit of saying, decaying and corrupt Kingdom of Spain.

In the Spanish Cortes the island of Porto Rico had 4 senators and 16 representatives, granted all the powers and privileges of all the other senators and representatives of that Kingdom. They had full power to vote, full power to actually represent their people. In exchange for that we concede them, or did concede them, first, the sorry privilege of having a commissioner to hang around the doors of this Chamber and send in his card and thus seek the privilege of conferring with a member of this House about the business of a million people, and that too while we claim that we are a representative Government. We have advanced with time, and now we propose to accord him the privilege of speaking upon the floor of this House, but all the privileges we give him fall far short of that which he enjoyed as a member in the Spanish Cortes. This is presumably a representative government. It is presumably a Government in which the people speak for themselves through representatives, a privilege which was given them by the Kingdom of Spain, and yet we deny it to them in this Government, which is supposedly a representative Government. He was there a full-fledged deputy. Here he is something which is neither fish, flesh, nor fowl—nor good red herring.

This report says that Porto Rico has nearly 1,000,000 inhabitants, and that its people are law-abiding and industrious.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen have kept familiar with the debates in the Senate with reference to the proposed admission of Arizona and New Mexico as States of this Union, they will find that in this report, if it is to be believed, the people of Porto Rico should enjoy all the rights which any other American people enjoy; and upon the standard laid down in the debates in the Senate by distinguished gentleman from Northern and Eastern States opposed to the admission of those Territories, Porto Rico is entitled, not to have a Delegate here who has no power to vote, no real power to represent his people, but is entitled to have five members in the House of Representatives and two Senators speaking in their interests in the Congress of the United States.

Are we going to continue to deny to these people the privileges accorded to people similarly situated in other parts of the American Union? How long will it be before the majority party of this country is courageous enough to meet the logic of its own position? How long will it be before they will stand up here and welcome the Delegates and Senators and Representatives in Congress from the Philippine Islands? This is true but tardy justice to the people of Porto Rico, and little as it does I shall favor it, and will gladly join hands with the gentleman from Wisconsin and other Representatives in doing the full measure of justice to these people. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I now yield four minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE].

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, I might perhaps crave the indulgence of the House to say a word or two about the matter the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has referred to by reason of the fact that I am a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, which recommended the increase of salary of the officer whose reputation and character are in controversy here. I asked the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, while he was talking upon this subject whether his motive in this matter was not a personal one, and whether it had not arisen from the fact that he had run foul of the police department in the proper exercise of its duty and its authority.

As I understand the case, sir—and it is thought that in the absence of the superintendent of the police that some one should state the facts in his defense—the gentleman from New York on Inauguration Day was attempting to cross Pennsylvania avenue when a police officer, stationed there with instructions not to permit anybody to cross at that place at that time, politely indicated to the gentleman from New York what his orders were, but the gentleman from New York imperiously suggested that he was a member of Congress, and claimed immunity from all rules and regulations established there at that time and place by the police department. That was the beginning of the difficulty, and that is what gave rise to the suggestion of an investigation by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has made a statement, and I think he ought to permit me to ask a respectful question.

Mr. PEARRE. What is it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to know whether the gentleman from Maryland ever read the trial of the officer he mentions for the occurrence about which he speaks?

Mr. PEARRE. I did not read the full account of the trial of the officer, and I should not have acted on a newspaper report if I had read it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman would read that report he would see that his statement is entirely at variance with the testimony of every single person that testified on that occasion.

Mr. PEARRE. The gentleman from New York has not vouchsafed to the House any statement of what occurred at that time, and would not admit that his motive was a personal one. The gentleman will not deny now——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I could not admit what was not true, and I respectfully decline to do so now.

Mr. PEARRE. The gentleman is guilty of a worse offense in concealing the truth from this House, especially when the gentleman knows the motive was a personal one.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The motives of gentlemen must not be impugned.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that when a gentleman is called to order he must take his seat.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The rules require, Mr. Speaker, that a gentleman when called to order for words spoken in debate should take his seat, and I insist on that rule being observed. The gentleman was called to order for words spoken in debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland will take his seat. The gentleman from Wisconsin——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maryland.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin can not do that. The gentleman from Maryland was admonished to take his seat, and if the gentleman from Wisconsin desires to proceed he can do so, but he can not yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RODEY].

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Speaker, there may be something pathetic in a Delegate from a Territory rising to say a word for a people that are applying for the mere privileges that Territories have—that is, a voice but not a vote in this House. I might say here, to the credit of this House, it treated the Territories at this session with all due regard and all due courtesy, for it did all it could to advance us to the enjoyment of our full rights. It is a meager privilege, indeed, to grant to the people of Porto Rico, and recollect there are over a million of them, the right to have a mere voteless Delegate on this floor, and to the beggarly method of the lobbyist in the other branch of this great Legislature.

If there is any measure in these closing days of this Congress that ought to be passed without a roll call, no matter what the minority may have determined in that regard, I submit to the members of this House that this is such a measure. A million people without any representation save such as the Porto Ricans now have was never heard of in the history of this country. It is un-American; it is ungenerous. If gentlemen here could but fully appreciate the position of a Delegate representing the people of a Territory on this floor and understand the position of a people represented in that way, there would be no hesitation in passing this bill by a rising vote.

I have but a moment of time, and therefore I desire at this time to thank the Members of this House sincerely for the courtesy they have extended to the Territorial Delegates in the great fight we have made for the rights of our people in this Congress. We have not spoken upon any subject that did not concern the Territories during the whole session, and considering that we have fought and lost, there may be something pathetic in my saying at this time a word for those people in Porto Rico who are in even a worse position than we are ourselves.

You have, however, done one thing for Porto Rico that you never did for the other Territories, and that is, you turned their own revenues into their own treasury for the purpose of their education; and in the course of ten years, with the large revenues derived in that way, all the rising generation there will have acquired the English language; then you will not, as has been done in some other cases, add insult to injury by unjustly charging them with ignorance and unfitness to share the blessings of this Union, brought about by your own neglect.

I say again that the granting to those people of the right of a Delegate to represent them on this floor is the very least privilege you can grant them. Remember there is on that island about a million of people—a much larger population than that of a good many of the States. As has been well said by the gentleman from Texas, they gave up the representation they had in the Spanish Cortes to come under our flag. They expected much of this Government; they have received but little. Their disappointment must be great. This bill is but an act of simple justice to them, and it ought to pass without a dissenting vote.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RODEY. I hope the bill will pass unanimously, and without a roll call.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has three minutes remaining.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to occupy only a minute at the end of the discussion; I am willing to yield the other two minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rose to a question of privilege. I desire to make a motion in behalf of the gentleman from Maryland, growing out of the ruling of the Chair against his right to continue his argument. I do not wish to interrupt the debate beyond stating the mere fact that I dislike that a member shall be excluded from the discussion pending the question now before the House. The member from Maryland was called to order for language used in debate. The gentleman from Maryland was called to order; and, under the ruling of the Chair, was very properly directed to take his seat, for the rules make it the duty of the Chair to make such order. Thereupon the member calling him to order did not proceed, as the rule provides, by asking that the language objected to be taken down and submitted to the action of the House. I now move that the gentleman from Maryland be allowed to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. That is a proper motion. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the gentleman from Maryland may be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to say that I made the point of order——

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to say that I did not intend to prevent the gentleman from Maryland from proceeding in order.

The motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, that Mr. PEARRE be allowed to proceed in order, was agreed to.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. How much time did the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, in the very short time allowed me, not having been permitted to consume the time originally granted me, I must hurry on. Whatever the details of this matter may be, the substantial fact is that there was a clash between the gentleman from New York and the police, and that that clash resulted in the trial of the officer, and his acquittal. Those, I believe, are substantially the facts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He was convicted——

Mr. PEARRE. I can not yield, especially as the gentleman and his party show such a disposition to shut out any light that may be thrown on this subject.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if as great a man as President Grant was stopped on one occasion by a police officer in the city of Washington, and he commended the man for carrying out his orders, I can see, under like circumstances, no detriment or humiliation to the dignity of the Representative from the city of Brooklyn in yielding the same respectful regard to the proper authority of the police in Washington City as that great man saw fit to yield.

Mr. Speaker, when this matter comes up again we may have further time to discuss it. It should never have been brought up in this House, because Major Sylvester, the superintendent of police, has no opportunity here to defend himself. The proper place for an investigation—the proper place for the presentation of these charges—was before the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. It was not right that a gentleman, feeling himself aggrieved, should come in here, where the other man is not able to make a defense, and make charges, even to the extent of corruption, against one of the best chiefs of police in the United States—a man who by reason of his incorruptibility, by reason of his courage, by reason of his skill in detective matters and police work, has been selected by the National Police Association as its chief and president. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has one minute remaining.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that no gentleman on the other side is opposed to this bill, and everyone on this side is in favor of it, I hope that it will be passed without a roll call.

The SPEAKER. The question is to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk has reported.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 207, nays 0, answered "present" 16, not voting 128; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its Reading Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12098) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for a right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska."

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended and that the bill (H. R. 15802) for the relief of certain homestead settlers in the State of Alabama be passed as amended by the committee, which amendment is in the form of a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the rules be suspended and that the following bill be passed with the committee amendments by way of a substitute. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15802) for the relief of certain homestead settlers in the State of Alabama.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any person, association, or corporation that has recovered, in any court of competent jurisdiction, the title to any land which is included in any homestead entry made on lands granted by the Congress of the United States to the State of Alabama to aid in the construction of the Mobile and Girard Railroad, or the Tennessee and Coosa Railroad, which recovery of said land was made or had by virtue of the title asserted and claimed by either of said railroad companies or its vendee, or successor in interest, shall execute a deed conveying all his or their interest in, or claim to, the land included in such homestead entry to the United States, and file the same with the Secretary of the Interior, such person, association, or corporation shall be entitled to receive from the Secretary of the Interior a certificate authorizing them or their assigns to enter, within one year from the issuance of such certificate, of the public lands of the United States in the State of Alabama, subject to homestead entry, an area equal to that contained in the tract so deeded and relinquished, and all certificates which have not been presented as a basis for the entry of a specific tract within one year of their issuance, as above, shall be void, and each and every certificate issued shall have plainly printed across the face thereof the date of its expiration.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe all necessary rules and regulations for the administration of this act.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri objects. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WILEY] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] will take their place as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 0.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized in favor of the bill.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration is an amendment, by way of substitute, for H. R. 15802, which I had the honor to introduce in the House on the 9th day of last December.

The lands involved in the bill under consideration form a part of a body of lands in alternate sections granted to the State of Alabama by an act of Congress to aid in the construction of railroads in that State, approved June 3, 1856. The two railroad companies mentioned in the bill were duly incorporated under the laws of the State of Alabama. The Tennessee and Coosa Railroad was partly finished and in operation prior to the month of September, 1890. Prior to January 1, 1890, the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company had completed a line of road from Girard to Troy, a distance of 84 miles. Up to that time the United States had not then taken any action to forfeit said land grant or to resume title to any of the public domain included therein.

The general assembly of Alabama passed an act, approved February 1, 1858, in pursuance of said act of Congress, accepting said grant in strict compliance with the terms and conditions prescribed therein. The lands in controversy (about 18,000 acres) are opposite to and coterminus with those parts of the railroad companies named in the bill, which were completed and in operation prior to the 29th day of September, 1890, the date of the act passed by Congress known as the "forfeiture act," reclaiming and reinvesting in the Federal Government title to all the lands embraced in the original grant beyond the limit of railway construction, but expressly confirming title in the railroads, or their vendees, to such alternate sections as were contiguous to those portions of the roads which were completed and in operation at the time of the passage of said "forfeiture act." Both of these railroad companies had, prior to September 29, 1890, sold to various persons all, or nearly all, of the lands granted to them by said act of Congress; so that for the purpose of properly considering the provisions of the pending measure we may safely assume that the railroads as corporations have been eliminated, and the problem now presented for solution is a question of law and equity between the vendees of the railroads on the one hand, and bona fide settlers on the other hand, who were encouraged to locate their homesteads on these reserved lands under a mistaken construction of said "forfeiture act."

This is the issue between the parties, clean cut and well defined.

This brief statement of the law and the facts is deemed necessary to a proper understanding of the merits of the pending bill.

The measure we are now considering grows out of a difference of interpretation which was put upon this "forfeiture act" of Congress by the Interior Department and the courts, both State and Federal. The Interior Department threw the door wide open and erroneously allowed about 18,000 acres of these reserved railroad lands, commonly designated as "earned lands," to be subjected to homestead entries, substantially an equal quantity belonging to each of these railroads or their vendees, and situate for the most part in the second, third, and seventh districts of the State.

These settlements were made in good faith, the settlers themselves paying the customary fees and charges incident to such entries and making final proof as required by the statute, and thereupon patents bearing the red seal of the Government, in many instances, were regularly issued to them. These confiding men and women, who had acted in good faith upon the invitation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington, and were encouraged in this alluring manner to buy their homes, believing they each held the best possible title from the greatest Government in the world, did not hesitate to make valuable and permanent improvements on the lands which they had thus entered. These homes thus acquired are the summum bonum of their earthly possessions—their domiciles, their castles—humble shelters for their wives and children; domestic hearthstones around which cluster the sweetest and tenderest memories of life.

Having located on what was advertised to be unappropriated and unreserved portions of the public domain, these "sons of toil," all unconscious of the black cloud of disaster slowly gathering in the skies, and which subsequently burst in fury upon their unprotected heads, went to work felling forests, building houses, cultivating fields, laboring to better their fortunes and to bring back the "olden and golden" prosperity which ought to abide in valley and on hillside, in the pure air of rustic life, and under the stimulus of rural industry. But misfortune, unexpected and therefore unprovided for, overtook and overwhelmed these peaceful and contented, these honest and unsuspecting settlers. The trouble came about in this way:

The vendees of the railroad companies, having secured a perfect title to these same lands by said "forfeiture act," were not content, of course, to give up their property without a struggle. To have surrendered their just claims under the circumstances would have been contrary to human nature. When you put your fingers upon a man's pocketbook you generally touch his patriotism. With clashing interests came jarring opinions, and as a result these purchasers from the railroad companies instituted certain actions of ejectment in both State and Federal courts and prosecuted these suits to a successful termination. They were victorious; and as a consequence some of these homesteaders, my constituents, have already been evicted from their homes, while the sheriff holds in hand writs of possession in other cases, ready to oust these worthy and unoffending citizens in the event this meritorious bill fails to be enacted into a law during the few remaining days of an expiring Congress.

These legal writs or mandates are suspended temporarily—held in abeyance, awaiting the outcome of this legislation. They are hanging like the "sword of Damocles" over defenseless heads of these settlers, whose entire fortunes are dependent upon the fate of this bill. After much labor and difficulty on my part I have succeeded in inducing the vendees of the Mobile and Girard Railroad lands (who live in my district) to consent—reluctantly to consent—to let these homesteaders alone; not to disturb them, but to take other lands of the same character and quality—the same acreage, but not the same quality—subject to homestead entry and being situate within the limits of the State of Alabama, in lieu of and as a substitute for the land so purchased, occupied, and improved by these settlers. I am advised that the vendees of the Tennessee and Coosa Railroad Company are likewise willing to do the same thing. This is manifestly a liberal proposition on their part. Of course, it is not compulsory, but, prompted by a feeling of justice and fairness, I feel sure that if this bill becomes a law an amicable and equitable adjustment will be made speedily of this perplexing condition of affairs which now confronts so many of the unfortunate constituents of my colleagues [Messrs. CLAYTON and BURNETT] and myself, who are themselves in no sense to blame, who are innocent of any wrongdoing, and who constitute the best citizenship of our State.

As to the lands of the Tennessee and Coosa Railroad Company, which this bill as amended is also intended to cover, the Supreme Court of the United States, in a case reported in 176 United States Reports, page 242, held that these lands, which were coterminous with that part of the road completed at the date of the passage of the act, were not forfeited; that by the original act of June 3, 1856, the title to these lands passed in præsenti; that the conditions expressed in them were conditions subsequent and not precedent, and that a forfeiture could only be worked by direct legislative action or judicial proceeding.

As to the lands of the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company embraced in the bill, the supreme court of Alabama, in the case of the Van Kirk Land and Construction Company v. Green, following the decision of the United States Supreme Court, supra, held the fact that said railroad company was not completed within the time prescribed in the grant did not of itself operate to forfeit the title to said lands nor to deprive it of the right to dispose of the same; that by the provisions of the "forfeiture act" of 1890 lands included within the provisions of the original grant and opposite to that part of the railroad then constructed and in operation were excluded from the forfeiture, and by the express terms of said act whatever of right, title, or interest there was in the United States Government was confirmed to the railroad company or its vendees; that the land in controversy, being opposite to that portion of the railroad constructed and in operation at the date of said forfeiture act, the title to the same remained in the orginal grantee under said act, or if it has been previously conveyed, then in such vendee, and could not be divested by the conduct of the Land Commissioner of the General Land Office in leaving it out of the allotment made by him, as such Commissioner, under the provisions of said "forfeiture act;" nor could the courts be concluded by his construction of that act; that by the provisions of said act the title to the lands lying opposite to that part of the road constructed and in operation at the time the act was passed having been confirmed to the grantee or his vendee, said lands were thereby withdrawn from the public domain, and could not, therefore, rightfully be opened to homestead entry.

The able report of the Committee on Public Lands so clearly explains the status of this difficult and embarrassing land problem, I ask that the same be read. This bill alone can untangle the complication.

The vendees of the Tennessee and Coosa and the Mobile and Girard railroads, in the State of Alabama, have recovered in the courts of that State and in the courts of the United States lands which were or are in the actual possession of settlers holding them as homesteads. These lands were granted by Congress to the State of Alabama to aid in the construction of said railroads, which were completed and in operation on September 29, 1890, the date of the passage of the forfeiture act. The lands were opened by the Secretary of the Interior to homestead entry after the passage of said act of September 29, 1890; but the courts have decided that they were not forfeited by that act and that they were the property of these railroad companies or their vendees.

It is clear that the settlers should not lose their homes, and it is no less evident that the purchasers of the lands from these railroad companies should have the property which the courts have decided belong to them. The purpose of the bill is to permit the vendees of the railroads to take lands in lieu of those recovered by them in the courts, in order to insure to the homestead settlers the title to their homes, and the committee is in sympathy with that purpose; but as the bill contained several objectionable features, the committee have recommended a substitute therefor.

The substitute limits the location of the certificates to be issued to lands in Alabama and provides that they must be located within one year from their issuance. It is believed that the measure will satisfactorily adjust an unfortunate condition, for which neither class of the claimants are responsible.

But, briefly to reiterate:

There are two classes of homestead settlers in the Second Alabama district, which I have the honor to represent in this Chamber, who are especially interested in this legislation.

The first class are those above referred to, who, under the erroneous interpretation which was put upon the "forfeiture act" by the Interior Department, entered certain lands contiguous to that part of the Mobile and Girard Railroad which had been constructed and was in operation as far as the city of Troy, prior to or at the time of the passage of said act, amounting to about 9,000 acres. I repeat, the "forfeiture act" confirmed title to the railroad company, or its vendees, in and to these 9,000 acres, commonly known as "earned lands."

The Secretary of the Interior having authorized these lands to be opened to homestead settlements, many of my constituents in good faith made entries, paid the fees and charges exacted by the Government as incident thereto, obtained patents therefor in the usual manner, and placed valuable and permanent improvements thereon. The supreme court of Alabama, as above stated, in the case of Van Kirk Land and Construction Company v. Green, on appeal from the circuit court of Pike County, held that the purchasers from the railroad company, so far as these "earned lands" are concerned, had a better title than the settlers ever acquired; that their entries were illegal; and accordingly, writs of possession have already been issued and are in the hands of a State sheriff ready for execution, and unless I can obtain at the present short session of Congress this needed measure of relief, the result will be to turn them out of their homes, entailing upon them, in addition to the money they were forced to expend in purchasing their homesteads, the loss as well of the improvements they have erected thereon.

The second class are persons who located their homesteads upon lands beyond the limit of the constructed road southwest of Troy, acting likewise under an invitation from the Interior Department, and who in good faith paid their entrance money and put valuable improvements on their homes. Messrs. Ewing, Bishop, and others, in whom title to certain of these lands had also been confirmed by the terms of the "forfeiture act," instituted contests in the land office at Montgomery against these settlers, and, on appeal to the Interior Department in Washington, a decision was rendered against them.

It is believed that the pending bill is broad enough in its provisions to embrace and protect this second class of settlers.

There can be no doubt that this measure of relief ought to pass. The Government having sold to its own citizens, for homestead purposes, lands to which it had no title, and received from them the purchase price therefor, is now bound by the plainest principles of common honesty to do one of three things:

First. Refund to the settlers the money received from them, together with the value of their improvements; or

Second. Give them in lieu of their lost homesteads other lands of the same quality, quantity, and value; or

Third. Pass this bill, which enables the vendees of the railroad companies to enter and take other lands as a substitute for those occupied by these settlers, and thereby make an equitable adjustment, in the language of the committee's report, of "an unfortunate condition, for which neither class of the claimants are responsible."

Mr. Speaker, the helpless but deserving constituents whom I represent here, whether they come within either the one or the other of these classes, are not responsible for the condition which now exists arising from an honest difference of construction placed upon the terms of the "forfeiture act" by the Interior Department and the legal tribunals of the country. The law is against the settlers, but equity, which is supposed to supply the deficiencies of the law, is on their side. Of course, every lawyer knows that a law court looks at legal questions only and not to the equity of a particular case.

In actions of ejectment the question is purely one of legal title, and the doctrine of equitable estoppel can have no application. It is, therefore, a well-settled proposition that an equitable estoppel can not be set up against the legal title in such an action. Equity jurisprudence in this country grew out of this inadequacy of common-law forms to secure justice in particular instances. Common-law tribunals can not afford the relief herein prayed for; and these settlers, therefore, are remediless without the intervention of Congress, which is omnipotent, which ought to represent the genius of justice and the spirit of equity in such cases, and which, I am glad to say, has never failed in a proper cause to lend a helping hand under the peculiar facts disclosed in the pending bill.

There are many precedents for legislation of this character. Similar relief has been granted, under similar circumstances, to settlers who located upon railroad lands in several of the Western States, and, I submit, a more auspicious occasion has never happened, a better case was never presented, for the beneficent exercise of equity and good conscience than this measure has now brought under your consideration.

The history of a nation is in the memory of her sons. Her palladium is in their hearts. The industrial classes, the world over, have proven the safest and most conservative element of human population. They are patriotic, liberty-loving, and law-abiding. They not only fight the battles of their country in war, but serve her faithfully in peace. In every relation of life they are true. All honor to such men!

Congress, pursuing a wise and liberal policy toward that comprehensive group or class whom we delight to characterize as our splendid yeomanry—"the common masses of the common people"—passed an act on the 20th day of May, 1862, "to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain." At that time a terrific internecine strife was being waged everywhere between the two great sections of the Union. Ruthless and unpitying war, with all the devastations that follow in its wake, had swept with relentless fury over our fair and fruitful fields.

Our sunny skies were red with the flames of burning towns and black with the smoke of ancestral homes. At such an hour in the history of the Republic this beneficial law was enacted in order to furnish poor but deserving men an opportunity to buy humble homes—to give them a rooftree, to provide each of them an abiding place, and to fasten to it the inspiring ideal of a common country in which the people rule and from whom all legislative and political power is derived. In short, to make them the foundation stone upon which the whole superstructure of this magnificent Government is reared—the prop and support, the stay and hope for the preservation of civil liberty and the law of the land.

"Home, Sweet Home," is the sweetest song that ever was heard. It strikes the harp of the soul and draws out the tenderest pulsations from the heart of love in all lands and under every sky.

Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble there is no place like home.

There is something irresistibly attractive in the word "home"—a refuge from the ills of life; a place of peace; a shelter from doubt; a temple of love, watched over by household gods, upon whose altars burn the incense of heaven. "Home is not four square walls, though hung with pictures and gilded." However humble, it is a shrine of our affections, a school of our hearts. Around that hallowed spot in after years old remembrances love to cluster all along our earthly pilgrimage. In our pathway through life they encircle us like an Eastern spell, and are potential in developing the moral character and in completing the perfect man.

Our American homes are the nurseries of patriotism and the civic virtues. While this Republic is advancing in the arts and sciences, in letters and learning, in wealth and culture, in navigation and commerce, and in all that relates to the civilization of the human race, the lessons of civil and religious liberty are taught in the home circle. From the sacred precincts of the household must emanate that lofty spirit of devotion and self-sacrifice which looks to the elevation of the individual man in his moral, mental, and social character, leading the long train of all other improvements, and which contribute to the making of a nation and its people truly good and great.

These lessons, taught at the mother's knee, bowing before the family shrine, give a wide scope to sentiments of the broadest and purest catholicism. They appeal to everyone in whose breast shall arise an aspiration for human rights as well as an admiration for high moral and intellectual qualities, consecrated to duty and steadily and triumphantly devoted to the accomplishment of glorious deeds—to the attainment of noblest aims.

The home life, beautiful with flowers and music and sunshine scattered around it to enliven its gloom, its portals wreathed with blossoming jasmines and the "red fruited woodbine"—an eden of brightness and gladness—is the ideal life on this earthly sphere, the true life, which brings peace, happiness, and contentment.

The poet has elaborated this sentiment in these exquisite lines:

Make home a hive, where all beautiful feelings
Cluster like bees and their honey dew bring;
Make it a temple of holy revealings
And love its bright angel with shadowed wing:
Then shall it be, when afar on life's billow,
Wherever your tempest-tossed children are flung,
They will long for the shade of the home-weeping willow,
And sing the sweet songs their mothers have sung.

Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, you all, or most of you, have elegant residences, palatial homes. My faltering tongue can not describe them. Enjoy them to your heart's delight. My unhappy constituents, who are threatened with distress warrants, do not envy you. They are very reasonable. They only want to retain the humble cottages they built upon lands which they bought from the United States Government. Save them, I beg you. Rally to their defense, come to their rescue and deliver them from the perils which overhang them.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this highly meritorious bill in behalf of the deserving homesteaders in Alabama is now very narrowly escaping defeat. There are perhaps 25 and maybe 50 bills of equal merit that will go down for lack of time under the demand for roll calls; many of those bills represented by gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, and whose bills are thus being defeated by this filibuster.

Let me call attention also to the further fact that for the last two months or six weeks bills of such a character, instead of going through by unanimous consent, as they do in the usual course of business in the House, have been held up by objections to unanimous consent, made by a member on the Democratic side of the Chamber, Mr. MOON, so that the other side of the House, first having prevented for two months the passage of unobjectionable bills like this, bills of as much merit as this, after tying them up for two months, and now finding the House Calendar blocked with them, are preventing their passage by dilatory roll calls. I am glad to know that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WILEY] has succeeded in saving one of them out of the wreck; but there is an abundance that will go down into the tomb on the adjournment of this House on the 4th day of March. And my Democratic friends who have thus been slaughtering their own offspring, who, like Saturn, have been eating their own children, find themselves in a position of having plenty to explain to their constituents when they go home. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Why do you say that the gentleman from Alabama has saved this bill?

Mr. LACEY. Because it is a good bill, and there are going to be enough Republicans who will vote for this bill to save it.

Mr. DALZELL. I hope not.

Mr. LACEY. I hope there will be.

Mr. PAYNE. If this motion should be voted down, the bill would still be on the Calendar and might be reached by unanimous consent?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. If that side of the House should stop it by their unseemly behavior?

Mr. LACEY. Just a word further.

Mr. SCHIRM. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. LACEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. SCHIRM. I would like to know why this bill, that benefits Alabama, should take precedence over all other bills on the Speaker's desk, when the obstruction in this House has been led by a gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. LACEY. I speak not for the obstructionists of Alabama, but for the poor settlers of Alabama, whose rights I hope this side of the House will respect, notwithstanding the utter disregard that has been shown to their rights and to their claims by the other side of this Chamber.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to use any more time?

Mr. WILEY. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. WILEY. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I stand ready to recognize any gentleman who desires to speak in opposition to this bill, as I consider it my duty to do so, being in control of the time on this side and being myself heartily in favor of the measure. [After a pause.] As no one seems desirous of being heard in opposition to the bill, and as the gentleman from Alabama has very clearly and eloquently stated its provisions and purposes, I will consume but a moment in a brief statement relative thereto and then pass on to other matters affecting generally settlers and settlements on the public domain.

Briefly, the facts with regard to the bill before us are as follows: Years ago Congress made a grant of lands in aid of the construction of certain railways in Alabama. In 1890 an act was passed forfeiting all these grants not contiguous to completed portions of the roads. By reason of a misunderstanding as to the point to which construction had been carried the General Land Office opened to homestead settlement not only the unearned lands, but some lands contiguous to completed portions of the roads, and upon these lands settlements and entries were made.

After the land had been opened to settlement, and in some cases after Government patents and final certificates had been issued, the railway companies and their grantees brought suit against the settlers, and the courts held that the title rested in the railroads and their grantees, and in some instances writs of ejectment have already been issued and the settlers are liable at any time to lose their lands. In this condition of affairs those claiming from the railroad companies have agreed to the provisions of this bill whereby on relinquishing all their right or title to the lands claimed by the settlers they are to receive an equal area of other public lands in Alabama. The measure is exceedingly meritorious, and if we do not pass it at this time there is danger of a considerable number of settlers losing their farms and homes, through no fault of theirs, but apparently through a blunder of the General Land Office in opening to entry lands which had been granted to the railroads.

Now, I know that some of the gentlemen on this side, very properly incensed at the filibustering tactics of the minority, who are virtually holding the House up and preventing the passage of much meritorious legislation, feel inclined to vote against suspending the rules for the passage of this bill because they do not think that the minority, which is blocking legislation, should be allowed to get its measures through, when members on this side having equally meritorious measures are not granted that privilege. But, gentlemen, we may well leave with the Democratic minority the monopoly of an exhibition of temper and of the responsibility for obstructing necessary legislation. This meritorious measure is before us and I hope it will receive the necessary two-thirds vote.

The discussion of this subject, affecting as it does settlers upon public lands, leads naturally to a general discussion of the situation as regards the public lands of the nation and settlements thereon and I wish to present to the House some views on the general subject of the land laws, and particularly in opposition to a certain agitation for the repeal of some of them.

AGAINST THE REPEAL OF THE LAND LAWS.

Uncle Sam began business as a real estate dealer over one hundred and twenty-five years ago, and during that time has conducted a large and constantly growing business in that line, having disposed of, under the various public-land laws up to the beginning of the present fiscal year, 764,422,726 acres, or a little more than a third of the entire area of our continental possessions exclusive of Alaska.

AREA OF PUBLIC LANDS SUBJECT TO ENTRY.

In spite of Uncle Sam's large real estate transactions, however, he is still the owner of a vast acreage, an acreage in fact but a trifle less than that disposed of in the last hundred and twenty-five years exclusive of railroad land grants, and there is no immediate danger of his becoming short in the real estate market or of going out of business as a purveyor of lands, for he has today in round numbers 525,000,000 acres which he offers for sale and settlement under the various land laws, or an area equal to that of all of the thirteen original States of the Union and the great States of Kentucky, Vermont, Tennessee, Maine, West Virginia, Ohio, Louisiana, Indiana, Mississippi, Illinois, Alabama, Missouri, Arkansas, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Iowa, a very goodly tract, by the way, and calculated to keep Uncle Sam in the land business for some time, even under laws which encourage reasonably rapid disposition.

AREA OF RESERVED LANDS.

In addition to the public lands subject to entry Uncle Sam has reserved as forest reserves something over 60,000,000 acres, or an area equal to the great States of New York and Pennsylvania, with Delaware thrown in for good measure. As all know who are conversant with the conditions, some of this reserved area is well adapted to settlement and has now a large population. The greater portion of it is of value for grazing purposes. In fact, considerable areas are of much more value for such purposes than for the purposes contemplated by the law under which forest reserves are created.

Then there are about 60,000,000 acres, outside of the Indian Territory, reserved for various purposes, largely for Indian reservations, from which, as tribal relations are broken up and lands are granted in severalty to the Indians, we will open to settlement and entry an area at least as large as the great State of Missouri, and still leave the Indians more lands than they can ever make good use of.

From this brief review of our real estate situation it will be seen that the pioneer and home builder still have a very considerable territory in which to establish themselves within our contiguous continental territory, and beyond this, we have the limitless area of Alaska, and if a fifth part of the surface of that great Territory can be utilized for farming and stock growing, and I have no doubt but what a much larger portion than that can be so utilized profitably, we have there, on that basis, an area on which settlers can build their homes and establish their farms, as large as Michigan and Wisconsin.

THE AGITATION FOR REPEAL.

I am led to this review of the public-land situation by the agitation which has been carried on in certain quarters for a repeal of certain laws under which title to our public lands are obtained. This agitation has for its purpose the repeal of the commutation clause of the homestead laws, the timber and stone act, and the desert-land law, and the repeal of these laws is urged, as I understand it, on the ground, first, that public lands are passing too rapidly into the hands of private owners, and at the present rate we shall not have, it is stated, any public lands left for "future generations;" second, for the alleged reason that the spirit and intent of some of these laws is being violated, and that this violation can only be cured by repeal; third, that so far as the timber and stone act is concerned the Government should cease to dispose of its timber lands and establish a Governmeut monopoly in timber and timber products.

Before entering upon a discussion as to how much truth there may be in the rather startling allegations of public land frauds which have been made in support of arguments for repeal, and the wisdom of discouraging the acquisition by individuals of the public lands, and of the proposed establishment of a gigantic Government forest monopoly, it will be well, perhaps, briefly to examine the facts as to the entry and disposition of the public lands in the recent past, particularly in the past year, and to recall for a moment the causes which underlie an increased or unusual demand for public lands.

DEMAND FOR LAND AN INDEX TO PROSPERITY.

So far as agricultural and grazing lands are concerned, the demand for such lands is the best possible index and barometer of national business conditions. Given a statement of the varying rate of disposition of the public lands throughout a decade or a century, and in it you will read with remarkable accuracy the story of the growth in population, and particularly of the rise and fall in the prices of the products of agriculture and husbandry. Increased population, other conditions being favorable, means an increased demand for public lands inevitably. An increase in the price of wheat, corn, and live-stock encourages the undertaking and development of these industries in territory and regions where under low prices they would be unprofitable.

We have been enjoying a remarkable degree of prosperity for a number of years past; we have seen the highest prices paid for live stock known in our history, and naturally we have witnessed an increasing demand for public lands, even in those regions of semiaridity where the growth of crops is questionable, in the older public-land States, where there was nothing left but the culling of generations, and in the arid regions, where the great cost of reclamation discouraged or the sparse product of irreclaimable grazing lands gave no encouragement to private ownership under the unfavorable conditions of former years. The increase in area of original entries and filings from 10,000,000 acres in 1894 to 19,000,000 in 1902 measures the increase in population and even more the enhanced value of agricultural products, as the decrease in area of original entries from thirteen and one-half millions in 1892 to eight and one-third millions in 1895 marked the decline in prosperity and in the prices of agricultural products during that period.

AREA DISPOSED OF NOT AS GREAT AS HAS BEEN SUPPOSED.

As a matter of fact, however, the great seeming increase in the disposal of public lands, as indicated by original filings and entries in the past two years, has been more apparent than real, for while the original entries for the fiscal year 1901 aggregated, in round numbers, 15½ million acres, and in 1902, 19½ millions, the final disposition of public lands for those two years, or the amount which the Government actually parted title with during those years, was in 1901 but 6½ million acres, and in 1902, 6 millions, and of the increase of nearly 4 million acres in area of original entries in 1902 above 1901 over 2½ millions were of lands in Oklahoma, which was purchased from the Indians and opened to settlement, leaving only 1½ millions of increase over the previous year, most of which occurred in three States, under all laws.

I do not cite these figures because I feel it necessary to reassure anyone who understands that the growth and development of the public-land States only comes with the passing of the public lands into private ownership, but to point out that the increase in the original entries of the public lands has only been such as a normal growth in population and increased returns from the products of the soil would naturally bring about, and for the comfort of those who are fearful that the public lands will all soon be exhausted—and that the apparent large and actual moderate increase in the amount of lands passing into private ownership necessarily implies unwise laws and lax administration.

PROPOSED REPEAL OF COMMUTATION PRIVILEGE.

The law which the repealers seem most insistent upon having taken from the statute books is that portion of the homestead law which has been part of it since its enactment, and which allows the homesteader, after fourteen months' residence and cultivation, to pay the Government $1.25 an acre, or $200 for his 160 acres, and obtain a patent for the same. The repeal of this law is demanded, as I understand it, on the theory or allegation that bona fide homestead entrymen do not commute their land, but that the commutation law is taken advantage of only by those who are desirous of obtaining public lands in considerable areas and for other purposes than actual cultivation of and residence upon each 160 acres, and the increased acreage taken under the homestead law in the past two years is cited as alleged proof of this contention.

The history of the homestead law as it operated in Minnesota, Kansas, and other States in the humid regions is a clear refutation of the claim that commutation necessarily leads to speculation, or to the acquisition of lands in large areas; nor need those timid and fearful souls who look upon every entryman of the public lands as a land-grabber and a criminal, and who are fearful lest the public domain shall not be reserved for "future generations," be particularly agitated over either the homestead entries or the commutations of the same in the past two years. As a matter of fact, the area of final homestead entries for 1902, amounting to 4,342,747.70 acres, is nearly a million acres less than the final entries in 1901, and less than 300,000 acres more than the final entries away back in 1890.

AS TO HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The increase in the number of original homestead entries in 1902 is due almost entirely to the vast area of former Indian lands entered in Oklahoma, amounting to nearly 4½ million acres, the vast acreage taken up in North Dakota, amounting to nearly 2½ millions, and the over 1 million acres entered in Washington. These two States and one Territory contributed nearly 8 millions to the aggregate of 14 millions of original homestead entries during the year 1902, and I have not heard any suggestion, or at least no serious attempt has been made to prove that the entries in these States and this Territory were not generally made in good faith.

There can be no doubt but what the number of original homestead entries made during the last two fiscal years was somewhat increased by entries made in view of the decision of a former Secretary of the Interior in the now famous Ella Dickey case. Back in 1896 two gallant old soldiers, one of the Union and the other of the Confederacy, engaged in a friendly rivalry in attempting to save the widow of an ex-Union soldier her homestead, with the result that they agreed upon a decision to the effect that the widow of a soldier need not reside upon her homestead. This remarkable decision seemed to have escaped general notice until about two years ago, when entries began to be made with a view of taking advantage of the interpretation of the law therein contained. While the Department, I understand, now holds that the decision was illegal and improper, it seems hardly fair to officially condemn those who were following departmental decisions. These entries, however, were manifestly not made with any thought of commuting, for it would be the height of folly to commute, could a title be acquired in five years without residence.

During the year 1902 4,342,747 acres were finally certified to homesteaders under the residence provisions of the law, while the area commuted under section 2301 of the Revised Statutes only amounted to 953,525 acres, and under all commutation provisions approximately 1,100,000 acres, so that practically only one homestead entry in five was commuted, and at the same rate of commutation, if all the remaining public lands were so disposed of, it would take over five hundred years for the commuter, who seems to trouble the dreams of the repealer, to "gobble up" the public domain.

COMMUTATION PRIVILEGE WISE.

As a matter of fact, the commutation feature of the homestead law is one of its wisest provisions. The settler who goes upon the public lands where conditions of soil and climate make it possible for him to support himself and family has little disposition to pay the Government $200 or $400, as the case may be, for a title to his 160 acres of land in advance of five years' residence. If he does so, it will be because, being without funds for the erection of buildings, or purchase of live stock, or implements, he can better afford to pay for his land, obtain a title to it, and use it as a basis of credit, than to wait five years for a patent, or because of death in his family, sickness, or other calamity it becomes necessary for him to leave his land, temporarily or permanently, before the lapse of the five-year period; under which conditions, but for the commutation clause, he would be in danger of losing his land, his labor, and improvements.

As the lands within the "rain belt" and of known fertility have become exhausted, the land seeker has been tempted into less inviting regions, in the hope that a changing of climatic conditions or better understanding of the methods of cultivation suited to the conditions would wring productiveness from the semiarid or sterile soil. Every entry made under these conditions is a challenge to the fates, the entryman staking his homestead right, his desire for a home, and his labor against the perils of the enterprise, and in thousands upon thousands of cases he has been compelled at last to strike his colors and surrender to adverse conditions or sue for a truce after years of toil and privation, though in countless other cases industry and tenacity have finally won the victory.

It is largely under such conditions, more or less modified, more or less aggravated in form, that the homesteader locates upon what remains of the public land, and the commutation clause invites his effort, because it holds out the hope to him that if he is temporarily compelled by adverse conditions to leave his land or take his family from it and utilize it to the best possible advantage in other ways than by cultivation he can obtain a title, and thus not lose all of the time and effort he has expended. No one who understands conditions in public-land States doubts that settlement will be retarded and development delayed by the repeal of the commutation clause of the homestead law.

DESERT-LAND ACT.

Some of the repealers are particularly insistent upon the repeal of the desert-land act, and, strange as it may seem, some who style themselves "irrigationists," and who claim to be the friends of irrigation development, are most clamorous for the repeal of the only law upon the statute books of the nation which provides for and compels irrigation by private enterprise. The most exaggerated statements have been made as to the working and effect of this law, and the most reckless misstatements have been uttered as to its results. Speaking of this law, Senator WARREN, of Wyoming, recently made this clear and truthful statement:

> Under this act more arid lands have been reclaimed, more barren wastes have been converted into growing fields of hay and grain, and more unproductive land has been made permanently productive than under any other law applicable to the Western country. * * * No other law properly administered reduces to so much of a minimum the opportunity for abuse and prevarication. Everywhere over the Western country the arid wastes are spotted by beautiful fields of growing grain and alfalfa, which testify beyond the possibilities of contradiction to the splended and material results legitimately accomplished under this law.

Let us see how much danger there is that all the remaining public lands shall be "grabbed," as the repealers style it, under this law which compels the entryman who goes upon a barren waste to reclaim and irrigate it and pay the Government $1.25 an acre, or $2.50 an acre within railroad limits, before he can secure a title. In the fiscal year 1901 the original desert-land entries covered 686,382 acres, and the final desert-land entries 152,160 acres, indicating that about one entryman in five was able to comply with the rigid requirements of the law and obtain a title to his land. In 1902 the original desert entries amounted to 929,230 acres, and the final desert entries amounted to 210,742 acres, or approximately but one entry finally secured to the entryman for every six entries made, the balance representing the attempts made at reclamation where the conditions were so adverse that the entryman was unable, within the four years allotted him under the law, to reclaim his land sufficiently to obtain a title, and thus the title to from four-fifth to five-sixths of the land filed upon remained in the Government, though the filing fee of 25 cents per acre had in each case been paid.

A LAW THAT COMPELS RECLAMATION.

As was well said by Senator WARREN in the interview referred to, "none of the land laws is surrounded by so many safeguards as this," and that is particularly true as regards entries made in States having the best irrigation laws, for in the administration of the desert-land law the General Land Office necessarily recognizes local laws and customs regarding the appropriation and use of water in administering the same, and it is a significant fact that those who have been the most hostile to the growing tendency and disposition in the arid States to the betterment of laws relating to the use of water in irrigation have been most vehement in their clamor for the repeal of this law, cloaking their assaults upon it under a thin guise of professed friendliness to the reclamation of the West.

Nothing is more essential to the best administration of the desert-land law than perfection of State water legislation, the necessity for which was forcibly stated by President Roosevelt in his first message to the Fifty-seventh Congress, which will make it impossible for the entryman to set up a claim to the possession of a water right for the irrigation of his tract which he does not in fact possess. In States like Colorado, Wyoming, and Utah it is a practical impossibility to secure a title under the desert-land law without the possession of a water right sufficient for the irrigation of the tract, and even in other arid States where irrigation laws are less perfect the requirements under this law are so exacting as to leave the chance or opportunity for acquiring land under it, without reclamation, exceedingly limited and remote.

An entry under the desert-land law more certainly assures the building of a home and the improvement of the land than an entry under the homestead law in the same region, even were the commutation clause of that law repealed, for the homesteader is neither required to reclaim or to any considerable extent to cultivate his land, whereas he who even indifferently and only partially reclaims a tract under the desert law must of necessity reside on or near the tract in order to secure any benefit from or maintain the value of the improvements he makes.

Formerly the area of a desert entry was a section. Irrigation laws were less perfect and the administration of the act less intelligent and vigorous than at present, and there is no doubt but what some areas passed into private ownership which were not permanently irrigated; that through the medium of the law other large areas which were irrigated passed under a single ownership. But these are very largely matters relating not to the present, but to the past, and generally to conditions which existed ten or twenty years ago. I am not certain but what we are approaching the time when the area of the desert entry may be properly reduced from 320 to 160 acres, but no more fatal blow could be struck at the development of the arid region through irrigation than the repeal of this law.

NATIONAL IRRIGATION ACT.

By the act of June 17, 1902, the nation embarked upon a policy of national reclamation. Everyone who knows the conditions in the West understands that the works undertaken under this law will be generally of a character too large or too intricate for private or cooperative enterprise, and that under the desert-land law the farmer or the association of farmers who seek to irrigate limited tracts by diversion of streams or the building of small storage basins will, in the aggregate, reclaim infinitely more land than will be irrigated by works constructed under the national irrigation act.

Not compelled under the desert-land law immediately to establish a permanent home on the arid and nonproductive tract which he seeks to reclaim, the desert entryman is free for the three or four years during which he is reclaiming his tract to reside elsewhere, where he can give his family the advantages of settled communities, and where he may find employment, and investing his surplus earnings and savings in works of reclamation, he finally, unless his undertaking prove beyond his means and conditions less favorable than he had anticipated, reclaims his tract, which in the very nature of things he must eventally make his home and continue to irrigate and improve.

MAKES THE DESERT BLOSSOM.

An entry under the homestead law in the arid and semiarid regions, even with every condition of the law complied with, including five years' residence, if you please, may present nothing at the end of that time but a disfiguring weed patch and an abandoned shack, whereas an entry under the desert-land law, with its provisions at all reasonably complied with, must and does present a picture of verdure and fertility and a permanent and prosperous home established on lands which had been arid and practically worthless.

TIMBER AND STONE ACT.

Another law which the repealers propose to strike from the statute book is that which allows any American citizen to purchase not to exceed 160 acres of land chiefly valuable for the timber or stone it contains and not fit for agricultural purposes at $2.50 an acre. The discussion of the propriety of repealing this law involves two main questions. First, should the Government from now on seek to become a monopolist of all the remaining timber land of the nation; and, second, if the timber lands or any portion of them should be sold, should they be sold at what amounts in some instances to a nominal price or should their value be determined and a price fixed which reasonably measures the same?

FOREST RESERVATIONS, WHEN TO BE ESTABLISHED.

To the first of these propositions personally I am emphatically opposed, and for many reasons. March 3, 1891, Congress enacted a law authorizing the President "to set apart and reserve lands bearing forests, whether of commercial value or not," as forest reserves. The purposes sought to be served by the establishment of these reserves were declared in the act of June 4, 1897, as follows:

No public forest reservation shall be established except to improve and protect the forest within the reservation, or for the purpose of securing favorable conditions of water flow and to furnish a continuous supply of timber for the use and necessities of citizens of the United States; but it is not the purpose or intent of these provisions, or of the act providing for such reservations, to authorize the inclusion therein of lands more valuable for the mineral therein or for agricultural purposes than for forest purposes.

Under this act about 61,000,000 acres of lands have been reserved, and with the objects and purposes of these reservations, as declared in the statute above quoted, I am in full and hearty sympathy, and in so far as those objects have been kept clearly in view and the limitations of the act recognized and adhered to in the creation and administration of the reserves I believe the policy has the general indorsement of the people of the country. If there is other forested area the reservation and preservation of which is demanded in the carrying out of the national policy heretofore declared, such reservation, in my judgment, should be made. But we have on the public domain perhaps 60,000,000 or 70,000,000 acres of lands yet outside of the reserves, having a more or less valuable growth of timber, a great portion of which consists of scattered and detached patches and regions rough and rocky in character, bearing but a scrubby, scattering, and comparatively valueless growth of trees, and not susceptible in the main of supporting a more dense or valuable growth.

DANGER OF REPEAL.

A repeal of the timber and stone act would render it impossible for settlers in the West to obtain title to any of this land except under the homestead law or through the medium of so-called scrip, and would necessarily compel the Government to go into the business of the sale of timber piecemeal over the entire area of the public-land States, and he certainly would be a most enthusiastic optimist who would contemplate such a proposition, and the delays, criticisms, and friction, not to say peculation and fraud, which such a system would invite, with confidence and cheerfulness.

We are told that under the timber and stone act in the aggregate large areas of valuable timber lands have been purchased, and perforce this must spell public calamity and private fraud. The same causes which have led to the increases in the disposition of other public lands had their bearing on operations under the timber and stone act, to wit, good times and the accumulation of savings, and this has been augmented by the fact that timber is growing scarce in some of the regions which have heretofore been large producers, and there has been a disposition to purchase timber and stone lands in some of the States in anticipation of an increase in value with the development of transportation facilities. The aggregate of entries under this law in the recent past has not been as large as one might be led to suppose from all that has been said on the subject. The total sales for 1891 aggregated 396,445 acres, and for 1902, 545,253 acres, and estimating our public forest lands, outside of forest reserves, at the very conservative figure of 50,000,000 acres, at the rate of last year's disposal we would still be selling timber lands a hundred years hence.

The increase in 1902 over 1901 amounted to 150,000 acres, and when it is considered that the area over which these lands were sold comprises over one-third of the United States, neither the increase of sales nor the total area sold can be considered particularly large. While there have been slight increases in the sales under this act in various portions of the region over which it operates in the past two years, the principal increase has been confined to the States of Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and California.

No doubt a considerable portion of the timber lands which have been purchased under this law in the States named contained forests which, in the course of time, with the advent of transportation facilities, will be valuable, but the fact that, in these prosperous times, and with the great inquiry there has been in the past two years for forest lands, there has been but little increase in the amount of lands purchased under the timber and stone act outside of the States named is the best possible proof that the major portion of the forested area of the country is not considered worth $2.50 an acre at the present time.

WHY NOT PLACE VALUABLE FOREST LAND IN FOREST RESERVES?

Not only has the increased sales of timber lands in the last two years been confined to comparatively few States, but to a few land districts in those States, and this fact naturally leads the layman to inquire, why is it, if it be not good public policy that these timber lands, said to be very valuable, should be disposed of under this law, that they are not reserved by the creation of forest reserves? While it may be suggested that it is not wise or practicable to reserve all or even the best and the most valuable of our timber lands, some of which a high official of the Government recently reported were worth a hundred times what the Government is receiving for them, the natural inquiry is, why is it not practicable?

In view of the fact that vast areas have been included in forest reserves which were as barren of timber or even of brush as a Kansas prairie, and in view of the further fact that only the most persistent and emphatic protests have kept further large areas of this kind out of the forest reserves, and that in spite of all protests considerable regions of this character have in the past been included in forest reserves, it strikes some of us as passing strange that what are officially alleged and declared to be particularly and especially valuable timber lands, and which are located in reasonable solid and compact bodies, are not reserved and preserved under the forest-reserve law.

GET THE FOREST RESERVES IN THE RIGHT PLACE.

In this connection I am reminded of a colloquy which occurred some time ago between an official in high station and a gentleman with whom he was discussing the location of forest reserve lieu rights. Said the official, who, by the way, had had something to do with the establishment of forest reserves: "Just think of it, a man can relinquish his right to a tract of absolutely untimbered and comparatively worthless land within a forest reserve and locate the same on the most magnificent forested land on the continent, some of which contains half a million feet of lumber to the acre. Now, what do you think of that situation?" Said the gentleman thus appealed to: "What do I think of it? I think you have got your forest reserves in the wrong place."

It is my opinion that mountainous forested tracts, the preservation of which is necessary for the purposes declared in the statute relating to forest reserves above quoted, should be reserved, and that the use of these reserves should be allowed in all ways not harmful, and that such reservations should be confined absolutely to mountain and timber lands, and should not include large areas of agricultural or grazing lands, and that all of the forested lands of the Government, other than those thus reserved, should, under proper restrictions, from time to time be disposed of.

I have never believed that there should be a flat price for timber lands all over the United States. In the region covering the summit and the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains there is but little, if any, timber land worth more than $2.50 an acre, for the reason that the timber is generally scattering and inclined to be scrubby and of but little commercial value except for local use. On the western slope, on the contrary, the Government has no doubt sold considerable areas of timber land, which, if not at the time sold, at least within a reasonable length of time, would be worth more than $2.50 an acre, and I think the timber and stone act might well be amended so that in regions heavily timbered a price approximately measuring the value of the tract may be obtained.

From a very considerable experience and observation it is my opinion that east of the continental divide of the Rocky Mountains, and in large areas west of it, the Government has made but few sales of land under the timber and stone act in which it did not receive all that the land was worth, and to my personal knowledge many tracts have been purchased which could not have been disposed of if owned by a private individual for as much as the Government price. Owners of small sawmills, to supply local demands, have purchased these tracts, and many thousands of acres of rough, rocky land with but a sparse growth of timber, worthless for agricultural purposes, and except in a limited way for grazing, have been purchased by settlers to round out their holdings and combine the benefits of a limited amount of pasturage with the advantages of a private wood lot, and in all this class of purchases the Government has made a most advantageous sale from every point of view.

AS TO FORESTRY.

We have heard a great deal in the past few years about European and particularly German forestry systems, and there are some very good people who are so utterly impracticable as to imagine that you can transplant, in all its detail, a forestry system maintained over limited areas in a densely populated region under a bureaucratic and monarchial form of government and fit it, without alteration or amendment, to the comparatively limitless areas of the public-land States in a region sparsely settled, largely undeveloped, from 1,500 to 2,500 miles from the seat of Government, and settled by a people unaccustomed and opposed to bureaucratic methods, and with the liveliest and most virile notions of individual ownership and local control.

No doubt we can get some valuable pointers on forest preservation from European monarchies, but in the main their methods do not and can not fit the conditions here, at least in the distant undeveloped and largely unsettled portions of the country. Every attempt to apply them will lead to friction and result in failure, and to attempt to retain in public ownership all of the public lands of the United States containing timber, to administer and protect the same and dispose of its product would be impossible of execution, impracticable, and disastrous.

WHERE THE REPEAL AGITATION COMES FROM.

Having discussed these various laws which it has been suggested should be repealed, it might not be improper to inquire as to some of the sources of the agitation for such repeal. It is very natural, it seems to me, that a conscientious official charged with the execution of the public-land laws, desirous of preserving his administration of those laws from any taint or suspicion of fraud, and to see that they are executed in accordance with their letter and their spirit, mindful of the responsibility resting upon him, should be sensitive to and influenced by criticisms which may be made relative to the character of the administration of the same, and confronted with considerable increased demands for public lands and the knowledge that at all times, under the best administration, some frauds against the spirit, if not the letter, of the laws will be perpetrated, should be influenced in his views by the disposition that exists in all Government bureaus to apply the brake at the least suspicion of danger, to err, if at all, on the side of conservatism, and by the exaggerated, inflammatory, and oftentimes untrue statements and criticisms, the cunningly devised, artfully and ingeniously executed appeals and recommendations, in person and through seemingly disinterested channels, of those who cloak a peculiar and personal interest in the repeal of the land laws under the virtuous and saintly garb of disinterested solicitation for the people's welfare and sleepless anxiety lest "the people's heritage" should be "gobbled up" and not reserved for "future generations."

Now, it may be worth our while to inquire briefly whether or not there are any people or interests in these United States that would be served and benefited by the repeal of practically all the land laws save that which allows the settler to go upon the public lands under the generally adverse and hard condition surrounding a location on the public domain at this time and obtain a title to 160 acres after five years of residence and cultivation. Everybody knows, and the repealers must admit, that the repeals recommended would largely decrease the rate of disposition of the public lands, that there would be comparatively few who would be willing to go upon the remaining public lands charged with a knowledge of the fact that under no circumstances or conditions could they ever obtain a title except after five years of residence. The idea, then, is to discourage the taking up of the public lands. That is the avowed aim and purpose of a large class of the repealers.

THE LARGE STOCK GROWERS.

Let us see who would be benefited. In the first place, every large stock owner, who, by continual purchases for a series of years, has acquired the title to all of the lands having a water frontage, or upon which water can be developed, or which is of especial value over a considerable area. He might very likely be benefited by the repeal of the commutation clause of the homestead law and the desert-land act, for while a hardy settler might venture somewhere within the limits of the area he controls and attempt reclamation under the desert act, or the establishment of a home under the homestead act with a view of commutation if the conditions proved such that he could not support his family, or even the taking of 160 acres of rocky, scrubby, timber land with the view of utilizing it for pasture purposes, or for the building of a storage reservoir, few, if any, would be found with the temerity to enter such a territory, bound to a five-year residence with his family; and thus we see that the repeal of the laws in question would undoubtedly result in the perpetuation of certain range monopolies. But so far as I know we are not hearing from people of this class with regard to these matters, whatever may be their personal interest. Most men so situated have too keen a sense of what is right and just to advocate anything of the kind, even though it might redound to their benefit.

THE LAND-GRANT RAILROADS.

In the discussion of this matter, however, we must remember that Uncle Sam has very extensive competitors in the real-estate business—competitors whom he set up in business in this line thirty to forty years ago, with the view of encouraging the building of railroads, to wit, the land-grant railways. So far as the interests of those corporations are concerned in the matter of disposition of lands, they are practically identical, and therefore we may properly consider their interests as consolidated. These railways, first and last, have received grants of 197,000,000 acres of land from the Government, about 35,000,000 of which have been forfeited, leaving about 162,000,000 of railroad grants. How great a proportion of these grants are still in the hands of the railroad companies or the land companies organized by them it is impossible at this time to determine. We do know, however, that the railroad companies own at least 64,000,000 acres of land, or an area as large as Louisiana and Michigan, for this amount of their land grants have not as yet been patented to them. Quite likely some of these unpatented lands have been already sold. It is equally probable that a considerable portion of the patented lands have not been sold. So I think it is fair to assume that the various land-grant roads still own 64,000,000 acres of land, and to this we can add some two or three hundred thousand acres as probably a fair estimate of their grants still in the hands of wagon-road companies. Even if this estimate should prove high, still it will be seen that here is a great real-estate interest.

Now, everybody knows that the value of an article depends upon two propositions:

First, the demand; second, the readily obtainable supply. Does anyone doubt that the repeal of a number of important land laws would increase the sale and largely the value of railroad lands? Let us be conservative and imagine that but 50 cents an acre is added to their value by the repeal of the desert-land act, the commutation clause of the homestead act, and the timber and stone act, and we have, on an estimate of 64,000,000 acres still in the possession of the railroad companies, the very snug sum of $32,000,000—a sum which is quite worth the getting, and in the securing of which, as a purely business proposition, in addition to the benefits which would flow from having settlement concentrated along the lines of the railways, it is conceivable it might pay to maintain under virtuous disguise a well-paid lobby.

THE LOBBY AND ITS METHODS.

Such a lobby would probably include a few journals under catchy and reassuring titles; possibly a part of a program of this kind would be the somewhat stale and threadbare policy of getting up petitions reciting in a startling and appealing style certain allegations, which would be interesting and important if true, a call to arms and slogan to the clans so artfully worded that he who innocently accepted the premises must be swept as by a Kansas cyclone to the startling, dramatic, and irresistible conclusion, to wit, that the welfare of the nation depends upon the repeal of most of the land laws, and no doubt these "artful dodgers" would be sent broadcast, care being taken to have them fall only into the hands of those having no knowledge of the facts, but such as are always glad to join in a righteous crusade, and who, taking the statements of the petitions as gospel truth, as per directions from headquarters of the repeal bureau, would sign and forward them to their Congressmen.

I have no quarrel whatever with railroads or other people who may employ what they consider legitimate methods for the increase of their revenues and for the benefit of their interests, but, in view of the facts of the situation, it is not strange that some people refuse to accept as wholly disinterested and altruistic the frantic efforts of a certain coterie of literary and petition-distributing repealers.

Their very close connection with interests which would be largely benefited is to say the least suspicious, and, in view of the facts, their attempts to mislead the people as to the true inwardness of their repeal efforts is the most splendid exhibition of nerve and effrontery which has been witnessed for some time.

HOW PRIVATE INTERESTS WOULD PROFIT.

The manner in which the repeal of the laws we are discussing would increase the sales of land-grant lands and enhance their value is so well understood by those living in the region affected that it need not be discussed at length. Suffice it to say that the average home seeker, rather than go upon a tract of public land with the absolute assurance that he can not obtain title except at the expiration of five years' residence, would prefer to purchase land outright from a land-grant company on long time and easy payments, even at more than the very reasonable price at which land-grant lands are now offered. With the desert-land law repealed, he who sought to irrigate a tract of land, but appreciated the fact that it would be impossible during the three or four years required for the construction of his reservoirs or his ditches to reside upon the tract, as would be required under the homestead law, would naturally seek a tract of railroad or other land in private ownership for the undertaking of his project.

BENEFITS TO SCRIP HOLDERS.

We have a provision of law under which lands in private ownership within forest reserves may be exchanged for any other surveyed lands in the country, nonmineral and unreserved. It is estimated that the forest reserves of the country have within their borders, or had when established, some two and three-fourths millions of acres of land which were the basis for lieu selections. A very great proportion of these lands were railroad land-grant lands, and the right of lieu selection therefore rests in the railroad company so far as they have not disposed of the lands in question. About one and one-half million acres of these lands have been utilized as a basis for lieu selections, leaving perhaps one and one-quarter millions of acres still outstanding.

This area is largely in the hands of a few persons or corporations. At the present time these rights or scrip sell at from $4 to $5 an acre, I am told. It is said that it is largely used for the location of valuable timber lands, and in this use its only competitor is the timber and stone act, under which any citizen can secure 160 acres at $2.50 an acre. Does anyone doubt that the repeal of the timber and stone act would largely increase the value of forest reserve and, in fact, of all other classes of lieu rights and scrip? Not at all. On the contrary, no one who knows anything about the situation can honestly deny the proposition that the repeal of the timber and stone act would nearly, if not quite, double the value of all forest reserve lieu rights and other classes of so-called scrip, and here then is a modest little item of five or six millions of dollars which we would legislate into the pockets of scrip holders by the repeal of timber and stone act.

HOW IT WOULD AFFECT THE NATIONAL IRRIGATION LAW.

There is another phase of this question of repeal of the commutation clause of the homestead law, the desert-land act, and the timber and stone act which I wish briefly to discuss, and I invite the attention both of those who voted for the act of June 17, 1902, reserving the proceeds of the sales of public lands in certain States and Territories for the construction of irrigation works under the National Government, and who are therefore anxious to see the work progress under that law, and those who voted against it, largely through the fear that the expenditures for national works of irrigation would not, for a very considerable length of time, be limited to the proceeds of the sale of public lands.

Under the bill in question a fund began to accumulate at the beginning of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and in the two years ending June 30, 1902, we had accumulated in the fund $7,772,721.91. So far no actual work of construction under the act has been undertaken. Under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior the work of survey and examination of certain projects has gone steadily forward, and in the no distant future it is believed that the Secretary will have before him the data to enable him to determine where work may be properly undertaken. It is now proposed, before a single project has been undertaken, before any expenditure has been made under the act, except a very moderate one for surveys and examinations, to repeal the laws under which the major portion of the fund is accumulated.

Of the approximately 7¾ millions in the irrigation fund at the beginning of the present fiscal year, $5,234,043.28 was derived from the operation of the commutation clause of the homestead law, the desert-land law, and the timber and stone act, the amount for each fiscal year, under each of these laws, being as follows:

Cash receipts.

Year.	Commuted homesteads.	Desert land.	Timber and stone.
1901	$820,782.10	$324,376.04	$992,144.93
1902	1,290,506.80	443,067.00	1,363,166.41
Two years	2,111,288.90	767,443.04	2,355,311.34

WOULD LEAVE LITTLE FOR NATIONAL IRRIGATION.

If, therefore, we had repealed the three laws in question when we enacted the national-irrigation law, instead of having in the Treasury at this time to the credit of that work 7¾ millions, we would have had in the Treasury but a trifle over 2½ millions, or an actual loss of approximately 5½ millions, or about five-eighths of the fund. No man who has considered this feature of the case and who is honestly anxious to see the irrigation law a success, can favor the repeal of the laws under which the greater portion of our fund is obtained. I am not unmindful of the fact that certain parties who parade as the friends of irrigation are agitating the repeal of these land laws, but this need surprise no one in view of the knowledge of the hostility of the same persons to the national irrigation act as it became a law, a hostility as hot and groundless as their demand since the passage of the act for credit for the accomplishment of the same, and in view of the close cord of sympathy, and, it is claimed, of financial interest between these people and those having large land holdings.

I have already trespassed upon the time of the House longer than I had intended in the discussion of these questions, and yet the subject is so vast, so far-reaching, has so many bearings and phases that I have only been able to present, in a condensed and hurried way, a very few of the suggestions and arguments which might be made with regard to the present agitation for the repeal of the land laws under discussion. I do not wish to be understood as registering the opinion that the laws referred to, either in their provisions or in their administration, are absolutely perfect. In fact, I have suggested some amendments which I think might properly be made. But I am of the opinion that on the whole these laws have operated wonderfully well in the development and settlement of our country along the lines of the American policy of small land holdings, the carrying out of which should be our constant aim and purpose.

No one conversant with present conditions imagines that a family can be supported according to American ideas on every 160 acres of Uncle Sam's unappropriated domain. There are vast regions where 640, 1,000, or 5,000 acres of irreclaimable grazing land are required for the support of a family, and in the no distant future we should recognize this fact in legislation, so that he who reclaims a tract of irrigable land may secure the use or ownership of a reasonable area of the nonirrigable grazing land adjacent to his home. We should seek to enforce the provisions of the land laws as we now have them, and amend and modify them from time to time along the lines of encouraging rather than discouraging settlement.

Lands that can be irrigated should unquestionably be held in small tracts, and this is the constant tendency throughout the West—a tendency to decrease rather than increase the size of irrigable holdings. If, perchance, lands which the Government, through the instrumentality of the national irrigation law, should some day propose to irrigate, did to a certain extent pass into private ownership without being fully irrigated, that fact would not be a bar to irrigation under that act; the act itself would compel the breaking up of these tracts into small areas, and, as I said before, the tendency throughout the West is to decrease rather than increase the size of areas under single ownership, whether utilized under irrigation or for grazing purposes.

SUGGESTIONS AS TO AMENDMENTS.

I do not claim any peculiar or special wisdom with regard to these matters, though a lifetime of experience in public-land States and Territories has given me some very positive ideas on the subject; and if I were to make any suggestions with regard to the laws we have discussed, they would be about as follows and purely tentative:

If, as a matter of fact, the commutation feature of the homestead law has been utilized for the purpose of obtaining title to valuable timber lands, amend that clause so that lands chiefly valuable for timber and not valuable for agricultural purposes when cleared could not be obtained under its provisions.

As I stated in the early part of my remarks, it is possible that the time has arrived when it would be wise to reduce the maximum acreage of an entry under the desert-land act to 160 acres; this is a subject properly up for discussion among those interested and having the best knowledge on the subject.

So far as the timber and stone act is concerned, it is in my opinion well adapted to the conditions east of the continental divide of the Rocky Mountains. If the more valuable timber lands in some parts of Oregon, Washington, California, and possibly Idaho and Montana, west of the continental divide, can not be practically and properly reserved, then the law should be amended as regards those regions so that the price paid per acre shall reasonably measure the value of the property disposed of.

ADMINISTRATION OF LAND LAWS.

And now one word as to the administration of the land laws. Operating over so vast an area as they do, over territory so widely and radically differing in conditions of soil, climate, and topography, it is impossible for finite wisdom to enact laws wholly and completely applicable to all sections and all conditions, and it is useless to hope that the most enlightened, thorough, and business like administration of these laws shall, in the multitude of cases, always compel full compliance with the spirit as well as the letter of the enactment. But in view of the conditions and difficulties, it is my opinion that our land laws have always been reasonably well administered and that, taken by and large and as a whole, they are better administered now than they ever have been in the history of the Union, not excepting the period when their administration was attended with much less difficulty than now by reason of the practical uniformity of conditions and the comparatively prescribed area of their operations.

The desire to own land is strong among the people of our country. The tendency to small holdings is constant and continuous. Where considerable holdings of lands suitable for the support of families in small holdings have been obtained, the tendency is to divide and to subdivide, and only over those tracts in the arid and semiarid regions, impossible of reclamation or irrigation and suited to grazing of live stock, will the tendency to ownership of larger areas than the 40, 80, or 160 acre farm continue, and there the tendency, in the main, is only to the control or ownership or use of such an area as may be necessary to the support of a family.

We do well to guard the public domain, to bend every energy to its development, and we shall work for the best interests of the people and of the country only as we encourage in a wise and conservative way the acquisition of public lands by private individuals, and invite every aid of private and cooperative enterprise in the work of irrigation reclamation, which the Government, through its recently established agency, can only undertake and accomplish over a comparatively few extensive tracts.

There are several Western States where less than a tenth of the lands comprising their area have passed into private ownership and are taxable for the support of State and county governments, schools, and all of the institutions of civilized communities. This necessarily results in burdensome taxation upon personal property and enterprise and necessitates delay in the inauguration of needed public improvements. The people of such States naturally look forward to the time when a greater portion of their area will be taxed, when by reason of personal interest as owners a greater number of people will bend their energies to develop and improve. The people of such States, those who are anxious to see the irrigation work of the National Government prosper, who seek the development of our Western country in the immediate future, and who do not look kindly upon the proposition to reserve all of our lands for "future generations," are opposed to the wholesale sweeping scheme of the "repealers."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to consume any more time? [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 156, nays 51, answered "present" 17, not voting 127; as follows:

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the session:

Mr. GROW with Mr. HOOKER.

Until further notice:

Mr. BLAKENEY with Mr. NEVILLE.

Mr. MOSS with Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia with Mr. BOWIE.

Mr. COOMBS with Mr. DAVEY.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. BURNETT.

Mr. FOSS with Mr. FOX.

Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. HENRY of Texas.

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee.

Mr. BALL of Delaware with Mr. BALL of Texas.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH and Mr. SHEPPARD, on this vote.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa with Mr. STARK.

Mr. HANBURY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. HANBURY. I was.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. HANBURY, and he voted "yea," as above recorded.

Mr. WARNOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present, and in his seat, and listening, when his name was called and did not hear it?

Mr. WARNOCK. I was present listening up to the beginning of the W's and did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. That does not answer the requirements.

Mr. WARNOCK. That is as far as I can go.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not vote. [Laughter.]

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On March 2, 1903:

H. R. 1027. An act granting a pension to Lavinia Cook;

H. R. 3100. An act providing for the conveyance of Widows Island, Maine, to the State of Maine;

H. R. 4178. An act for the relief of Austin A. Yates;

H. R. 5028. An act for the relief of Francis M. Oliver;

H. R. 15461. An act for the relief of Daniel F. Lee;

H. R. 15520. An act to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands;

H. R. 15985. An act to confirm certain forest lieu selections made under the act approved June 4, 1897;

H. R. 16522. An act granting an increase of pension to Caleb C. Van Sickell;

H. R. 16567. An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904; and

H. R. 16885. An act to extend to the port of Niagara Falls, N. Y., the privileges of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

AMENDING SECTION 3394, REVISED STATUTES, RELATING TO TOBACCO.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 16457) to amend section 3394 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to tobacco.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will admonish the gentleman from Indiana that if this is the bill that the Chair understands it to be, it is not on the Speaker's table, but is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. STEELE. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of an act to amend sections 3362 and 3394 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to tobacco, approved July 1, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"None of the packages of manufactured smoking or chewing tobacco, snuff, cigars, or cigarettes prescribed by law shall be permitted to have packed in, or attached to, or connected with them, or their contents, any article or thing whatsoever other than the manufacturer's wrapper and labels, the internal-revenue stamp, and the tobacco, snuff, cigars, or cigarettes, respectively, put up therein on which tax is required to be paid under internal-revenue laws; nor shall there be affixed to or branded, stamped, marked, written, or printed upon said packages or their contents any promise or offer of any promise, or any order or certificate, for any gift, prize, premium, payment, or reward. And it shall be unlawful for any manufacturer of tobacco, snuff, cigars, or cigarettes, or wholesale or retail dealer in manufactured tobacco, snuff, cigars, or cigarettes, or for any other person, firm, or corporation, to give or offer to give, directly or indirectly, any gift or premium for the return of any tag, label, or coupons, or any article or thing attached to or connected with any statutory package of tobacco, snuff, cigars, or cigarettes bearing or having attached thereto any internal-revenue stamp. Any violation of the provisions of this paragraph shall subject the offender to the penalties and punishments provided by section 3456 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to exclude from any package referred to in the preceding paragraph a label or certificate indicating the character of labor employed in the manufacture of the contents of such package."

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On that motion I demand a second.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I demand a second.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] for that purpose. I thought he was not going to make the demand, and that is the reason I made it.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, appointed as tellers on seconding the motion to suspend the rules Mr. GROSVENOR and Mr. STEELE.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 8.

So the motion was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] to control the time in favor of the motion, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] to control the time against it, each gentleman being entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to restore that section of the Dingley law which was repealed only a very few months ago which will prevent the use of coupons or tags or other devices to be returned to dealers in exchange for prizes to be given out on account of the number of packages of certain classes of tobacco that are sold. I am not going to discuss the bill, because every gentleman here is perfectly familiar with its effect, and because two or three gentlemen are very anxious to speak upon the bill, while I am not.

I reserve the balance of my time for the present.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Does this bill interfere in any way with trade-marks?

Mr. STEELE. It does not, nor with union-labor labels nor with tags.

Mr. LITTLE. As I understand, the purpose of the bill is simply to remove the gambling or prize feature in the sale of tobacco.

Mr. STEELE. Yes; precisely—to eliminate that.

Mr. LESSLER. Why was the law repealed a few months ago?

Mr. STEELE. You will have to ask somebody else that question; I give it up. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAYTON. This bill is against the tobacco trust, is it not, in your opinion?

Mr. STEELE. Well, it is in favor of fair dealing.

Mr. CLAYTON. And do not you think it is against the tobacco trust, and is not the tobacco trust trying to defeat its passage?

Mr. STEELE. Well, I have heard so. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the negative side of this proposition ought to be called on to make out its case before the affirmative side has been presented. Here is a proposition to change a certain statute, and to change the entire practice (if one step in this direction is to follow another, as would naturally be the case) of a dozen of the principal businesses of the country. And in this position of the question the gentleman reserves his time. If he has any reason to give why this bill ought to pass, it seems to me he ought to say so. It has not been a year since Congress passed the law which the gentleman now proposes to repeal. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to have a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On that question I ask for a division.

Mr. CLAYTON and others demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 171, nays 10, answered "present" 16, not voting 154; as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

MAJ. WILLIAM CRAWFORD GORGAS.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 1695) to authorize the promotion of Maj. William Crawford Gorgas, surgeon of the Army of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to suspend the rules and pass the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Maj. William Crawford Gorgas, surgeon, United States Army, to the grade of assistant surgeon-general, United States Army, with the rank of colonel, the number in that grade of the Medical Department to be temporarily increased for that purpose during the time that he may hold that office.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Alabama. The Chair appoints to tell the House the gentleman from Texas, Mr. SLAYDEN, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 1.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a point of order on the recognition to ascertain whether the gentleman from Alabama is opposed to the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will answer that, Mr. Speaker. I myself demanded a second in order that I might yield to the gentleman from New York, who is opposed to the bill. I now yield all of my time to him.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from New York will be recognized and not the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman from Alabama not think that the gentleman from New York was capable of demanding a second?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did demand a second.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which proposes to recognize the extraordinary services rendered to the country by a medical officer during the occupancy of the island of Cuba by the United States Army. There were three medical officers down there, Major Reed, Major Gorgas, and Lieut. Col. Valery Havard, all of whom rendered conspicuous and valuable services to the country. Major Reed, who made the valuable discoveries as to the method of the transmission of yellow fever, is dead, and no reward can go directly to him. Major Gorgas is living, and it is in his behalf that this bill has been proposed. It has the indorsement of the Secretary of War, of the Surgeon-General of the Army, of the Adjutant-General of the Army, and is strongly indorsed in a letter from Gen. Leonard Wood, who says:

> It gives me great pleasure, as Major Gorgas's commanding officer for the past two and a half years, to most earnestly invite to your favorable consideration the recognition, as proposed in this bill, of the excellent work performed by Major Gorgas as chief sanitary officer of the city of Habana, a work of inestimable value, not only to the inhabitants of the city and island, but to the inhabitants of the Southern States.

This letter was addressed to a Senator.

The bill proposes to create for this purpose the rank of colonel, and to advance Major Gorgas to that rank.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, yielding the floor now to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves the balance of his time. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate to be compelled to oppose a bill to promote a man who has rendered meritorious service, but the passage of this bill will do such gross injustice to other men in the service that I can not permit it to pass without raising my voice in protest.

Major Gorgas was the chief sanitary officer stationed at Habana, but while he was stationed there he was under the command of his superior officer, Lieut. Col. Valery Havard, who was in charge of the medical service in the entire island of Cuba. Major Gorgas, with unlimited resources placed at his command, did simply what any other intelligent and efficient medical officer in the service of the Army would have done. He cleaned up the city of Habana. The work was under the direction of Lieutenant-Colonel Havard.

Major Gorgas's position enabled him to sign the weekly statements of the vital statistics issued by our forces in Cuba at the time, and these were spread broadcast throughout the United States, and in this way Major Gorgas got his great reputation. Lieutenant-Colonel Havard rendered just as distinguished, if not more distinguished, service than Major Gorgas. It is unfair to him and to the other men in the medical branch of the Army to promote Major Gorgas over them. His promotion to the rank of colonel will jump thirty or thirty-five officers who now rank him in the medical service. It will place him six or seven numbers over Lieutenant-Colonel Havard, who is now 35 numbers above him in rank, and has been six years longer in the medical service of the Army. Major Gorgas is not entitled to any of the credit which came from the discovery of the agency of the mosquito in the transmission of yellow fever. That great scientific discovery belongs peculiarly to Major Reed. I think Congress in the last session passed an act to promote Major Reed to the rank of colonel, that being an additional colonelcy, and against that promotion there was no protest, because it was recognized that his service was of a preeminent character.

Mr. HAY. Major Reed never was promoted to be a colonel.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; he died. But I believe a bill passed.

Mr. HAY. No; no bill was ever introduced.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My information was that the bill had been introduced, but that Major Reed died before he could be promoted.

Mr. HAY. He died before the bill was introduced.

Mr. HULL. There was a pension bill to give $125 a month to his widow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The intention was to reward Major Reed.

Mr. HAY. And I will say to the gentleman that in the same recommendation Major Gorgas was recommended to be a lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Major Reed died before the intended promotion occurred.

Mr. LESSLER. I should like to know from the gentleman if this man can not be promoted now to be a lieutenant-colonel, if there is a vacancy.

Mr. HAY. There is no vacancy. This is to create an additional colonel.

Mr. LESSLER. But as a recognition of his service, if there is a vacancy in the numbers ahead of him, could he be promoted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not familiar enough with the matter to state that.

Mr. HULL. He could not jump anybody else.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have here, Mr. Speaker, a copy of an order issued from the headquarters of the Army of the Department of Cuba, dated Habana, December 27, 1901. It reads as follows:

No. 259.] HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF CUBA,
Habana, December 27, 1901.

The military governor of Cuba directs the publication of the following: Upon relieving Lieut. Col. Valery Havard, deputy surgeon-general, United States Army, chief surgeon of the Department of Cuba, of the many duties which he has been performing in connection with the civil government of the island, covering a period from the fall of 1898 until the present time, the military governor desires to thank Colonel Havard for his thorough, able, and conscientious performances of all duties assigned to him. Colonel Havard's duties have covered almost every field of sanitary work and have been of the greatest value to the insular government and the people of the island.

H. L. SCOTT, Adjutant-General.

[Traducción.]

No. 259.] CUARTEL GENERAL, DEPARTAMENTO DE CUBA,
Habana, 27 de Diciembre de 1901.

El Gobernador Militar de Cuba ha tenido á bien disponer la publicación de lo siguiente:

Al relevar al Teniente Coronel Valery Havard, Cirujano General Delegado del Ejército de los Estados Unidos, de las funciones que ha tenido á su cargo, relacionadas con el ramo del Gobierno Civil de esta Isla, desde el Otoño de 1898 hasta la fecha; cumple á los deseos del Gobernador Militar hacer presente, que se complace en reconocer el celo, inteligencia y fidelidad con que el Coronel Havard ha desempeñado su destino. Sus servicios han abarcado casi todos los detalles de la Higiene, produciendo los más satisfactorios resultados, así para el Gobierno, como para el pueblo de la Isla.

H. L. SCOTT,
El Ayudante General.

If this bill passes, this man, who is the superior officer of Major Gorgas and under whom Major Gorgas performed his work, will become the inferior of Major Gorgas. Major Gorgas was not even a member of Major Reed's commission which carried on the work instituted by him and which originated from the discovery of the agency of the mosquito in the transmission of yellow fever. I appeal to the House not to pass this bill and do so great an injustice to other men of equally meritorious service, however meritorious Major Gorgas's services may have been. I have nothing to say in condemnation of his work. This bill, it is true, has received the approval of different officials of the War Department, and yet it does not appear that at the time they sanctioned and approved this bill the services of Colonel Havard had been called to their attention. I reserve the balance of my time, and will yield to any gentleman who wishes to oppose the bill.

Mr. LESSLER. I would like to ask the gentleman if there was not a vacancy at the head of the corps of the Army a short time ago, and, as a brigadier-general is the head of that corps, as I understand, if this man's services were so tremendously valuable, why was he not put at the head of that corps?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not familar with the law regulating promotions in the medical service of the Army.

Mr. STEELE. He could have been nominated for appointment by the President.

Mr. LESSLER. Why not have had the officials recommend that rather than bring it up in this way?

Mr. HULL. He could not have been appointed a brigadier-general.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I yield such time as he desires to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HULL. Major Gorgas could not have been appointed a brigadier-general at the time, for the reason that he was not a lieutenant-colonel. The law which provides for making a brigadier-general by detail in the service provides that they shall be taken from not below the grade of lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. LESSLER. Could he not have been given that grade?

Mr. HULL. He could not under the law for promotions. If there was a vacancy above him, and he had distinguished himself in the field, being a senior major, he could have got the grade of lieutenant-colonel, but under the law you can not jump a junior over a senior.

Mr. LESSLER. Does the gentleman say that for gallant and meritorious service in the Army there is no way of promoting a man who is in inferior rank?

Mr. HULL. I do mean to say that, and I am glad of it. But if a man is so distinguished in his services he could be made a brigadier-general; he could be promoted up to and including the grade of colonel. But the President has absolutely no power to jump a junior over a senior. He could be given temporary rank in the volunteer service.

Mr. LESSLER. Funston got it.

Mr. HULL. He was made a brigadier-general of volunteers.

Mr. LESSLER. He got promoted to the regulars.

Mr. HULL. No; he was not in the Regular Army. He never was a commissioned officer of the Regular Army. When he received his promotion it was from that of brigadier-general of volunteers to brigadier-general of the regular force.

Mr. STEELE. I was mistaken. I had forgotten that under the provisions of the recent law they must select from not under the grade of lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. HULL. If I may be pardoned for just a word. It was not intended by the committee, I know, to do any injustice to any officer in the Medical Corps. I know, further, that the general law limits the man to the file above, and in some sense it is a discrimination against the officers, of course. But no junior is placed in a higher position than a senior by this. At the same time it was considered that this was due to this man for the great services that he rendered in connection with the yellow-fever investigation in Cuba, especially when it is backed up as it was by the unanimous recommendation of his superior officers of the War Department. The committee thought it was no more than just to him to give him this promotion.

Mr. LESSLER. Who were the other officers associated with him in this work?

Mr. HULL. Major Reed was the other officer.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he has consumed all the time in this debate that he wishes to? [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not desire to use any more time.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to say just a word or two.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield such time to the gentleman as he desires.

Mr. STEELE. My opinion is that it is a bad precedent to come to Congress with the recommendation that a man should be promoted over his superior officer every time an officer of the Army has done his duty and seems to have done it very well. There is a way of having officers do their duty, whether they wish to or not, and if they are not efficient, or if they do not desire to do their whole duty, to muster them out of the service of the Government on account of their inefficiency. It is a rank injustice to give one officer an opportunity to perform especially good services and to deny another officer an opportunity to merit promotion. The officer who has been favored with an opportunity is promoted, while another officer by lack of opportunity can not be promoted. It is absolutely unfair. Nine times out of ten where officers were kept from Cuba it was against their will. They wanted to go over there. They wanted an opportunity to fight and to show what was in them.

Now, because they were denied this opportunity and others were allowed to go, the officers who got the favor overslaughed those who would have liked to have had the opportunity in many cases. As brave men as ever did duty have been thus overslaughed. I do not believe it is right. There is nothing especially meritorious in this case. Surgeon Reed undoubtedly discovered that yellow fever was carried from one person to another by the mosquito, and for that reason special favor has been asked for his widow, which I favor. Now they come up with another officer, because he was with Major Reed, and ask for him special favor; and it is discovered here that there is still another officer, who also has been with Major Reed performing special service, and that he ought to be a brigadier-general or a colonel. His time will come hereafter, I suppose. It all creates heartburnings where there is no occasion for it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has eighteen minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New York has five minutes remaining.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will ask the gentleman from New York if he will not occupy some of his time now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two gentlemen have asked me for time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will ask the gentleman from New York to use his time now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman from Texas use his time in one speech?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LESSLER].

Mr. LESSLER. Mr. Speaker, the pigeonholes of the committee upon which I have the honor to be are filled with two classes of bills. One is for men who have been thrown out of one branch of this Government's armed force who desire to override the decision of the officers who tried them and threw them out and to get back through Congressional aid, and the other is a set of bills to either promote men, give them more pay, or give them medals for doing their duty. Now, I am glad that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] spoke about the men who, during the Spanish-American war, did not have the opportunity to go to the front, but wore their uniforms and did the heroic work of sticking to the desk and looking after the feeding and the clothing and the other hard, strenuous work that men do not care to do and for which men do not get medals on the field of battle.

I think when we take up a bill of this kind that we ought to think of the other members of the corps, who have nobody here to protest in their behalf and who for the Government did the best that was in them, instead of shirking and not giving them anything, especially awards of merit by act of Congress. Congress has provided ways of recognizing ability. Congress and the people have enacted laws by which men are recognized when they do a great and good work for the Government. The men who are doing the everyday work, the humble work, a full day's conscientious work, ought not to be thrown aside by a bill of this kind. I hope the bill will not pass.

Mr. STEELE. I want to explain that I was not talking in behalf of the gentlemen particularly who are at their desks, but in behalf of those officers who had to do duty on the frontier, do routine duty, while others had the opportunity of distinguishing themselves.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman from Texas yield me three minutes of his time, for I think what I shall say will be in the interest of the public service, so that it will not militate against him seriously.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman from Texas has agreed to yield to me the balance of his time, and I could not yield to the gentleman from Indiana to make a speech against the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I did not know that the gentleman from Texas had yielded his time. Mr. Speaker, I simply rose for the purpose of saying that it has come to this pass. After all the charges for hours by the Republican side of this House that we were obstructing legislation of great and national importance we come to this proposition at this time as the business before this House and before the country for needed legislation.

Have we not had emphasized to us as clear as noonday that there is no public legislation of vital importance that is obstructed by the Democratic side of the House in their efforts to have orderly procedure guide us in the transaction of public business in this body? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Here we have division on this side and division on the other side about this question which is of no public significance. Why does not the Republican side present the great measures that they say we have obstructed? Now, this shows the futility of your censure of us for asking that this House of Representatives do business in an orderly way under the rules that the majority in their tyranny have fastened as a yoke upon our necks. This case you can not say is of public importance. No; it is a special matter, an individual matter, which gives undue preferentiality to one officer against others equally deserving; a matter that militates against some of the best officers of the service by giving preference to another. This is the pretty pass that the House of Representatives is driven to after the great parade made by the Republicans that the Democrats were obstructing legislation. Willingly we leave the decision to the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. I have sixteen minutes, I believe, Mr. Speaker. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether one gentleman is to use the residue of the time on the affirmative side. That was the information furnished on the floor.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asked, I believe, whether we were going to close in a single speech, and I understand that my friend from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] answered in the affirmative.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I did not then know anything about any arrangement between the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HAY. In order to carry out in good faith that agreement with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] I can not yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If another arrangement has been made I shall not object, but my impression was—I say it in all fairness—that ordinarily one gentleman should close.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that when I made the statement to him I had no knowledge that any other gentleman wanted to say anything about this question except my friend from Virginia. I expected that the debate would close in five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not object.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] for five minutes.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, during the years that I have served upon the Committee on Military Affairs I have been invincibly opposed to special bills for the promotion of officers of the Army unless they were recommended by the Executive. To allow officers to come here on their own behalf—to work for themselves for promotion by act of Congress—or, if they do not come themselves, to get their friends to procure such action, would demoralize any military service in the world. On the other hand, to interfere with or restrict the right and duty of the Executive to recognize distinguished, extraordinary, and valuable services to the country by recommending to Congress special officers to be rewarded for such extraordinary service, would be to take away from the Army one great incentive to special zeal and efficiency in that service.

The precedents for such action as is here proposed are numerous. We made General Grant a general because it was recommended by the Chief Executive and was demanded by the whole nation. In this case two American doctors—Dr. Reed and Dr. Gorgas—performed such extraordinary service in stamping out the yellow fever from its own home, and protecting our soil from its inroads and its dangers, that the Secretary of War and, I believe, the President, recommended that special promotion should be granted by act of Congress to both of these gentlemen.

We are told that there is no haste; that a measure of this kind ought not to be brought in at this time. Sir, one of those men is dead, and his widow has been seeking a pension. The other man to whom the country owes the service which resulted in such extraordinary and valuable results is still alive. The Executive, the Commander in Chief, the one with whom such honor should originate, has, through the Secretary of War, recommended some small reward to be accorded by Congress for this distinguished service. We desire efficiency in that corps—a corps that is called upon at times to do work just as dangerous as that performed in battle. We are asked to recognize and reward service in averting what may be more to be dreaded than war—"the pestilence that walks in darkness." If we desire zeal and efficiency in the service of this corps, let us not turn our backs upon the recommendation of him who in his seat as Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy is trying to give to this country the best service that it has ever known.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, it may be true, as has been said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], that it is bad practice and bad precedent to legislate in this way for officers of the Army generally. But those who are acquainted with the make-up of the Army know that the scientific corps, the Medical Corps, of the Army have had, and will continue to have, very little opportunity for promotion of those men who have distinguished themselves. Major Gorgas has distinguished himself, according to the Secretary of War and according to the Surgeon-General, by "extraordinary service" in ridding the island of Cuba of yellow fever; and the brilliant character of this scientific achievement can not be better stated than in the words of this report. And I desire, gentlemen of the House, to mark that Major Gorgas and Major Reed are spoken of alike in the recognition of this great achievement.

I pause here to say that no greater achievement for the human race has ever happened than the discovery of Major Reed, aided by Major Gorgas, in finding out how the yellow fever is propagated and how its ravages may be aborted. It ought to be esteemed by members of this House a proud privilege to recognize the services of men who have cooperated in bringing about a great and wonderful achievement in medicine, unequaled since the days of Jenner, when he discovered vaccination as a preventive for smallpox.

A MEMBER. Even greater than that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me ask the gentleman a question: Does the gentleman believe that Congress in rewarding Major Gorgas would do an act of injustice to men who, under Major Gorgas, conducted these operations?

Mr. HAY. I do not believe that Congress ought to do an injustice to any man; but I believe it should do justice to the men who carried this matter to a successful conclusion. For my part, I have never heard that Lieutenant-Colonel Havard had anything specially to do with this question of yellow fever. I do not wish to do him the least injustice. I am willing to accord to him all the praise and all the glory which he may have acquired; but I do say that when the Senate of the United States has been able to pass this bill without a dissenting voice, the representatives of the people, who are in touch with the people, ought to be able to meet them on common ground. I say that this great discovery has not only saved the lives of thousands of people, and will save the lives of thousands of people yet to come, but it has opened the ports of this country and will keep them open for all time to come. The scourge of yellow fever will nevermore lay its hand upon the people of the United States, and that great boon is due to the labors and the work of these men. I ask of you, my fellow-members on this floor, to accord to Major Gorgas the meed of praise and honor which he has achieved and which is recognized to be due to him by the scientific world as well as by his superior officers. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. HAY. I make the point of order that the gentleman's demand for a division comes too late.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Chair has made no announcement and I am entitled to know what the announcement of the Chair is before I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would dislike to shut the gentleman off. The gentleman demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 11.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 26, answered "present" 45, not voting 144; as follows:

Mr. PATTERSON of Pennsylvania with Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama.

Mr. HUGHES with Mr. BOWIE.

Mr. SCHIRM with Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN.

Mr. COUSINS with Mr. DINSMORE.

Mr. BALL of Delaware with Mr. LEWIS of Georgia.

Mr. COOMBS with Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.

Mr. WANGER with Mr. ADAMSON.

Mr. SHELDEN with Mr. RHEA.

On this vote:

Mr. KNAPP with Mr. SNOOK.

Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

Mr. DOUGLAS with Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. ALLEN of Maine with Mr. LAMB.

Mr. APLIN with Mr. JETT.

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. WILEY.

Mr. ACHESON with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in his seat and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I am not quite certain whether I was or not. I came in at the door about that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the gentleman's statement the Chair does not think he is entitled to vote.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN HANDFORTH.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended and that the bill (S. 4641) for the relief of Benjamin Franklin Handforth be passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a retiring board, which shall have power, notwithstanding the record and sentence of court-martial, dated December 7, 1887, to review the case of former Lieut. Benjamin F. Handforth, from his admission as a cadet at the Military Academy to the date of his dismissal from the Army, with the view of determining whether his present insanity existed at the time of such dismissal or is due or traceable to service origin. The board shall have power also to take into consideration the facts and circumstances of his present insanity in whatever bearing they may legitimately have upon the subject of inquiry. In the event said board shall find that said insanity existed at the time of such dismissal or is due or traceable to service origin, the President is authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint the said Benjamin Franklin Handforth to the rank in the Army held by him at the date of his dismissal, and to retire him with such rank, the retired list being increased in number to that extent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill which has just been read by the Clerk.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand a second.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as tellers Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 1.

Accordingly a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized to control the time in the affirmative and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] in the negative.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, this bill does nothing of itself or arbitrarily. It provides for the convening of a retiring board to determine either of two facts: First, whether Lieutenant Handforth was insane when he was dismissed from the Army; or, second, whether his present insanity is traceable to his military service.

The case in a nut shell is this: Handforth was appointed from the State of New Jersey. He graduated at West Point. He served many years as an officer in the United States Army, doing faithful and efficient service. In about 1887 he began to act in a very eccentric manner. He was tried by court-martial for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, refused to make any defense, and of course was convicted.

When his case was taken before the President he did the unusual thing to write a letter to the President, asking that the findings of the court-martial be approved. He went out over the country and was immediately discovered to be an insane man, and has been from then until now almost continuously confined in some insane asylum. He is now in the Illinois Asylum for Insane Criminals, because his people are not able to keep him in any better place, and the physician in charge of that asylum, whose letter is appended to this report, and which may be read if desired, states that he is satisfied that the patient was insane when he was dismissed from the Army.

It is a fact in the case that has no relation to the present matter that the man is really in the late stages of consumption. Now, all that is asked is that a board of inquiry shall be convened to determine, first, whether he was insane at the time of the conduct for which he was dismissed; second, whether his present insanity is traceable to his military service. If these facts are determined in his favor by the board, then the President is authorized to put him on the retired list, otherwise nothing can be done. It is an eminently fair bill. It has the approval, in so far as I know, of everybody who has had any contact with the case. Now, the opening sentence of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs is: "This case is a sad and exceptional one."

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second on this bill which under the rules gives me the right to control the time in opposition to it. I did not fully understand the bill and I could not hear it read distinctly from the desk. I have now examined the bill and report and I do not desire to take up the time of the House in opposing the bill. If there is any gentleman here who desires to oppose it I will yield him time; and if not—that is, if no gentleman desires to take the floor in opposition to the bill—I only wish to add that I think that this unfortunate man ought to have the relief asked for in the bill. I believe it right, and I am so desirous of doing him full justice that I consent that a vote be taken, and I will ask that it be a record vote by the yeas and nays, in order that we may all go on record in favor of this meritorious bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. I would like to say to the gentleman——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, just a word. I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. SULZER. That I am in favor of this bill; but I have another bill, somewhat similar, on the Speaker's desk—a privileged bill—and I would like to know how it is that the gentleman from New Jersey is recognized to pass his bill and I am not recognized to pass my bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is he also insane?

Mr. SULZER. Oh, no; my friend is not insane, but he may go insane if this bill does not pass. [Laughter.] I hope that this bill will pass, and that I will also get a chance to pass my bill. That is all I want to say now.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 178, nay 1, answered "present" 23, not voting 149; as follows:

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. BROMWELL with Mr. CASSINGHAM.

Mr. BOWERSOCK with Mr. COONEY.

Mr. BULL with Mr. RUSSELL.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa with Mr. SLAYDEN.

On this vote:

Mr. WACHTER with Mr. POU.

Mr. JACKSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be recorded.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called and failed to hear it?

Mr. JACKSON of Kansas. No; some one spoke to me and my attention was attracted for the moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 17493. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16990) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 8186. An act for the relief of John D. Chadwick;

H. R. 6745. An act for the relief of Anthony R. Ravenscroft;

H. R. 6703. An act for the relief of George A. Rogers; and

H. R. 16138. An act granting the right of way to the Kenova and Big Sandy Railroad Company through the Government lands at Lock No. 2, Big Sandy River, and at Lock No. 3, Big Sandy River, both in Wayne County, W. Va.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill (H. R. 17493) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for prior years, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments at length.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House disagree to the Senate amendments en bloc and ask for a conference with the Senate?

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes had it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, Mr. Speaker, we might as well have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 197, nays 0, answered "present" 16, not voting 138; as follows:

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the Post-Office appropriation bill, with the accompanying statement of the House conferees.

The report was read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16990) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 17, 21, 22, 26, 32, 33, 35, 36, and 41.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 14, 20, 23, 24, 25, 28, 29, 34, 37, 38, 39, and 40, and agree to the same.

Change sections to number consecutively.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 2, line 11, after the word "officers," strike out the following: "one at $3,500; 1 at New York, N. Y., $4,000; 1 at Chicago, Ill., $4,000," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "two at $3,500: Provided, That the salary of the assistant postmaster at Chicago shall be fixed at $3,500 per annum;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 2, line 24, strike out the amount named and insert in lieu thereof "$94,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 10, line 15, strike out the amount named and insert in lieu thereof the following: "one superintendent of money-order division, 1 superintendent of registry, 1 superintendent of mails, and 1 superintendent of delivery, at $3,000 each, $24,800;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 10, line 23, strike out the amount named and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$13,900;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 12, lines 3 and 4, strike out the amount named and insert "$250;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 12, line 4, after the word "dollars," strike out the amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of which not more than $190,000 shall be expended in rentals of machines: Provided, That no canceling machine shall be rented at an annual rental exceeding the rate now paid by the Department: And provided further, That the Postmaster-General shall, whenever in his opinion it is advisable, purchase canceling machines, and shall report fully to the next Congress in regard to said machines, whether they should be purchased or rented, all facts connected therewith, and what steps ought to be taken to protect the interests of the Government therein;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 14, line 13, strike out "ten" and insert "eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 14, lines 14 and 15, strike out the amount named and insert "nineteen thousand two hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 16, line 8, strike out the amount named and insert "twenty-one thousand seven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 17, line 22, strike out in the paragraph all after the word "Postmaster-General" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "$2,000: Provided, That not exceeding $200 of this amount appropriated may be used for necessary traveling expenses of the First Assistant Postmaster-General within the District of Columbia: And provided further, That a sum not exceeding $300 may be used for the purchase of city directories and books of reference;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 23, line 24, after "four," strike out the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "compensation and expenses of United States delegate to the Universal Postal Congress to convene at Rome, Italy, not to exceed $7,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 25, after line 8, strike out the matter inserted and insert the following: "For the employment of special counsel, to be appointed by the Attorney-General, when requested by the Postmaster-General, and at compensation to be fixed by the Attorney-General, not exceeding this temporary appropriation, to prosecute and defend, on behalf of the Post-Office Department, all suits now pending or which may hereafter arise affecting the second-class mailing privilege, $25,000;" and the Senate agree to same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 25, line 9, after the word "items," strike out the matter inserted and insert the following: "$1,000: Provided, That not exceeding $200 of this amount appropriated may be used for necessary traveling expenses of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General within the District of Columbia;" and the Senate agree to the same.

E. F. LOUD,
GEO. W. SMITH,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

WM. E. MASON,
BOIES PENROSE,
A. S. CLAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16990) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in the accompanying conference report on each of the Senate amendments, as follows:

The Senate made 41 amendments to the bill, producing a total decrease of $1,840,841.40. An increase of $3,000 is made in the item of compensation to postmasters, $1,500 for assistant postmasters, $12,800 for superintendents of money-order, registry, mails, and delivery service, $90,000 for canceling machines, $7,200 for special agents in charge of rural free-delivery service, $800 for a vehicle for the First Assistant Postmaster-General, $1,000 for increase of salaries of superintendent and assistant superintendent of Railway Mail Service, $25,000 for special counsel fees to defend suits pending in regard to the second-class mailing privilege, and $58.60 for claims.

By the action of the conferees the Senate recedes from amendments involving a decrease of $1,901,641.40.

By the action of the conferees the amount carried in this bill is increased $71,500 above that carried in the bill at the time it passed the House.

The effect of the action of the conferees on amendment No. 1 reduces the amount $3,000.

On amendment No. 2: An increase in the salary of the postmaster at Chicago from six to eight thousand dollars.

Amendment No. 3 increases the salary of the assistant postmaster at Chicago from $3,000 to $3,500.

Amendment No. 4 reduces the number of assistant postmasters at $3,000 from 17 to 16. Amendment No. 5 corrects totals. Amendments 6, 7, 8, and 9 the Senate recedes. The effect of amendment No. 10 is to increase the salaries of the superintendent of money order, superintendent of registry, superintendent of mails, and superintendent of delivery from $2,700 to $3,000, and corrects the total in the amount appropriated. Amendment No. 11 corrects totals. The effect of the action of the conferees on amendment No. 12 is to increase the amount for canceling machines $40,000 above amount allowed by the House and $50,000 below that allowed by the Senate. The action of the conferees on amendment No. 13 is to limit the amount which may be used for rental of canceling machines to $190,000, and to provide that $60,000 may be used in the discretion of the Postmaster-General for the purchase of canceling machines.

The effect of the action of the conferees on amendment No. 14 permits the use of automobiles. Upon amendment No. 15 the action of the conferees is to reduce the number of special agents in charge of divisions from 10, as provided by the Senate, to 8. Amendment No. 16 corrects total.

Amendment No. 17: The effect of the action of the conferees is to strike out the provision for the payment of tolls on toll roads. Amendment No. 18 corrects totals. Amendment No. 19 limits the amount of money the First Assistant Postmaster-General may expend for traveling expenses in the city of Washington to $200 per annum. The effect of the action of the conferees upon amendment No. 20 is to provide $300 per annum for hire of a vehicle in the First Assistant Postmaster-General's division. Upon amendments Nos. 21 and 22 the action of the conferees increases the amount of appropriation for railroad mail pay to the amount carried in the bill as it passed the House and removes the limitation that no deficiency shall be created.

The action of the conferees upon amendment No. 23 increases the salary of the General Superintendent of Railway-Mail Service to $4,000, and No. 24 increases the salary of the assistant general superintendent to $3,500.

Amendment No. 25 corrects a total.

The effect of the action of the conferees on amendment No. 26 is to strike out the proposed extention of special-facility service from Newton to Fort Scott, Kans. Upon amendment No. 27 the effect of the action of the conferees is to provide compensation and expenses of delegate to Universal Postal Congress at Rome. The action upon amendment No. 28 provides for the manufacture of books of stamps. On amendment No. 29 the action of the conferees makes permanent law the provision relating to the indemnity of $100 for loss of first-class registered matter.

The action of the conferees on amendment No. 30 allows the employment of special counsel to defend the Government in suits relating to second-class mail privileges, and appropriates $25,000 for such purpose. Upon amendment No. 31, the action of the conferees limits the expenditure of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General for traveling expenses in the city of Washington to $200. The effect upon amendments No. 32 and 33 is to strike out of the bill two private claims. Upon amendment No. 34 the effect is to strike out the provision relating to mailing of third and fourth class matter without affixing postage stamps.

The effect of the action of the conferees upon amendments 35 and 36 is to leave the provision in the bill as it passed the House relating to punishment of persons for interference with railway mail clerks while on duty, and strikes out the provision of the Senate relating to the same matter. Amendments 37, 38, and 39 correct the numbers of sections. The effect of the action of the conferees upon amendment No. 40 is to permit the sender of third and fourth class mail matter to receive personally or by order undelivered matter. Upon amendment No. 41 the action of the conferees strikes out the Senate provision relating to registration of public documents by members of Congress.

E. F. LOUD,
GEO. W. SMITH,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, the statement just read very clearly sets forth everything contained in these amendments. The Senate at this session has made very few amendments that were of any importance on this bill. The only amendments remaining as presented to the House by the conferees are some few relating to increase of salaries. There is an increase of the salary of the postmaster at Chicago from $6,000 to $8,000; there is an increase of the salary of the superintendents at Chicago from $2,700 to $3,000; there is an increase of the salary of the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service from $3,500 to $4,000.

While the House conferees did not like to assent to these increases of salary, large as the salaries now are, yet, after the example had been set by our great Appropriations Committee in increasing the salaries of some of the officers in charge of divisions in the Post-Office Department, we could not possibly stop it. When you have once established the principle of increasing to a certain amount the salary of a division superintendent, then you can not stop until you have gone down along the whole line. But I want the House to understand, and the Committee on Appropriations to understand, that they first set this precedent of increasing the salaries of division superintendents, or gentlemen in charge of divisions, from $3,500 to $4,000.

The Senate did adopt, without discussion, an amendment in relation to railroad mail pay, cutting it down something like $2,000,000. Then on the floor of the Senate there was put on a provision that there should be no deficiency created. When we got into conference it was discovered that the amendment had not been properly matured, so the Senate receded.

The bill carries about $75,000 more than when it passed the House. The conferees are, I think, well satisfied with the result of their labors.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to occupy a few minutes.

Mr. LOUD. I believe I am limited to ten minutes. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I used?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). Four minutes; the gentleman has six minutes remaining.

Mr. LOUD. I would gladly yield five minutes of my six to the other side if they would enter into an agreement not to call the roll on the final passage of this bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. We can not do that.

Mr. LOUD. I yield the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS] one minute.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Speaker, I avail myself of these sixty seconds to inform the House that we have on the Calendar a bill to increase the pension of the old Mexican soldiers from $8 to $12 a month. A great many of us on this side of the House have been working to have that bill reported; and we were rejoiced a few moments ago when the Chairman of the Committee on Pensions came over here and informed us that he expected to try to get that bill up. We are anxious that he should do that to-night.

We have spent days here, Mr. Speaker, in increasing the pensions of Federal soldiers; and to that I have made no objection. I believe in liberal pensions for the Federal soldiers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SNODGRASS. I hope the gentleman will yield me another minute.

Mr. LOUD. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Speaker, in this Congress and the last we have passed various bills to increase the pensions of Union soldiers; but we have forgotten the fact that more than half a century ago the Mexican soldiers rendered distinguished service to the country. Yet they have been discriminated against; niggardly provision for them has been made by this Government. The Mexican soldier receives now a pension of only $8 a month; and in order to get any more he must subscribe to a pauper oath. As have other gentlemen, I have introduced bills both in this and the last Congress to remove these objectionable restrictions against their drawing pensions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Will the gentleman give me another minute?

Mr. LOUD. I have got to yield to my colleague on the committee. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three and one-half minutes.

Mr. LOUD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON. I will yield that to my colleague, if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. LOUD. I have yielded all the time I have but half a minute.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman allow me to yield to my colleague the time he has given me?

Mr. LOUD. I do not care what the gentleman does with it.

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS].

Mr. SNODGRASS. Now, Mr. Speaker, we want to appeal to this House to-night to pass that bill. We will stay here all night with you if you will pass that bill.

Several MEMBERS. Without a roll call?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I do not think that gentlemen ought to make that kind of a condition. We will give you three or a dozen roll calls if you will pass that bill. [Laughter.] We will sit with you from now until to-morrow morning. Gentlemen, I think this is a serious matter. I have appealed to my distinguished friend from Ohio who stands before me, and I believe I can say for him that he is heartily in favor of this bill. These old soldiers are rapidly passing to their graves, and if we ever expect to do anything for them that is to be of any benefit the time has come for us to do it.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman ask to pass it by unanimous consent?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I would be glad to ask to pass it by unanimous consent.

Mr. LACEY. Then ask it and stop talking about it. Ask it.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent, if I can be recognized for that purpose, to take from the Calendar that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At the proper time the Chair will be glad to recognize the gentleman, but not now.

Mr. SNODGRASS. And I hope we can come to an agreement on this proposition. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it is the duty of this House to pass this bill. I believe that the old Federal soldiers are heartily in favor of this. These old Mexican soldiers have not had anybody to——

Mr. HULL. As soon as this bill passes, ask unanimous consent and we will pass it without any roll call.

Mr. SNODGRASS. But, whether unanimous consent is given or not, for myself I would be glad to give it. I think this bill should be considered. It is the duty of this House to take up this bill and pass it. We have spent a few hours here to-night in passing private bills and that time might well have been employed in the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I will endeavor to use the half minute in order to avoid moving the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question in reference to this bill?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I only wanted to ask the gentleman if there is any change of existing law in this bill in respect to the payment of——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I was going to ask in reference to tollgate charges for mail carriers on rural routes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I call for a division.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. LOUD. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 190, nays 2, answered "present" 14, not voting 145; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate announced that that body had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 17493) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for prior years, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York calls up a conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to do away with the reading of the report, and let the statement be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the conference report, and that the statement be read instead thereof. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16910) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 14, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 34, 37, 53, 54, 62, and 74.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 16, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 32, 35, 39, 40, 43, 44, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 84, and 85; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,248,520;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$130,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$37,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of said amendment "for the establishment in the State of California of experiment stations," and in lieu thereof insert "in cooperation with the experiment station of the State of California;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$290,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$674,930;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$312,860;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$170,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$212,480;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 39 of the bill, in line 18, after the word "thousand," strike out the words "five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 82: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 82, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$65,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 83: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. W. WADSWORTH,
E. S. HENRY,
JOHN S. WILLIAMS,
Managers on the part of the House.

REDFIELD PROCTOR,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
WM. B. BATE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Statement to accompany the conference report on the bill (H. R. 16910) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

The bill as it passed the House carried $5,268,860. As it passed the Senate it carried $6,108,360, of which sum, however, $500,000 is not for the routine or current expenses of the Department, but is an "emergency appropriation," "to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to stamp out and eradicate foot-and-mouth disease and other contagious diseases of animals" should the necessity arise (and therefore may not be used at all), and the bill provides that it shall not be used for any other purpose; so that the actual amount for the current and routine work of the Department as passed by the Senate was $5,608,360, and the amount carried by the bill as agreed to by your conferees is $5,478,160, showing, therefore, an actual increase over the amount carried by the bill as it passed the House of $209,300.

The following amendments, concurred in by your conferees, show the increases:

No. 1 adds to salary of private secretary to Secretary of Agriculture	$250
Nos. 24 and 25 add 1 clerk, class 4, and takes out 1 clerk, class 3, from salary roll of Bureau of Plant Industry, making a net increase of	200
No. 28 adds to Division of Vegetable Pathology	20,000
No. 30 adds to Division of Pomology	7,000
No. 32 adds to Division of Botany	10,000
No. 33 adds to Division of Grass and Forage Plants	5,000
No. 41 adds to Bureau of Forestry	58,860
No. 45 adds to Bureau of Soils	40,000
No. 48 adds to Division of Biological Survey	5,000
No. 49 provides for transportation of elk or other game animals presented to the Government	1,000
No. 51 adds to the salary of the Chief of Division of Accounts	250
Nos. 56, 57, and 58 changes the Division of Statistics to a bureau and adds to the salary of chief thereof	500
No. 63 adds to the general expenses of Bureau of Statistics	15,000
No. 68 adds to the general expenses of Division of Foreign Markets	1,000
No. 71 adds to the general expenses of Department library	2,000
No. 75 adds to appropriations for Agricultural experiment stations	9,000
No. 82 adds for irrigation investigations	40,000
No. 83 adds to road investigation	5,000
Total increases	220,060

The following amendments, concurred in by your conferees, show the decreases:

No. 11. Salaries in Weather Bureau	$40
No. 36. In the amount for seeds	10,000
No. 39. Salaries, Bureau of Forestry	720
Total decreases		10,760
Net increase		209,300

All other amendments (except 85) are mere corrections of totals, phraseology, and the like, and are not material.

Amendment numbered 85 is the "emergency appropriation" to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to stamp out any contagious diseases of animals should emergency arise, therefore the amounts carried by the bill as agreed upon are as follows:

For current and routine expenses	$5,478,160
For emergency	500,000
Total	5,978,160

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the statement is so full, and covers all the details of the bill so well, that I do not care to consume any time, and I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for five minutes, and the House will please give him attention while he is heard.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, a session of Congress, probably one of the most extraordinary ever held, is rapidly drawing to a close. Gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber are laboring to create the impression in the country that they are working with might and main to pass certain appropriation bills and other great public measures against the strenuous opposition of this side of the House, which they characterize as entirely indefensible.

I call attention to the fact that long before any controversy involving the filibuster, as they call it, arose on this floor, by the deliberate action of the Republicans in this House and their coparceners at the other end of the Capitol, all legislation demanded by the American public had been throttled and rendered hopeless. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Under the pretense of amending the interstate-commerce bill, defective as it was, you took away from it its most potent features and rendered it even more useless than it has been during the fifteen years in which you have sat here and listened session after session to appeals for its effective amendment.

You also undertook to deal with the trusts, and how did you do it? You placed in the Department of Commerce bill a little section of law about an inch long, as harmless as harmless could be, and then confessed its total inadequacy by reporting by the unanimous vote of the Republicans on the committee what is called the Littlefield trust bill, knowing that it would go to the other end of the Capitol and sleep the sleep that knows no waking. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You did it because you knew that you could go to the country and again pretend that for want of time you could not enact effective trust legislation. I hold in my hand an expression of opinion by a reputable newspaper correspondent, a summing up of the situation, which I will read. You may jeer at it if you please. It embodies the opinions of the American people. It is the just censure of righteous conscience, passed upon a party which is evading the great public questions of the times and refusing to deal with them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The exhibition of brute force by the Republicans results from a fear they have that at an extra session of Congress they might be confronted with a demand for antitrust and tariff legislation. While there is a division of sentiment among the rank and file of the Republicans in Congress on the subject of trusts and tariff revision, the leaders are united in their determination that these questions shall not be fairly considered.

Men like Speaker D. B. HENDERSON, Representative JOHN DALZELL, and Senator NELSON W. ALDRICH would be willing even to destroy the Administration of their own President, if that were necessary, to preserve the present iniquitous tariff and to protect the trusts from serious interference.

[Cries of "Oh" on the Republican side.]

And by the way, I may remark as I pass along that while there may be some resentment on this side of the Chamber, surfeit of not a little bad breeding on the other side makes things about even. The writer goes on to say:

They mistrust the power of men of their own party to resist the popular demand for a corrective of the existing evils, and they aim to render absolute their own domination of the legislative organization of Congress. These leaders fear an extra session, as do all the Republicans, and under the cover of a necessity for action on appropriation bills in order to avoid the immediate reassembling of Congress they are arbitrarily gathering into their hands a power sufficient not only to render the minority helpless, but to stifle a visible majority and to hold in subjection members of their own party.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not until there is order enough for you to be heard. I decline to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota is out of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. What are you reading from?

Mr. COCHRAN. I am reading from the Washington correspondence of the Baltimore Sun, a very conservative Eastern paper, which ought to be followed by the distinguished Representative of the East from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. It would be if it was a Republican paper.

Mr. COCHRAN. Ah, you would follow Republican papers, would you? [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I have listened with much interest to the clapping of hands and to the excuses made by our friends. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] If you are not competent to do anything but that [clapping hands], and in perfect good temper, I am reminded, as illustrative of the position upon the part of our friends, as it seems to me, of one of Lincoln's stories—the first story I ever heard him tell on the stump.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is too old.

Mr. CANNON. He said—and I think it applies to our friends—speaking of his opponent, that he reminded him of a mule that his father owned when he was a boy; and that the mule would bray and kick, and he never could tell whether the mule was braying at the kick or kicking at the bray. [Great laughter and applause].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask for a division.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 181, nays 2, answered "present" 16, not voting 152; as follows:

IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12199) "To regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 5, 9, 28, 29, 38, 41, and 42.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, and 115, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 93: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with two amendments as follows:

On page 24, line 12, after the word "deported," strike out the words, "and in all cases the burden shall be on the alien to show clearly and beyond a doubt that he is entitled to land."

On page 25, line 2, strike out the words: "Provided, That nothing in this section or in this act shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from arranging from time to time, and it shall be his duty so to arrange, in accordance with existing contracts with railroad and steamship lines in foreign contiguous territory, or in accordance with such contracts as he may enter into in the future with such or other transportation lines, for the examination and payment of head tax of aliens landing in ports in said foreign contiguous territory and destined for the United States, such examination to be held at such ports or places in said foreign contiguous territory as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate. Such examination shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, dispense with the necessity for further examination at United States border ports under this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 113: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

On page 29, line 21, after the word "and," insert the word "if;" after the word "it," strike out the word "seems" and insert the words "is proved," and in line 23, after the word "came," insert the words "and is so certified by the examining surgeon at the port of arrival;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

On page 30, line 16, after the word "prescribe,," change the colon to a period and strike out the words "Provided, That no such person shall be allowed to enter as an immigrant;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

BOIES PENROSE,
CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,
H. C. LODGE,
A. S. CLAY,
A. J. McLAURIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States submits the following statement of the effect of the action taken by the conferees:

The Senate amended the bill by substituting the words "alien immigrants" for the word "passenger" as originally provided in the House bill. The provision relates to the collection of the head tax. The House conferees were of the opinion that under the Senate amendment there would be no way of determining as to who was an alien immigrant, except by the statement of the alien immigrant himself. The Senate recedes from this amendment wherever it occurs and adopts the language of the House bill.

The educational test prescribed by the House bill was eliminated by the Senate in amendment No. 10. The House conferees have agreed to this amendment, and the educational test has been eliminated from the bill.

The Senate added two sections to the bill (amendments 114 and 115), containing what is known as the anarchist provision. This embodies the most important features of a House bill favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee of the House. The House conferees have agreed to this amendment.

The House conferees have concurred in the Senate amendment striking out the part of the bill relating particularly to the contract-labor law, leaving intact the contract-labor laws heretofore enacted and now on the statute books, the only variation being that the words "offers, solicitations, or promises," were substituted for the word "contracts."

The Senate amendments relating to the administrative features of the bill have been agreed to, and in the opinion of the conferees are a great improvement over the old law.

Amendment No. 9: The Senate struck out the word "unemployed" in the sentence, "That skilled labor may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country."

The Senate recedes from this amendment.

In amendments 28 and 29 the Senate inserted the word "willfully" in the provision relating to masters and owners of vessels who shall bring into the United States any alien not duly admitted by an immigrant inspector or not lawfully entitled to enter. The Senate recedes from this amendment, and this, in the opinion of the House conferees, materially increases the efficiency of the law.

The Senate recedes from its amendments numbered 41 and 42, substituting the word "sum" for the words "fine imposed."

The other amendments agreed to by the House conferees are verbal or formal in their character.

W. B. SHATTUC,
ROBERT ADAMS, JR.,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Speaker, I want to be notified when I have occupied two minutes. This bill is not exactly what the Committee on Immigration wanted, and it is not exactly what the House wanted, but like all matters of legislation it is the best that we could get. I will say that a large majority of the amendments suggested by the Senate with the amendments agreed to by the conferees and put into the Senate amendments have greatly improved the bill. As stated by the conferees of the House, the educational test is left out. Many gentlemen on the floor will regret that, but it could not be passed in the Senate, and so it was left out.

I want to say that the bill is in every respect very much better than the law as it stands to-day. My friend from Alabama made a statement to-day that we were neglecting the interests of the laboring man because the contract-labor part of the bill was stricken out by the Senate. He forgot that the bill itself provides that all laws not inconsistent with this, if it becomes a law, are in force. So the old law remains in force, and it is a very good law in protecting the interests of labor.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The two minutes of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHATTUC. I will yield five minutes to——

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. SHATTUC. I yield five minutes to my friend from Missouri [Mr. ROBB].

The SPEAKER. Now the gentleman from Texas will state his point of order.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. The first point that I will state is not the one that I intended to make when I rose. Is the action of the Chair in accordance with the rules when he refuses to hear me on a point of order until he recognizes some other gentleman and then allows him to yield the floor to another?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand to whom the gentleman from Ohio yielded, and the Chair had the right to understand that before the point of order was entertained. Now, the gentleman from Texas will please state his point of order.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. The point of order I was going to state originally was that when a member on this floor—— [Derisive and continuous laughter on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER (after a pause). The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. But, Mr. Speaker, I rose to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas was asked to state his point of order and did not state it.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I was interrupted by a sound "like the crackling of thorns under a pot." [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is out of order, and the gentleman from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Speaker, I did not sign the report of the conferees. The bill as it will in all probability be passed is not, in my judgment, improved by the Senate amendments. It is no time, however, for discussing all the questions involved in these amendments, and I therefore desire to yield my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is entitled to four minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. I desired very much to ask the chairman of the committee, always genial and pleasant, to answer a question, but he declined to do so.

Mr. SHATTUC. May I tell the gentleman why?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, I know why, and no apologies are necessary. I will ask the gentleman the question now. Do I understand that the conference report leaves Senate amendment No. 8 out of the bill?

Mr. SHATTUC. What is it?

Mr. RUCKER. It is that part that relates to immigrants coming here.

Mr. SHATTUC. Yes; it strikes that out, but this does not repeal the present labor law.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this was a very wise provision of the bill as it left the House, and ought to be in the bill now, especially in view of the fact that some other language is left in which, to my mind, puts the House in an awkward attitude. I call attention to line 13, page 4, that part of the section which reads as follows:

But this section shall not be held to prevent any person living in the United States from sending for a relative or friend who is not in the foregoing classes.

They struck out everything that excludes those that come under contract or promise or offers or solicitation or agreements to work, and it seems to me that that opened up the flood gates and permits ever foreign-born citizen or person to come here and practically under contract to perform labor.

Mr. SHATTUC. But the law already excludes them.

Mr. RUCKER. Then what was the reason of putting it in in the first place? And if it was put in, why ought it not to stay there?

Mr. SHATTUC. Because the Senators would not listen to the persuasive language of your conferees. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUCKER. Does this bill modify the contract-labor law?

Mr. SHATTUC. Not at all.

Mr. RUCKER. It is still in force. That was the impression of every member on the committee before reporting this bill.

Mr. SHATTUC. It has been a very effective labor law.

Mr. RUCKER. This law in no wise modifies that?

Mr. SHATTUC. Not at all.

Mr. RUCKER. So that under this bill no person will be permitted to come in under a contract of labor, or upon offers or solicitation for the performance of work of any kind?

Mr. SHATTUC. No, sir.

Mr. LACEY. Does not this bill modify the law as to skilled labor?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Allow me to say that, as I understand this bill—and I have very carefully looked into this point—the provision that "all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed" excludes the idea that the bill will repeal any law that is not inconsistent with its provisions. Therefore I think the contract-labor provisions of the existing law will stand as perfectly as they did before the bill was brought in.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me ask the gentleman how he explains this language:

But this section shall not be held to prevent persons living in the United States from sending for a relative or friend who is not of the foregoing excluded classes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I confess that that part of the bill had not been called to my attention. I was looking only to see whether the provisions of existing law with regard to contract labor had been affected by this measure.

Mr. SHATTUC. I yield the balance of my time to my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHATTUC] has three minutes remaining.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to congratulate my colleagues of the House as well as the country at large on the completion of this bill. For many weeks in the first session of this Congress your committee sat here considering all the questions presented in regard to the conflicting interests of those who had something at stake in the passage of this bill. Owing to the change of the sources of immigration from the northern countries of Europe to those in the south, a different class of people had been coming to our shores. There was practically nothing standing in their way but a series of Treasury Department decisions, which had been promulgated in an effort to cure this evil. These have been carefully collated and placed in this bill. It is now in such a shape that it will stand as a barrier to protect our country against the influx of diseased persons, paupers, insane, professional beggars, and others who are now pouring into our ports.

Mr. ROBB rose.

Mr. ADAMS. I can not yield.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has been drawn in a spirit of fairness for all the interests concerned. The Senate has differed somewhat from the House; but I never saw a fairer spirit of conciliation or a greater desire to complete efficient legislation than existed between the conferees of the two Houses.

The bill is now submitted to the consideration of the House. In the judgment of the committee, after careful consideration, it will meet the great evils which are now pressing upon our country. All immigrants not desirable can be excluded under the provisions of this bill.

It is true that we were obliged to leave out that portion of the bill providing for an educational test because the Senate conferees gave us notice that the retention of that by the House meant the failure of the bill. Like sensible men, dealing with legislation which, as we all know, is always a matter of compromise, we yielded on that point, and now report the bill for the consideration of the House. It is carefully guarded in those respects which were most carefully pressed upon our attention, and it will be utterly impossible for paupers or other objectionable persons now to enter our country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House now take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER (having put the question). The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask for a division.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 47, answered "present" 13, not voting 157; as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 3, 1903.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. HOAR, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOAR. I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Massachusetts would let that matter stand until the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] can be in the Chamber, it would oblige him very greatly, I know.

Mr. HOAR. I will do it, but I should like to observe that it is a little hard after a matter has been thoroughly discussed in the Senate, disposed of by a large majority, and then all the changes in the bill made in the House in the direction of yielding to the desires of the Senator from Georgia—everyone, as far as I understand it—then in the closing hours of the session to be constantly appealed to for further delay. But it is always very disagreeable to resist that sort of an appeal, and I will let the matter stand until the Senator from Georgia comes in.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say that I do not think it is quite fair, if we are to have a government in this country by a majority, to treat bills in that way. But I admit that there has been plenty of provocation upon our side of the Chamber at this session, and I am in no condition to lecture anybody on the other side. So I will let the matter drop until the Senator from Georgia comes in.

Mr. BAILEY. In behalf of the Senator from Georgia, I merely desire to say that what he wants is not delay, but an opportunity to discuss it. I think he has no disposition to unduly delay it.

Mr. HOAR. I have not any right to be preaching sermons from this particular spot in the Chamber just now, I agree.

STANDING AND SELECT COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask leave to submit a resolution—I know it is out of order—and I ask that it may be considered at this time.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the standing and select committees of the Senate, as constituted at the end of this session, be, and they are hereby, continued until the next regular session of Congress or until their successors are elected.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Will that prevent the filling of one or two vacancies that may be needed to be filled at the special session?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed not. I merely wanted to call attention to that fact. I think it would be desirable in the case of one or two committees, of which I am a member, to have one or two vacancies, at any rate, temporarily filled.

Mr. ALLISON. This does not interfere with the selection of committees or the reorganization of committees at the special session, if that course is considered desirable.

Mr. HOAR. The resolution says "until the next regular session."

Mr. ALLISON. Or until otherwise provided.

Mr. HOAR. I have not any objection to the resolution. It is all right. I merely called attention to that fact.

The resolution was agreed to.

EASTERN RAILROAD AND BOSTON AND MAINE RAILROAD.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I submit the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask if that cuts off all morning business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does. A conference report is entitled to receive consideration when presented.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to dispose of some morning business which will take but a moment. I introduced a Senate resolution making an inquiry for certain figures in regard to a claim. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] asked that it might go over, supposing that it carried an appropriation. It carries no appropriation. It is a mere resolution of inquiry. The Senator from Alabama informed me subsequently that he had no objection, and I should be glad if that resolution could be agreed to. It comes over from yesterday.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator knows, of course, how important it is to get the appropriation bills out of the way. However, I will yield if it will not take more than a moment.

Mr. LODGE. It will take but a moment. It is a resolution coming over from yesterday that I introduced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The resolution was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to require the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in examining the refunding claim of the Eastern Railroad Company of the State of Massachusetts, in pursuance of the act of Congress approved February 28, 1901, to examine and report to the Senate the amounts paid as taxes by the said Eastern Railroad Company and the Boston and Maine Railroad in excess of the amount legally due, under the acts of Congress approved July 1, 1862, June 30, 1864, July 14, 1870, and amendments thereof.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of James Frank Allee, chosen by the legislature of the State of Delaware a Senator from that State for the unexpired term beginning March 4, 1901; which were read and ordered to be filed.

He also presented the credentials of LEWIS HEISLER BALL, chosen by the legislature of the State of Delaware a Senator from that State for the unexpired term beginning March 4, 1899; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the credentials of Charles W. Fulton, chosen by the legislature of the State of Oregon a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1903; which were read and ordered to be filed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17202) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 10, 11, 14, 15, 19, 23, 24, 26, 27, 30, 31, 39, 42, 43, 44, 48, 51, 52, 53, 54, 57, 58, 59, 63, 76, 77, 80, 85, 88, 97, 98, 99, 107, 109, 116, 117, 120, 123, 126, and 140.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 6, 9, 12, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 25, 28, 29, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 38, 40, 41, 45, 47, 49, 55, 56, 61, 62, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 73, 74, 75, 78, 81, 82, 83, 84, 86, 87, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 95, 96, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 118, 121, 122, 125, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 138, 139, 142, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 150, and 151.

And agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "dollars," insert the following: "which sum shall be expended in such manner and under such plans as will complete in every detail each and every object mentioned in this paragraph;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$205,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4641) for the relief of Benjamin Franklin Handforth.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 5118) granting an increase of pension to Adam Stuber.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 15802) for the relief of certain homestead settlers in the State of Alabama; and

A bill (H. R. 16457) to amend section 3394 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to tobacco.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 1517) for the relief of Robert Brigham; and

A bill (H. R. 8186) for the relief of John D. Chadwick.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE presented a memorial of General Lander Post, No. 5, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lynn, Mass., remonstrating against the placing of a stutue of Gen. Robert E. Lee in the Capitol building; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CULLOM. I present resolutions adopted by the legislature of Illinois, favoring the enactment of legislation granting to the States power to deal with intoxicating liquors which may be shipped into their territory from other States. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there has passed the House of Representatives of the United States and is now pending in the Senate of the United States a bill which provides—

"SECTION 1. That all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein shall, upon arrival within the boundary of such State or Territory, before and after delivery, be subjected to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise.

"SEC. 2. That all corporations and persons engaged in interstate commerce shall as to any shipment or transportation of fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids be subject to all laws and police regulations with reference to such liquors or liquids or the shipment or the transportation thereof of the State in which the place of destination is situated, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of such liquors or liquids being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise."

Therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Illinois, That the members of the United States Senate from the State of Illinois, the Hon. SHELBY M. CULLOM and the Hon. WILLIAM E. MASON, be requested to use their utmost efforts for the passage of said bill; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of this house be, and is hereby, directed to transmit without delay to the Hon. SHELBY M. CULLOM and the Hon. WILLIAM E. MASON copies of this resolution.

B. H. McCANN,
Acting Clerk of the House.

Mr. CULLOM presented petitions of sundry citizens of Chicago, Eureka, Wheaton, Quincy, Galena, Prophetstown, Paris, Whitehall, and Rockford, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the States power to deal with intoxicating liquors which may be shipped into their territory from other States; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to promote and foster the merchant marine of the United States by the allowance to United States vessels of rebates on customs duties and tonnage dues; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Olinda, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented petitions of Local Union No. 442, of Dunsmuir; of Local Union No. 161, of Fresno; of Local Union No. 67, of Oakland; of Local Union No. 64, of San Francisco; of Local Union No. 171, of San Jose, and of Local Union No. 33, of Sacramento, all of the American Federation of Labor, in the State of California, praying for the passage of the so-called 8-hour bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington presented petitions of sundry citizens of Aberdeen, Seattle, and Olympia, all in the State of Washington, praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the States power to deal with intoxicating liquors which may be shipped into their territory from other States; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BURTON presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Mound City, Kans., and the petition of J. N. Thompson and sundry other citizens of Phillips County, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of Junction Post, No. 132, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, of Junction City,

Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation granting a pension of $12 per month to all soldiers who served honorably in the Union Army during the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of C. D. Wood and sundry other citizens of Belpre, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the States power to deal with intoxicating liquors which may be shipped into their territory from other States; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. KEAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ridgewood, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the States power to deal with intoxicating liquors which may be shipped into their territory from other States; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. DUBOIS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Latah County, Idaho, remonstrating against the repeal of the desert-land law and the commutation clause of the homestead act; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of Custer Post, No. 1, Department of Wyoming, Grand Army of the Republic, of Laramie, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation granting a service pension of $12 to all eligible Union soldiers of the civil war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DOLLIVER presented a petition of S. S. Dillmar Post, No. 343, Department of Iowa, Grand Army of the Republic, of Toledo, Iowa, praying for the passage of a service pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of Phil Kearney Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, remonstrating against the placing of a statue of Gen. Robert E. Lee in Statuary Hall; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Iowa, praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. QUARLES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1472) to ratify an agreement with the Yankton Sioux Indians of South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. GAMBLE. In connection with the bill just reported by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES]. I submit the views of the minority of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ask that they be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota object to the indefinite postponement of the bill?

Mr. GAMBLE. We would object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, and the views of the minority will be printed in connection with the report submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin.

SALVADOR COSTA AND ESTATE OF WESLEY CRISLER.

Mr. TALIAFERRO, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bills (S. 7446) entitled "A bill for the relief of Salvador Costa" and (S. 1395) "A bill for the relief of Wesley Crisler, deceased," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

CENTRAL COLLEGE AND OTHER CLAIMS.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bills (S. 42, S. 96, S. 97, S. 99, S. 100, S. 101, S. 102, S. 103, S. 107, S. 109, S. 119, S. 123, S. 129, S. 293, S. 425, S. 687, S. 1064, S. 1071, S. 1072, S. 1251, S. 1277, S. 1524, S. 1525, S. 1526, S. 1527, S. 1528, S. 1529, S. 1530, S. 1531, S. 1532, S. 1533, S. 1534, S. 1535, S. 1536, S. 1689, S. 1723, S. 1724, S. 1938, S. 2212, S. 2525, S. 2526, S. 2527, S. 2635, S. 2773, S. 2774, S. 3141, S. 3149, S. 3356, S. 3454, S. 3619, S. 3623, S. 3695, S. 4209, S. 4242, S. 4561, S. 4562, S. 5658, S. 5756, S. 5777, S. 5820, S. 5959, S. 5971, S. 6225, S. 6241, S. 6243, S. 6265, S. 6410, S. 6590, S. 6680, S. 6707, S. 6780, S. 7276, S. 7314, S. 7360, S. 7384, and S. 7394) for the relief of Central College, Cumberland University, of Lebanon, Tenn.; Mary Sharp College, of Winchester, Tenn.; Baptist Church at Bolivar, Hardeman County, Tenn.; trustees of Union University, of Murfreesboro, Tenn.; trustees of McDaniel's Chapel, Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Shell Mound, Marion County, Tenn.; Presbyterian Church of Loudon County, Tenn.; Cumberland Presbyterian Church, at Clifton, Wayne County, Tenn.; Cumberland Lodge, Nashville, Tenn., Jackson College, of Columbia, Maury County, Tenn.; board of trustees board of trustees of Lagrange Synodical College, of Lagrange, Tenn.; Methodist Episcopal Church at Salisbury, Tenn.; board of trustees of the Memphis Conference Female Institute, of Jackson, Tenn.; trustees of the Reformed Church of Sharpsburg, Washington County, State of Maryland; Presbyterian Church of Kossuth, Miss.; University of Kansas; trustees of the Primitive Baptist Church of Huntsville, Madison County, Ala.; Oak Bowery Church, of Cherokee County, Ala.; trustees of Gayesville Academy, and Methodist Episcopal Church, of Gayesville, Cherokee County, Ala.; Missouri State Lunatic Asylum No. 1, at Fulton, Mo.; University of State of Missouri; trustees of St. Philip's Church, of Atlanta, Ga.; trustees of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church at Norfolk, Va.; trustees of the Drummondtown Methodist Episcopal Church, at Drummondtown, Va.; trustees of Abington Protestant Episcopal Church, of Gloucester County, Va.; Norfolk Seamen's Friend Society, of Norfolk, Va.; St. James Episcopal Church, Accomac, Va.; Shiloh Methodist Church, Fredericksburg, Va.; Lewinsville Presbyterian Church, Bethlehem Church, Makemie Presbyterian Church, First Baptist Church, Suffolk, Va.; trustees of the Episcopal Church at Dinwiddie Court-House, Dinwiddie County, Va.; trustees of Enon Baptist Church, Chesterfield County, Va.; Methodist Protestant Church, Norfolk Academy, Cumberland Presbyterian Church, at Mount Comfort, Washington County, Ark.; Prairie Presbyterian Church, of Washington County, Ark.; vestry of Christ Episcopal Church, of Holly Springs, Miss.; Presbyterian Church of Huttonsville, W. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

Mr. PETTUS subsequently said: I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the resolution which was passed a moment ago at his request. A number of claims named are referred to the Court of Claims, but the Court of Claims is not directed to take jurisdiction of them, and as to some of them I doubt very much whether the Court of Claims has jurisdiction.

Mr. WARREN. We propose to send those claims to the Court of Claims under the Tucker Act. The resolution proposing to take them there is in the usual form. It is precisely, word for word, the form we have used for other claims bills sent to that court, and upon which they have rendered findings.

Mr. HOAR. The general law gives them jurisdiction over such claims as are referred to them by either House of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. For a finding of fact.

THE CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTORY.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution reported by Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, on the 28th ultimo, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and it is hereby, directed to prepare and have issued a special edition of the Congressional Directory for the use of the special session of the Senate, should one be called, and that said edition be ready on the first day of the session, and that the same compensation be allowed for the compiling and editing of said edition as is authorized by law for the regular edition, the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

MESSENGER TO COMMITTEE.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution reported by Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, on the 26th ultimo, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum until otherwise provided by law.

BENJAMIN N. BOND.

On motion of Mr. FOSTER of Washington, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying Senate bill 6731, granting an increase of pension to Benjamin N. Bond, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and returned to the beneficiary, no adverse report having been made thereon.

HOME FOR AGED AND INFIRM COLORED PEOPLE.

On motion of Mr. QUARLES, it was Ordered, That J. L. White be authorized to withdraw from the files of the Senate a certain petition relating to the establishment of a home for aged and infirm colored persons, presented to the Senate on January 22, 1903, in connection with the bill H. R. 16567, no adverse report having been made thereon.

WILLIAM JOHNSTON.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 2545) granting a pension to William Johnston be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and transmitted to the beneficiary, no adverse report having been made thereon.

WILLIAM H. ZOMBRO.

On motion of Mr. FORAKER, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 2019, first session Fifty-seventh Congress, granting a pension to William H. Zombro, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there having been no adverse report on said bill.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

On motion of Mr. LODGE, it was Ordered, That 1,000 copies of Senate Document No. 186, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, be printed for the use of the War Department.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 2d instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 3560) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, and amended April 1, 1896; and

An act (S. 6139) amending the civil code of Alaska, providing for the organization of private corporations, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 5437) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of officers of the Army.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that I may be relieved from service upon the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK] may be substituted in my place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that he be relieved from further service upon the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK] be appointed to his place. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled Bills in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 12199) "to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States" are hereby authorized and directed to correct the cross references by sections in said bill made necessary by the changed numbering of sections thereof, namely:

Page 3, lines 2 and 3, strike out "thirty-three" and insert "thirty-two."
Page 6, line 23, strike out "five" and insert "four."
Page 8, line 5, strike out "five" and insert "four."
Page 8, line 4, strike out "six" and insert "five."
Page 9, line 4, strike out "six" and insert "five."
Page 13, line 7, strike out "thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen" and insert "twelve, thirteen, and fourteen."
Page 13, line 14, strike out "thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen" and insert "twelve, thirteen, and fourteen."
Page 16, line 13, strike out "five and six" and insert "four and five."
Page 16, line 17, strike out "eighteen" and insert "seventeen,"
Page 17, line 21, strike out "twenty-one" and insert "twenty."
Page 18, line 5, strike out "twenty" and insert "nineteen."

SETTLERS ON WISCONSIN CENTRAL RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. SPOONER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 11572) for the relief of certain settlers upon Wisconsin Central Railroad and The Dalles military road land grants.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 2,000 additional copies of the annual report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1902, with illustrations, said copies to be delivered to the Bureau of Immigration for distribution.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN HANDFORTH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4641) for the relief of Benjamin Franklin Handforth.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a retiring board, which shall have power, notwithstanding the record and sentence of court-martial, dated December 7, 1887, to review the case of former Lieut. Benjamin F. Handforth, from his admission as a cadet at the Military Academy to the date of his dismissal from the Army, with the view of determining whether his present insanity existed at the time of such dismissal or is due or traceable to service origin. The board shall have power also to take into consideration the facts and circumstances of his present insanity in whatever bearing they may legitimately have upon the subject of inquiry. In the event said board shall find that said insanity existed at the time of such dismissal or is due or traceable to service origin, the President is authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint the said Benjamin Franklin Handforth to the rank in the Army held by him at the date of his dismissal, and to retire him with such rank, the retired list being increased in number to that extent.

Mr. DRYDEN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey whether this officer was court-martialed?

Mr. DRYDEN. He was court-martialed, and he was insane before he was court-martialed.

Mr. SPOONER. Was the question of insanity one of the matters of defense before the court?

Mr. DRYDEN. I think not; but at any rate it is proposed to have a board appointed by the President of the United States to review the case. This officer is confined now in an insane asylum, and it is a case where every instinct of humanity calls for relief from the stigma which has been placed upon him.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not antagonizing the proposition. I merely wished to know whether the defense of insanity was interposed before the court.

Mr. DRYDEN. I can not say whether that was done or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOAR. I now call up the conference report on the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report is before the Senate. It has been read in full.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, I will read the rule. It is Rule XXVII:

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received, the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

No Senator has a right to call it up. It can only be done by a vote of the Senate. The Senator has the right at any time he sees proper to present the report, it matters not what proceeding is being had by the Senate, except a motion to adjourn or a question of order, or when the Senate is dividing, but as to whether it shall be taken up or not is a question for the Senate to decide. I have not heard any motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts to take up the conference report, at least there has been no motion put to the Senate, so far as I have heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair differs from the Senator from Mississippi very decidedly. A conference report is authorized to be submitted as a privileged report, and the Chair holds that that privilege extends to that report until the question of consideration has been raised and determined. The conference report is before the Senate. The question of consideration can be raised if the Senator desires to raise it.

Mr. TELLER. How are we to raise it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is raised by moving to proceed to the consideration of the report.

Mr. TELLER. The Chair asserts that it is in order and that it is before the Senate. Must we move to displace it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion——

Mr. HOAR. May I make one statement, that I think will satisfy my friend from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. I will hear what the Senator wishes to say.

Mr. HOAR. In the practice of the two Houses, as I understand it, the question is raised by some member rising and saying, "I raise the question of consideration." As I understand it, if I may say further, a conference report is always in order, with the exceptions just read. You may take a Senator off his feet in the middle of a speech. That has been repeatedly settled in the House of Representatives, and I presume the rule is the same here, although I have never known it done.

This conference report has been presented and read, and when it is called up a Senator may rise and say, "I raise the question of consideration." Thereupon the Chair puts the question to the Senate whether the report shall now be considered. If the Senate determines not to consider it, it goes back to the table until it is called up again.

Mr. TELLER. I do not——

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. HOAR. It therefore does not at all put the Senate in the power of the man who has the report in charge.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I have always understood that the question of consideration of a conference report is raised just like the question of consideration of any other measure that is proposed to be brought before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. It is not.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. When a Senator wants to raise the question of the consideration of a bill he moves to take up the bill, or he asks for its consideration, and that raises the question of the consideration of the bill. Now, if a Senator desires to raise the question of the consideration of a conference report, it is raised by a motion to consider it or a request for unanimous consent to consider it, but he who wants to have the report considered is the one to raise the question, and that is raised by a motion to consider it or by a request for unanimous consent for its consideration, just as in the case of any other measure brought before the Senate. It is not raised by one objection to it any more than the question of the consideration of a bill is raised by the objection of a Senator. No question of the consideration of a bill can be raised by an objection.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be allowed——

Mr. TELLER. I have the floor, but I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator. I will hear what he has to say.

Mr. HOAR. After about thirty-four years' experience here I have had occasion again and again to inquire into this particular matter. I think I shall be confirmed by every experienced Senator here in saying that the Senator is in error in his idea as to the mode of raising the question. But it all comes to the same thing. A conference report is privileged. The privilege that it has is that it may break right into anything else that is going on, a speech, or the consideration of any measure. It may break in when you can not make a motion to take up a measure, when a Senator is on the floor. When that is done by a Senator, the Senate is not delivered hand and foot over to it, because any Senator can raise the question of consideration. Then that question is put, and, without debate, the Senate settles the matter for itself. That is the way I understand the rule, and I think there is not any doubt about it.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. The presentation of reports of committees of conference is a privileged matter, but there is nothing in the rule which makes the consideration of such a report privileged. The presentation of it may be made at any time, except when there is a question of order or a motion to adjourn pending, or when the Senate is dividing, but after it is presented it must await its time for consideration, or he who presents it or any other Senator may move to have it considered. Then that raises the question of consideration, and that question is put to the Senate and decided without debate. No other reasonable construction, I am constrained to believe, could be put upon the rule which I have read.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me once more?

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. HOAR. I am not going to try to force this thing on a reluctant Senate. I know very well that I could not do it if I would, and I would not do it if I could. The matter stands in this way. It was thoroughly discussed in committee, if ever anything was discussed there. It was thoroughly debated in the Senate. It was passed by a large majority; and the House has made amendments in the line of the opinion of the minority, to which the Senate conferees have yielded.

Under those circumstances ordinarily there would not be any further debate. But every Senator will consider for himself whether the circumstances of this case make further debate his duty. I can not meddle with that. If it be disclosed that a large number of Senators do not want to go on and settle this question now, I am not going to undertake to press it. That is the whole of it.

Mr. TELLER. My inquiry, addressed to the Chair, will not be taken as an act of hostility to this measure. I understood from the statement of the Chair that the presentation of a conference report put it in the power of the Senator presenting it to practically control the legislation of this body. That it is always in order to submit a conference report nobody denies, but when it is submitted it has no such character as I understood the Chair to indicate by his reply to some Senator who asked about it being in order.

I do not think that I differ very materially with the Senator from Massachusetts as to what has been the practice here. I doubt whether that is strictly within the rule. It has been the practice to allow a conference report to come up, and unless it was a case involving a good deal of controversy to proceed without much question. But I do not wish to allow it to go unchallenged that it is the right of the Senator who submitted it to call it up to the displacement of everything else. There is a good reason why a conference report, which is the act of the two bodies, should be presented in the way which has been suggested under the rule; but there is no reason why a conference report should be endowed with such attributes and privileges that under the control of one Senator it can be put before the Senate whether the Senate wanted it or not.

As I understand the ruling of the Chair, it is that a conference report is privileged. That everyone knows, because the rule can not be misunderstood. Then if there is any objection to it the Senate must determine the question whether it shall be proceeded with or not. It is only like any other proposition, it must command a majority of the Senate or it is not before the Senate. If that is the ruling I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair never intimated anything different from that. As a matter of course the majority can determine whether or not to consider the report, as it can determine in regard to the consideration of any other question.

Mr. TELLER. I do not say that the Chair did so rule, but I think any Senator would have drawn the inference from the statement that it was before the Senate that the rule was as I think it is not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks ordinarily that any Senator would probably, if he did not wish a report considered, make an objection, and then the Senator having it in charge would move to proceed to its consideration, and that question would be determined without debate.

Mr. TELLER. I think that is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

Mr. HOAR. Is not the conference report before the Senate? No one has objected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say that he did not press it now.

Mr. HOAR. No; I said that if a considerable number of the Senate did not desire it to go on, I would not insist upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report is before the Senate, and the question is on agreeing to it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please preserve order. There is too much conversation in the Chamber. There is a continuous buzz.

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon for stating that I am suffering with a slight throat affection to-day, and it is very difficult for me to speak when there is noise in the Chamber. I desire to be heard if possible, and in the effort to be heard when there is noise of course my trouble is increased.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me just a moment?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. In the last days of every session I suppose we have the same trouble. I wish to call the attention of Senators to one evil that has got to be very common in the Senate. Not only now, but a good deal of the time during the days when we are not pressed as we are now, Senators will have their clerks come in and consult them in a loud tone, speaking, perhaps, in front of a Senator who is making a speech. I have seen that done repeatedly in a tone as audible as that in which such business would be conducted in a committee room.

Now, Mr. President, in addition to that, on the back row here there will be from two or three to a dozen gentlemen standing up and discussing various questions in a public manner. Although they do not have the attention of the Chair they are speaking usually about as loud as the Senator who is speaking, and sometimes a good deal louder than some of our Senators speak. Senators will confer with each other, sometimes four or five together, in the same way.

Now, I want to suggest that the cloakroom is exceedingly convenient. If Senators must talk they can step into the cloakroom and say what they wish to say out of the hearing of those who do not care to listen to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Perhaps the Senator from Colorado will allow the Chair to say that a very short time ago he issued a letter calling the attention of Senators' clerks who converse with Senators to that practice and undertook to prevent it by that letter.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to say that I am not criticising the Chair. If I have any criticism of the Chair it is only this: If I were the Presiding Officer, which I never have been and never expect to be, when three or four Senators got to making so much noise as to disturb other Senators I should ask the Sergeant-at-Arms to quietly ask them to refrain from doing so. If they took offense at that, I should let them take offense. I am sure I have committed that indiscretion myself frequently, but I shall not object if the Chair sends the Sergeant-at-Arms to me at any time, and he taps me on the shoulder and says, "Speak lower or go into the cloakroom." [Laughter.]

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I can not agree with the statement of facts as made by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I do not think that this conference report can be said to be before the Senate in the same light and under the same circumstances as those in which conference reports are usually found. This is not a case where the Senate has carefully considered a proposition or a bill and where the House has also considered the same bill, and where with minor differences between them there has been a conference committee, which after consideration have agreed among themselves and each presented that agreement to either House, in which there has been a surrender of one minor difference on the part of one House, and a corresponding surrender, if you please, of another minor difference on the part of the other House, in order that the legislative minds of the two bodies may be considered together.

This is not that case, and I assert, Mr. President, and am prepared to prove by the record, that the bill which is brought in here as the result of a conference committee's deliberation, which is sought to be passed as a conference report, is a bill which had never been read in the Senate until it was read as the report of the conference committee.

It is a bill most far-reaching in its character, one, in the opinion of many of us, absolutely subversive of the fundamental principles upon which this Government is founded. Yet I assert, and repeat the proposition, that the bill thus sought to be presented to the Senate and action demanded upon it as a conference report not only had never been considered in this Chamber, but it never had been read from that desk until it was read as the report of the conference committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I suppose the effect of the report is to adopt the House bill, then? I suppose this bill——

Mr. BACON. I am coming to that. I will state the facts as I understand them. If I am in error, of course here are the bills in print. I can not misrepresent them.

That is not all, Mr. President. Not only was the provision just now sought to be passed as the result of a conference report when it was never read in the Senate and never discussed in the Senate, but it is a bill which was never considered or discussed by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. And when I come to a more detailed statement of the facts I will show how that occurred.

One bill, Mr. President, was passed by the Senate after elaborate discussion. Another bill, purporting to be on the same subject, and, in fact, on the same subject, was passed in the House, but the two bills differed most radically and materially, not only as to details, but in great fundamental provisions.

Mr. President, as I said, the Senate discussed and passed a bill upon this subject. That bill was sent to the other House. There was then pending in that House a bill upon the same subject, but one radically differing from the Senate bill. When the Senate bill came up for consideration the House acted upon it by striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting of the Senate bill not one word or letter except the title of the bill and the enacting clause. The other House then sent to the Senate what purported to be an amended Senate bill, but one which, as I have stated, in fact was an entirely new and independent bill, containing not a line or a letter of the Senate bill except the title and the enacting clause.

I will repeat, Mr. President, not only was that so, not only did it differ in language, but it differed upon the most fundamental propositions contained in the subject. It differed upon the very propositions which lie at the base of the whole question. The House took a position which had been laughed to scorn in this Senate, and sent their bill to us, embodying what the Senate had refused to enact or to even recognize.

On the contrary, the Senate in its bill had distinctly condemned the propositions contained in the House bill. There could not have been two bills more diametrically opposed in principle than were those two bills upon the vital point in each, although they related to the same subject and professed to seek to accomplish the same end. When the other House sent the Senate bill back, it was not the Senate bill except in title and the enacting clause, although it had the number of the Senate bill. It came in here and was referred to the Judiciary Committee without being read. I was under the impression, and my recollection is, that the bill was not even read in the Committee on the Judiciary, but I am informed by Senators, who are members of that committee with myself, that I am in error as to that, and in deference to them I concede that my recollection is at fault in that regard.

I concede the fact, in deference to the recollection of other Senators, that the bill was read in the Committee on the Judiciary. I can not, however, be mistaken about this fact, that it was never considered in the Judiciary Committee. On the contrary, I myself sought to have it considered; I insisted that it was the duty of the committee to take up that bill, and to consider it section by section, and see whether or not we would agree to any part of it, or whether we would reject the whole of it, or whether we would amend any part of it.

I can not possibly be mistaken about that fact. Nor can I be mistaken about the fact that the committee refused to consider that bill; absolutely refused to discuss it or to consider it in committee, and said that it should go to a conference, and let the conference decide upon the bill.

Am I in error, under this recitation of facts, in the statement that this professed report of a conference committee does not stand on the floor of the Senate in the same light and under the same circumstances in which our conference reports are usually found? Why is it that conference reports are given this great advantage when they come before the Senate? Why is it that they are privileged? Why is it that they are laid before the Senate at any time without a vote of the Senate being called for? It is based upon the fundamental idea that they contain matter which has already been considered by the Senate, that there has been debate in the Senate, that the same thing has been considered by the House, and that this conference report is simply a machinery by which the legislative minds of the two Houses can be brought in accord to reconcile differences.

For this reason conference reports are given this great advantage. Is it possible that it was ever contemplated that a conference report should present a substantially new proposition to the Senate which had never been considered by the Senate, and had never been considered by a committee of the Senate, and that a Senator would have a right to call it up for action in the Senate even before the morning business has been called for?

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator states—in which I think he is quite inaccurate, but let us assume that he is accurate for the purpose of all I wish to say—that a House bill diametrically different from the Senate bill came over here as an amendment to the Senate bill and that it was not considered in the committee. Then, after stating that, he goes on with great earnestness to ask the Senate whether a conference report that has got new matter, an altogether new bill in it, ought to stand like ordinary conference reports. The fact is that this conference report is the Senate bill verbatim et literatim, except that it omits the matter about anarchists, which I understand the Senator favors; which the Senate, I understand, unanimously favors and which it has just passed in the immigration bill. All the other changes from the Senate bill are changes for which the Senator himself contended on the floor.

Now, it is a fact that as to the rights of conference reports, if any such report should have precedence it would be a report on a Senate bill where the House has yielded to the Senate, which is the case here, except that in certain particulars concessions have been made to the views of the minority of the Senate. That is the whole of it.

Mr. BACON. I do not agree with the learned and distinguished Senator.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will point out the error of a comma or a syllable in the statement I have made I should like to hear it.

Mr. BACON. I will take great pleasure in endeavoring to do so before I conclude, and I think I shall succeed.

As I was saying at the time of the interruption, is it to be conceived that what purports to be a conference report, or the report of a conference committee, should be given such advantages in this Senate that it can be summarily called up even before the morning business has been begun and be put upon its passage? Just consider it, Mr. President! A bill never read in the Senate, except when brought in here as a report of the committee, a bill never considered by the law committee of the Senate, although it involves one of the gravest propositions of constitutional law, and yet a bill which, without a vote of the Senate, can immediately after the morning prayer and before the morning business is called for be called up to be passed without a word of debate. Is it conceivable, Mr. President? And yet I am justified in saying that that is the presentation to this Senate.

The learned Senator says that this bill which is sent here from the other House, or rather the bill which was brought here by the conference committee, is a Senate bill, and that it contains the propositions which the minority contended for when the bill was before the Senate. Well, Mr. President, I shall have to read the bill in order to point out in what it differs, and if I can have the attention of the learned Senator from Massachusetts, I want to point out a very remarkable feature, and I desire to have not only the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts, but that of other lawyers here.

Relative to a single feature in this conference report, or rather in the bill which is presented by the conference committee—for that is what it is—the Senate, and everyone who was here during the discussion, will remember this fact: The Senate proceeded upon the proposition and the Senate bill was based upon the proposition that the act of killing the President of the United States, or any one of the Cabinet, or any foreign ambassador, or any foreign minister, or the assaulting of either one of those officers, was a crime complete in itself without the purpose being to commit the crime by reason of the office of the particular officer or for the purpose of interfering with the proper discharge of his duties. Senators will remember that that was the issue.

It was contended on the part of some that if the crime was committed against one of these officers without reference to the fact of his official position, perhaps without even knowing his official position—if the crime was committed without reference to any purpose to interfere with the functions of government—it was a crime against the person and not a crime against the Government of the United States. Senators will remember how the debate surged around that proposition and how the Senate took the firm position that the crime should be complete in the absence of any purpose relating to the official character of the officer and without any purpose to interfere with his official functions. On the contrary, the House of Representatives took diametrically the opposite position. The House in their bill carefully limited the act which was condemned to one which was against the person on account of his official position or for the purpose of interfering with his official duties. I can not now elaborate this difference, although I did do so at length when the bill was before the Senate.

Now, I want to call the attention of the Senate to a most remarkable fact. There was a compromise between the Senate and the House of Representatives in that regard, but in what way? By the Senate adopting the view of the other House? In part, yes. By the other House adopting the view of the Senate? Again, in part, yes. But not by the compromise and agreement in the adoption of a principle upon which they agreed and upon which they could both stand. One section of the bill reported by the conference committee is based upon the proposition that the crime is complete when committed against one official, although the act was not directed against him because of his official character, and not committed for the purpose of interfering with or hindering him in the discharge of his official duties.

That was to satisfy the demand of the Senate on this great question of fundamental principle. But as to other officials mentioned in other sections of the bill reported by the conference committee, the requirement is that the crime shall not be complete when committed against the officials mentioned unless the act was directed against the official because of his official character or committed for the purpose or with the intent to interfere with or hinder him in his official duties. That was to meet the demand of the House. In other words, they say in one section, as to certain officers the crime shall be complete in the killing of one officer or in an assault upon one officer, it makes no difference whether the person committing it had any reference to his official character or not; it makes no difference whether in the perpetration of the crime it was done because he was an official; it makes no difference whether in the perpetration of the crime he designed to interfere in any manner with any official character—that is provided in the bill in order to recognize the principle contended for by the Senate—or any official duty, whereas in the other sections of the act with reference to other officers, it is provided that the crime is only complete in case it is perpetrated on account of their official positions, and in case it is done for the purpose of interfering with the official functions of the officers; and that is provided in the bill in order to recognize the principle contended for by the Senate.

The Senate and the House are divided and diametrically opposed on a question of principle. The conference committee settles the dispute by affirming the opinion of the Senate in one section as to a matter of vital fundamental legal principle, and then in the next section affirming the opinion of the House, which is directly to the opposite.

Is there any lawyer who can possibly defend the propriety of mixing in the same statute such contradictory and antagonistic provisions? Was there ever such a settlement of a difference between the two Houses on a matter of legal principle? The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts says that if I would point out, as I understood him, any——

Mr. HOAR. If I may interrupt the Senator right there, I will repeat his statement. He says very truly that the compromise report makes the act an offense without the purpose to strike at the official in one class of cases; that is, the President of the United States, but requires it to be committed on account of the quasi official character in regard to an ambassador. That is true, but is it not also true that that concession, requiring the act to be aimed at the official character of an ambassador, is a concession to the Senator's view and the view for which he and those with whom he acted contended in the Senate?

Mr. BACON. So far as it goes, yes.

Mr. HOAR. Very well, then, of what is the Senator complaining? What he considers very extraordinary in the compromise is just this; is it not, that there being two classes of officials, for both of which he contended a particular principle should apply, and a large majority of the Senate having been against it, the House have yielded to him in regard to one of them?

Mr. BACON. The Senator is incorrect; that is not my complaint. My complaint is that while to this extent the bill is an improvement, that as long as the vice remains as to a single provision, there is an insuperable obstacle to my consent to the bill. Is it any excuse to say that the bill is proper in one part, but that it must be taken as a whole because of that, even though it may be vicious as to another part;

Mr. HOAR. My point is not that the Senator should be expected to consent to the bill, but the bill has gone through all its stages, and the Senate has voted upon it.

Mr. BACON. This bill never has.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, in this particular. The question is whether the Senate now—the Senate who are intrusted by the people of this country with the lawmaking power in part—having acted, the Senator will consent to accept the bill if it be made, as he thinks, a good deal better. That is all there is of it.

Mr. BACON. I did not understand the last statement of the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. The point between me and my honorable friend is that we differ in our views as to the functions and effect of a conference committee report.

Mr. BACON. We certainly do.

Mr. HOAR. The question was put by the Presiding Officer last session: "Will you consent to this bill?" "No," replied Mr. BACON, of Georgia, "I will not because of this objection. I say no." Then after a conference it comes over, and the Presiding Officer says: "Mr. BACON, of Georgia, will you consent to make that bill a good deal better?" "No," says Mr. BACON. That is the whole story.

Mr. BACON. Well, the Senator does not state the story correctly. On the contrary, I have refused to accept that as a correct statement of my position. It is directly the opposite. I do consent to the bill being made better. This bill might be better in one particular; but if it is vicious in another particular, shall the objection to it be limited to that part which is improved? Shall there be no objection to that which is still vicious? Shall there be no objection to that which is still fundamentally opposed, as I conceive, to the most valuable and cherished principles of this Government because, forsooth, in another section that objection has been removed?

Mr. President, the Senator says that the difficulty between him and myself is that we differ as to the function of a conference report. I thoroughly agree with him in that proposition. The idea of the honorable Senator as to the function of a conference report is that one bill may be passed in the Senate, that it may go to the House, that the House may strike out everything after the enacting clause and substitute another and altogether different bill, and that it shall come back here and have all the rights, the honors, and privileges and preferences of a conference report. That is the idea of the honorable Senator as to the function of a conference report. That is not my idea, and the Senator is correct in saying that we differ in our ideas as to the function of a conference report.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. Is not that practically the situation a great many times during every session?

Mr. BACON. It ought never to be the situation.

Mr. SPOONER. The House passes bills, and we strike out all after the enacting clause and insert by way of amendment, which is a substitute technically, but it is still regarded in modern practice as an amendment to the bill upon the subject which suits us.

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes.

Mr. SPOONER. We send it back to the House and the House disagrees.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. That throws the whole subject into conference.

Mr. BACON. There is nothing that illustrates the evils of legislation by conference committees so strongly as the very case the Senator has put.

Mr. SPOONER. But it is the common practice, and has been for twenty-five years.

Mr. BACON. The common practice, but in the large majority of instances the substitution of another bill is simply for convenience where there are a number of amendments. It is but recasting the bill, practically the same thing, but with some differences. But, Mr. President, if I have the time I am going to show the radical differences in this bill.

How does this bill differ from the bill which we passed in the Senate? There is a great part of it as it comes back from the conference that has no possible relation or connection either with the bill passed by the House or with the bill approved by the Senate.

It may be, and I believe is, that legislation by conference committees is a necessary evil, but it is none the less an evil, and a great evil. It is one that I have given very much thought to as to how it can be corrected. I confess that I have been unable to arrive at any solution of the question. But if it is an evil, if it is a necessary evil, its scope and operation ought to be confined within necessary limits, and there ought to be no encouragement to the idea that the House may pass one bill and the Senate another bill, that a conference committee can get together and make an entirely new bill, and then put it through in a summary manner under the privileges accorded to a conference report.

The distinguished Senator is entirely in error when he seeks to limit the objections to this bill to the particular thing which he says has been conceded in part by the House. If it had been conceded as to all the sections of the bill on this particular branch of the subject by the House, of course, so far as that particular objection was concerned, my mouth would have been closed. If as to all the crimes specified in this bill it had been provided that the crime should only be complete when the act was committed on account of the official position of the officer or because of that official position, or with a view and intent to interfere with the functions of the office and with the performance of the duties of the office by the officer, then that contention would have been fully met.

But, as I have stated to the Senate, here was this sharp division between the Senate and the House. The Senate contended that the crime should be complete regardless of whether the person committing the act had in view the official character of the person assaulted and regardless of the question whether he intended in so assaulting him to interfere with him in his official duties. That is the position of the Senate. The House, on the contrary, took the position that the act, if not with reference to the official position of the party and if not with reference to his official duties, would be a crime against the person only and not a crime against the office or officer, and therefore, as this was a bill which sought to punish a crime against an officer, the gravamen of the crime must be that it was committed against him in his official character or for the purpose of interfering with his official functions.

There was that sharp distinction between the two. The House did not yield to the Senate on the subject, nor did the Senate yield to the House on the subject. On the contrary, a new bill was brought back here, which prescribes that as to some of these officers and some of these acts the crime shall be complete, regardless of the question whether it had any relation to the officer, to his official position, or to his official acts, in that way and to that extent adopting the Senate bill, but, on the contrary, providing that as to other officers the crime should not be complete; that there should be no crime at all under this bill unless it was directed against a man in his official character or against the discharge of his official duty.

Here we have this hybrid; and I challenge the distinguished Senator, or any other who defends this bill, in all the books of all the libraries of all the world to find another statute of the same kind—a statute which shall recognize the principle of which I have spoken in one section as to one class of officers and in the same statute in other sections deny the principle and take exactly the opposite position as to the other officers. If there is any other such example in all the books, I say let one be produced.

But, Mr. President, that is not all in this bill by a great deal. There are fundamental propositions in this bill which go even beyond that, but that is bad enough. I will, of course, have to take up this bill to show the correctness of the contention which I am making, because I do not propose to leave it simply upon my statement. I am going to read the bill and point out the particular features to which I have alluded.

Mr. President, if there is one proposition which I thought was recognized by all true Americans as a fundamental proposition upon which this Government rested and without the recognition of which this would not be the same Government that we always have regarded it, that proposition is equality before the law. I never expected to see the day when a man in this country could look me in the face and say to me that the law regarded him with more tender care than it did me. I never expected to see the day when I could look any other man in the face and feel the humiliation of having to admit that the law regarded an offense against his person as a greater offense than one against mine.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. Does he regard it as a violation of that principle to say in legislation that the United States shall care for the protection of United States officers and the States care for the protection of State officers? Is that inequality before the law? That is all this bill does.

Mr. BACON. I am coming to that. I want to show where the logic of this bill points, and I am going to read the bill offered by the learned and distinguished Senator himself in this Congress, extending the provisions of this bill to every officer of the United States Government, high and low, big and little; and there is no logic which stops short of that. I have here on my table, and I am going to read it before I get through, the bill introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts himself to that effect.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Do I understand the Senator to say that he thinks there ought to be no discrimination in the punishment for killing a man who does not hold an office and that for killing a man who does hold an office?

Mr. BACON. I certainly do. Possibly the Senator did not understand my reply.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I beg pardon.

Mr. BACON. I say I certainly do mean to be so understood, if I understood the Senator from Connecticut correctly. The Senator will please give me his question again.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I never yet could see——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator please propound his question again, in order that I may be right. I do not know that I exactly understood it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I never yet could see how the killing of a man who held an office was not the killing of an officer, and if it was the killing of an officer, I thought intent would be presumed; that it was an intentional killing of an officer; and it seems to me the Government could very well protect its officers by putting a different punishment upon an assault on them—of course, if it is murder you could only hang the man—but in other cases a different punishment than that which would be put upon a man for killing an individual who was not an officer. I have always thought that.

Mr. BACON. While I did not hear him very distinctly, I suppose from what the Senator from Connecticut has just said that his inquiry to me was whether I recognized or refused to recognize the propriety of a statute which would make it a greater crime to kill an officer of the Government than to kill a private individual. I say I certainly do not recognize the propriety of any such law.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Does not the Senator recognize a distinction, from the national standpoint and national law, between the offense of killing Stephen J. Field, an individual, and that of killing Stephen J. Field, associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, while in the discharge of his duty as such?

Mr. BACON. Of course, I know what the Senator refers to. The decision of the Supreme Court in the Nagle case.

Mr. SPOONER. No; independent of that.

Mr. BACON. Whether I recognize that there is any greater crime——

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say that.

Mr. BACON. What, then?

Mr. SPOONER. The question is whether, from the Federal standpoint, the standpoint of the United States and the laws of Congress for the protection of officers of the United States in the discharge of their duty, the Senator does not recognize a distinction between the punishment of a man for killing Stephen J. Field, an individual, and for the killing of Stephen J. Field, associate justice of the United States, while in the discharge of his duty?

Mr. BACON I do not. Mr. President, I do not recognize that any man's life before the law is worth any more than any other man's life.

Mr. SPOONER. The Supreme Court does.

Mr. BACON. I do not think it does. Do you mean in the Nagle case? I do not believe any such doctrine was there announced.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

RIGHTS OF WAY FOR IRRIGATION PURPOSES IN HAWAII.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to call up the bill which was brought up by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] yesterday. It has been read, and it will take no time. I desire its consideration at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

Mr. BURTON. The question is on the substitute. Both the bill and the substitute were read.

Mr. HOAR. If the bill is not to be read and debated, I shall not object. Otherwise I will. I will object to every other——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that this bill will be debated to some extent, because I myself have some observations to make upon it.

Mr. LODGE. What is the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Hawaiian ditch bill.

Mr. LODGE. It will be discussed.

Mr. FORAKER. May I inquire what bill is being discussed?

Mr. BURTON. The bill you called up yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Hawaiian ditch bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish the Senator from Kansas had allowed me to call it up at a time which would have suited my convenience. There was some controversy in the Senate yesterday over this bill, but I do not think there will be any to-day.

I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I imagine his opposition is to the bill as it passed the House. He may not be aware that that bill is not before the Senate, but an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that if it is the Hawaiian ditch bill I have no interest in it whatever.

Mr. FORAKER. That is what it is.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought it was the other bill, for which the Senator offered a substitute, House bill——

Mr. FORAKER. I have here a letter, which it will take only a moment to read, and inasmuch as this bill——

Mr. HOAR. I am informed by a Senator that he proposes to debate the Hawaiian ditch bill, and that it will not go through without debate, and I must therefore object.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I think when I read this letter there will not be a Senator in the Senate who will make any further opposition to the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Would it not be well for the Senator to see privately the Senators who are objecting——

Mr. FORAKER. I will be glad to——

Mr. HOAR. And renew the request later.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like, if the Senator will allow me, to read this letter just now.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me, but I hope he will renew his request a little later, because I have been waiting on this matter a great while.

Mr. FORAKER. I will do that, but I want to say to the Senator that I did not call up the bill at this time.

Mr. HOAR. I understand.

Mr. FORAKER. I intended to wait until the conference report on this bill had been concluded, and then I expected to call up the bill.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS IN ALABAMA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 15802) for the relief of certain homestead settlers in the State of Alabama.

Mr. PETTUS. Senate bill 7247 is on the Calendar, No. 3090——

Mr. HOAR. I object to interfering with the existing order of business by anything whatever. If the Senator goes on, there will be half a dozen Senators with requests. I can see it in their eyes now.

Mr. PETTUS. I would be very much obliged to the Senator if he would observe the rule which he lays down for others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will withdraw the House bill.

Mr. HOAR. Did I understand the Senator from Alabama to ask some disposition of the House bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He did.

Mr. HOAR. What disposition?

Mr. PETTUS. I intended to make a motion to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill on the Calendar. The Senate bill is Calendar No. 3090.

Mr. LODGE. What is the bill?

Mr. PETTUS. A local bill for Alabama.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I will not object to it.

Mr. PETTUS. There are some homestead settlers there—about a hundred of them—who got their homesteads on a railroad land grant.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator say the bills are identical in language?

Mr. PETTUS. They are in substance the same, but not in language.

Mr. HOAR. Then I must object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts objects. The Chair will hold the bill on the table for the present.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the questions propounded to me by the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Connecticut all go to this point: Should there be laws which would make it a greater crime to kill an officer of the Government than to kill a private individual? When you boil it all down, that is the question; and the questions indicate that in the opinion of the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Wisconsin our statute books should be loaded with laws which should make it a greater crime to kill an officer of the Government than to kill a private citizen.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. While I recognize the right and the duty of the Government to protect the life of every citizen, I think there is an additional duty on the part of the Government to protect its officers, for that is protection of the Government itself.

Mr. BACON. That does not change the proposition I have laid down: That the necessary position of the Senators is that the statute books should be loaded down—for it would take a vast number of statutes if they were made applicable to each officer of the Government, unless there should be one general statute applicable to all—with criminal laws making it a greater offense to commit a crime against the person of an officer than against a private citizen.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator whether this bill does punish the crime against an officer with any other or greater punishment within its jurisdiction than it punishes the same crime against the private citizen?

My understanding, if I may say it, is that while the question which the Senator puts is an interesting one, it does not arise here. This bill does not punish more by a hair's breadth the crime against the official whom the Government protects than it does the crime against a citizen. It only says that when the crime is against a United States officer within its jurisdiction it shall be punished by the United States. That is all.

Mr. BACON. Nevertheless, that is the proposition, that as to private citizens the United States will enact no law, and of course can not do so, while as to officials—all officials, because the principle is the same as to the lowest as it is to the highest, differing only in degree—that as to all officials of the United States Government it will enact penalties which, although the acts are committed in the same State, in the same place, are greater penalties than are enforced by the existing law for the same act against a private individual.

Nor, Mr. President, does this bill stop there. It makes distinctions between officers. It does not stop at distinctions between officers of the Government. It makes distinctions between officers of this Government and the representatives here of foreign governments. It makes distinctions between the representatives of foreign governments and the citizens of this Government.

Mr. President, if the Chief Justice of the United States is assaulted in the District of Columbia, it is not so great a crime under the proposed law as if the same man in the same way assaulted a representative of the smallest government on earth who is here—a Central American government or a West Indian government. Mr. President, I take that as a radical and insuperable objection to this proposed law. Inequality before the law in any particular is objectionable. Inequality before the law in any particular is absolutely antagonistic to the fundamental principles of this Government. But inequality before the criminal law above all things should never be consented to. Never before have we had any such laws. Mr. President, as I was saying, the logic of this law extends to every officer of the Government. In this particular instance it is limited to certain officers of the Government, but there is no possible reason which will sustain the law as to one officer which will not extend it as to another.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] recognized that when this Congress first began, and he introduced a bill which I now wish to read to the Senate. This is one of the first bills introduced in this Congress. It is Senate bill No. 3, and it was introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senate will note that at the time the Senator went to the full length which the logic of its position necessarily carries him and proposed a law which would necessarily extend to every officer of the United States. It is Senate bill No. 3, introduced December 4, 1901. I believe that was the first day of the session. If not, certainly it was in the first week of the session. It is entitled:

A bill for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who shall within the limits of the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully kill or cause the death of the President of the United States or any officer thereof, or who shall willfully cause the death of the ruler or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death.

The Senate will mark the words. It is not simply the President of the United States, but "or any officer thereof." That intended to set apart an entirely new class in the United States. Every man holding a commission under the United States Government, however high or however low (and there are several hundred thousand of them), were to be set apart and a halo put around the head of each, and he is to be set loose in the community as a superior being, entitled to greater protection under the law than any other man who happens to be a private citizen, however more worthy that private citizen may happen to be in his person or in his character.

That was in the bill introduced by the senior Senator from Massachusetts. I hope he will tell us, when he comes to reply, whether he now says that that ought to be the law. Are we to have a separate class in this country? Is it to be the fact that under the criminal law there are to be two classes—one class composed of every man who happens to hold any position under the Government of the United States, the other class the vast millions of our people who are engaged in their own private affairs? In the one case it is a misdemeanor to assault the private citizen. In the other it is death to assault a man because he happens to hold a commission under the United States Government.

Mr. President, am I wrong in saying that this bill, which goes to the fundamentals of our Government, justifies a man here in opposing it with all the powers God has given him? Mr. President, if it ever comes to the time when a man has to feel the humiliation of which I spoke just now, when he must look in his neighbor's face and recognize the fact that he has not the same protection under the law that his neighbor has, because, forsooth, his neighbor has a little commission or a big commission under the Government, it shall not be said that I gave my consent or that I yielded any opportunity there was to defeat so iniquitous a bill.

A Senator sitting near me says to me it lays a foundation for an aristocracy. Where is there a government on the earth that has any such law? I presume that in some autocracies of olden times there may have been such laws. There may be still some. I do not know, but certainly not among the advanced nations. It is no more a crime to kill a peer of England than it is to kill the humblest citizen of England. There is no law in France which draws a distinction between an assault upon an official and an assault upon a private individual: and shall we, in this boasted land, be the pioneers in such legislation?

Mr. President, I do not know whether or not anything I may say in this life shall be thought worthy to survive me, but if so, I will be content if one utterance of mine in this debate on this question shall be that by which I shall be remembered; and that one utterance is that there should not be in this land one law for one man, even though he be the President of the United States, and another law for another man, even though he be the lowliest citizen of the Republic. Sir, liberty in its last analysis is equality before the law.

But I am going on now to read this bill, which was introduced by the senior Senator from Massachusetts at the beginning of this Congress, and I repeat that I hope when he comes to reply, if he should see fit to say anything in reply, or deem it worthy of reply, he will answer whether or not he stands by this bill, whether the senior Senator from Massachusetts will still say, as he said in the introduction of this bill, that he thinks there ought to be one law for the private citizen and another law for a man who happens to hold a Federal commission.

Now, listen to this, Senators in this Chamber! I have read you the section of the bill introduced by the learned and distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, in which he said that anyone who shall kill the President of the United States or any officer of the United States shall be punished with death. That is bad enough. But listen to this. Section 2 of the same bill provides:

SEC. 2. That any person who shall within the limits of the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, make an attempt on the life of the President of the United States or any officer thereof, or who shall make an attempt on the life of the ruler or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death.

And then section 3 is as follows:

SEC. 3. That any person who shall within the limits of the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, advise or counsel the killing of the President of the United States or any officer thereof, or shall conspire to accomplish the same, or who shall advise or counsel the killing of the ruler or chief magistrate of any foreign country, or shall conspire to accomplish the same, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding twenty years.

Does the Senator from Massachusetts stand by that?

Mr. MORGAN. He is standing by it in his report.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator still say, as he said in the bill which he introduced on the 4th day of December, 1901, that any man who shall commit any assault upon any officer of the Government shall be punished with death?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if I correctly heard what the Senator read, he did not read my bill.

Mr. BACON. I am reading it. I have it in print.

Mr. HOAR. Let us see.

Mr. BACON. I will read it again if the Senator desires.

Mr. HOAR. I do not make the charge. I say as it struck my ears.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. If I correctly heard the Senator, he followed the precedent of the man who said the words "There is no God" were in the Scripture, leaving out the previous words, "The fool hath said in his heart."

Mr. BACON. I am reading from the Senator's bill.

Mr. HOAR. Is not the Senator, let me ask him, under the impression that the bill provided that any person who made an attempt on the life of any officer of the Government should be punished by death?

Mr. BACON. If that is not what it means I do not understand the English language.

Mr. HOAR. Then let me take the bill.

Mr. BACON. It is in the second section.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me.

Mr. BACON. That is exactly what it says.

Mr. HOAR. Here is the second section.

Mr. BACON. Right at the bottom of the page.

Mr. HOAR. I have it. Now, I should like any Senator who listened to what the Senator said this bill contained to just hear what it does contain:

SEC. 2. That any person who shall within the limits of the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, make an attempt on the life of the President of the United States or any officer thereof—

The Senator said "assault."

Mr. BACON. I read it verbatim as it is there.

Mr. HOAR. (Reading)— or who shall make an attempt on the life of the ruler or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death.

Mr. BACON. That is right.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator said "assault," if I heard him correctly, but I presume I did not.

Mr. BACON. When the Senator gets through I will respond to that.

Mr. HOAR. I am through.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Now, Mr. President, I read——

Mr. HOAR. I stand by that bill word for word.

Mr. BACON. Now I have the Senator's position.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator read that section again?

Mr. BACON. I will in a second.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I will yield in a moment. The Senator by direct charge, not by implication, attributes to me a desire to pervert these words.

Mr. HOAR. Not in the least. I said if I heard the Senator correctly he said so and so. He did not change it then. I said again that I did not believe that I could have heard him correctly, and I do not.

Mr. BACON. Now I want to repeat exactly what I said before. I read this section word for word.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator read it again?

Mr. HOAR. Read it again.

Mr. BACON (reading):

SEC. 2. That any person who shall within the limits of the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, make an attempt on the life of the President of the United States or any officer thereof, or who shall make an attempt on the life of the ruler or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is that in the present bill?

Mr. BACON. No; but I say that bill is a logical sequence of the present bill—that it is a bill introduced into this Congress by the Senator from Massachusetts—and there is not a single principle to justify the present bill that would not also justify the bill I am now reading.

Now, I am replying to the suggestion of the Senator that I was endeavoring to mislead the Senate as to his words. I read that sentence verbatim, as I had just read it. In commenting on it I did use the word "assault."

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. BACON. But, in connection with that, everybody would know what assault I meant—an assault with intent to kill—because I had just read the sentence. What else could I mean, in speaking of an assault, except an assault provided for there? Necessarily no Senator could have been misled by me in that regard. If I had attempted——

Mr. HOAR. I accept cheerfully the Senator's statement of his purpose. The Senator will not for a moment think that I would wish to make any imputation on his fairness?

Mr. BACON. I trust not.

Mr. HOAR. But I must say that when the Senator, reading a piece of print, goes on to say that the Senator from Massachusetts undertakes to make an assault on a United States officer punishable with death, I do not think he was very cautious in his language; and I think the persons who heard that would be very likely to understand that he meant literally what he stated. I accept his disclaimer, of course.

Mr. BACON. The word "assault" in that connection could only refer to the particular kind of assault that was contained in the section which I had just read in the same breath.

Mr. HOAR. But we do not always listen to the reading of print. What the Senator said was that I undertook to make an assault on a United States officer punishable with death, and he says everybody must have understood what he meant because a little before he had read the language of the bill. Now, I think the Senator was very careless, very careless.

Mr. BACON. I am sorry that I have to differ from the Senator in that regard, as I am to differ from him in any other. The Senator is a lawyer and has argued very many more cases, I presume, than I ever did. Most of those whom I address are lawyers. Any lawyer would know that when I read the sentence in which the words occurred "make an attempt on the life of the President," and then, in commenting on that very section, spoke of it as an assault, that I meant only an assault with intent to kill. I could not have intended that anybody should understand anything else, and I do not think there is any carelessness in it.

But, Mr. President, that is splitting hairs. I come back to the proposition, conceding it fully to be an assault with intent to kill, is it a correct proposition that in this country there should be a class of men from the highest to the lowest man against each one of whom there shall be the death penalty imposed in the case of an assault with intent to kill, whereas in all jurisdiction in this country such a crime is only punishable as a felony, subject to imprisonment?

Now, there are some who contend, and with great force and logic, that assault with intent to kill is as great a crime as the actual killing; that the intent at last is the crime. But whether that is a correct view or not, it is not the view taken by the law, and never has been. It is true the time was when a good many things which are now felonies, punishable by imprisonment, were punished by death, in the same way that very much graver crimes were at the same time punished with death. But that was not because the law regarded the minor offense equal to the other, but because it regarded the minor offense as one entitled to death, and no greater penalty could be imposed for the greater offense.

So it is that in this day, at least in all civilized countries, so far as I know, certainly in all the countries in which there are any systems of a jurisprudence corresponding with anything we have in this country, there is a distinction under the law between the man who attempts to commit a crime and the man who commits it. Whether right or wrong, the distinction exists in this country.

So when it is proposed, or has been proposed, or shall in the future be proposed, to enact a law which will say that as to all the officials of the Government, from a mail carrier up, an assault with intent to kill shall be punished with death, aside from the fact that you have passed a law as to what does not exist under the criminal jurisdiction as an offense against the individual or by a private citizen, you have a law, as I said, aside from that in which there is a distinction of class, class under the criminal law, not simply class before the civil law; class under the criminal law by which one man walks abroad, covered by a panoply, and another man walks abroad without any protection. And not only so, but there is to be a distinction under the criminal law in which the perpetrator of the crime who assaults one man is a greater criminal than if he assaults another man. I recognize no such distinction, Mr. President, and I will never give my consent to such a law.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there such a proposition before us?

Mr. BACON. Certainly there is in this very bill, not to the same extent, but this very bill selects certain officers.

Mr. SPOONER. But they are the officers who are to succeed to the Presidency in a contingency.

Mr. BACON. Not at all.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, so far as national officers are concerned.

Mr. BACON. Very well; that may be, but that is not the point I am on. The question the learned Senator asked me, while an entirely pertinent one to the general subject, and he very seldom asks any other question but one that goes directly to the point, is not the one I am discussing. I suppose his attention was diverted. That is not the particular point I am on now, which is as to the principle upon which this law rests and the proposition that the logical extension of that principle is not limited to these officers, but embraces every officer under the Government.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, I think there is a distinction.

Mr. BACON. Yes; in degree.

Mr. SPOONER. It seems to be an obvious principle in politics in the proposition to safeguard the country against an interregnum, so to speak, in the Presidential office and the punishment for assaults upon the great army of employees.

Mr. BACON. Yes; in a degree the Senator is correct.

Mr. SPOONER. I think this bill is, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, so far as the first and second sections go, a concession upon the part of the House, and a very large one, to the Senate.

Mr. BACON. But it is not so as to all the sections. The concession of principle——

Mr. SPOONER. I am speaking now of the punishment provided for the murder of the President, Vice-President, or the officers who by law would succeed to the position.

Mr. BACON. Does not the Senator recognize that he is taking me off my line of thought?

Mr. SPOONER. No; I thought I was on the Senator's line of thought.

When this bill passed the Senate the Senator objected to it upon the ground that a man might be punished in an unusual way for assaulting or for killing a Cabinet officer, one who, under the law, would succeed to the Presidency in a certain contingency, when his grievance was a private one and when the official was not involved in the discharge of official duty. I did not like that provision in the bill. I have not myself liked the Presidential succession law altogether. But the Senator from Massachusetts in this conference bill has guarded against that objection absolutely, I think. Will the Senator allow me a moment further?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER (reading):

SEC. 2. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully and maliciously kill or cause the death of any officer of the United States entitled under the Constitution and laws thereof to act as President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President while he is engaged in the performance of his official duties, or because of his official duties or character, or because of his official acts or omissions, or who by so killing such official shall cause such a vacancy in the office by him held at a time when, by the Constitution and laws of the United States, it would be the duty of the person holding such office to act as President, shall suffer death.

If the President should be killed, and the Secretary of State before he could take the oath of office, he being then entitled to discharge the duties of that office under the Constitution and laws, should be assassinated, that would fall within the last provision, it seems to me.

Mr. BACON. If we were at the bar trying a case, I do not know any more dangerous antagonist that I would recognize than the Senator from Wisconsin; and the Senator brings to this forum the same equipment, the same adroitness he has there. I do not know of anything which is more calculated to throw some less experienced antagonist off his guard than when he is on a particular line of thought to have an interruption directing his attention to an entirely different proposition, thereby diverting him from what he was then pursuing, and probably taking him at an unexpected and unprepared moment on another proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, I know of no man anywhere less liable to be diverted by an interruption than the Senator from Georgia is. If I diverted him I apologize for it.

Mr. BACON. I am very much obliged to the Senator, and I will endeavor to merit his compliment by proceeding on the particular line I was pursuing when he interrupted me. I will endeavor at a later stage to take up the particular points that he has suggested, and which are entirely pertinent to this discussion. The Senator will not misunderstand me as to that.

I was discussing this proposition. I was trying to show the dangerous character of this proposed legislation, that while in this instance it was limited in the proposed bill to the offense against the President and against the members of those who were called his Cabinet and against foreign ambassadors and foreign ministers, the logic of the bill, while it might differ in degree. carried the law to all officers of the Government, and that particular line of thought was in part suggested, though of course I had considered it before, by questions which have been asked me by the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 7301) to further provide for the safe-keeping of public moneys, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. What has become of the pending matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will please state his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. What is the order before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order, the unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think that the unfinished business displaces the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived——

Mr. HOAR. I make the point of order that the unfinished business does not displace the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What disposition will the Senator make of the unfinished business?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid aside temporarily to enable the conference report to be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is made that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of further considering the conference report.

Mr. ALDRICH. Or until the Senator from Georgia shall have finished his speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Or until the Senator from Georgia finishes his remarks.

Mr. TELLER. I object to its being laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado objects to the unfinished business being laid aside. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. HOAR. I should like the ruling of the Chair as to whether a conference report is displaced by the unfinished business at 1 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order of the Senate is the unfinished business. If the Senate by a majority vote or otherwise decide to lay it aside, that is the pleasure of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I desire permission to say that I do not understand that that rule applies to conference reports. There is an express rule on the subject which I should like to have read. I do not wish to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. McCUMBER. What matter is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business.

Mr. HOAR. I move to take up the conference report.

Mr. McCUMBER. Was I not recognized before the Senator from Massachusetts upon this matter, in asking a question? I asked it for the purpose of making another motion, and while I am on my feet addressing the Chair I do not think it fair that the Senator from Massachusetts should make the motion without being recognized by the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. I was on my feet addressing the Chair when the Senator from North Dakota spoke, and I did not yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will leave the matter to the Chair entirely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has made certain rules for its government. The Chair has no discretion but to enforce those rules. The motion before the Senate is, Shall the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering the conference report?

Mr. HOAR. That was not the motion which I made.

Mr. LODGE. The motion is to take up the conference report, which is not debatable.

Mr. HOAR. My motion is to take up the conference report.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to know what the motion is. I know there has been something going on over there, but I do not know what it was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate take up the conference report. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. HOAR Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HOAR. May I have unanimous consent to make a statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to make a statement to the Senate. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I said when this matter was called up that if there was any serious desire on the part of any considerable number of Senators that it should not be disposed of now I would not press it. To that purpose I adhere. I had hoped that when the Senator from Georgia had completed his remarks, and possibly one or two other Senators had made some brief statements of their views, as we might as well have a vote on the measure now as at any time, that that would be the desire of the Senate; but I do not think within twenty-four hours of our final adjournment that I ought to press it if that proposition be not concurred in.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me just a moment?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to one fact. All of this bill, so far as it is preventive in its character in the exclusion of anarchists, was by my motion put upon the immigration bill as an amendment, and it has become a law.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, the anarchist part of it.

Mr. BACON. That has become a law, which I consider the important part of the bill. I have always been in favor of it.

Mr. HOAR. That is true.

Mr. BACON. That much has been done by this Congress. I confess, so far as I am concerned, the remainder of the bill is vicious to the last degree. While I shall not attempt to use any obstructive tactics, I shall have to debate it at length. The bill has never yet been debated in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. That I understand; but the Senate debated the bill several days some time ago, and debated the same question.

Mr. BACON. I do not mean that the Senate never debated it at all.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. HOAR. I want to know if Senators anywhere on either side of the Chamber, if I can find out in some way, are willing to have a vote taken after the Senator from Georgia gets through? If they are not, I shall stop now.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. HOAR. I yield.

Mr. TELLER. If I can be accorded for a moment the privilege given to the Senator from Massachusetts, I want to say that in my judgment this bill is not likely to pass.

Mr. HOAR. Then I will stop.

Mr. TELLER. I think there are serious objections to it, and I think, if the Senator will realize that, we might as well drop the matter now as at any time.

Mr. HOAR. If my honorable friend will pardon me, I will express my conviction, as near as we can predict such a thing, that it is certain to pass, but not to-day; on the Senator's intimation I suppose he means to-day.

Mr. TELLER. I mean to-day.

Mr. HOAR. Very well——

Mr. TELLER. I mean this Congress, to-day and to-morrow——

Mr. HOAR. Then I withdraw the motion. To-day is the last day.

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws his motion.

PURE FOOD BILL.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 3109, the pure food bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from North Dakota——

Mr. LODGE. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order that a motion can not be made to temporarily lay aside. That must be granted by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. LODGE. The unfinished business must either be displaced by a motion or temporarily laid aside by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can move to take up any bill he desires, but to temporarily lay aside is not in order. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move, then, that the Senate take up House bill 3109, known as the pure food bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 3109, known as the pure food bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from North Dakota allow me to make a statement pending that motion?

Mr. McCUMBER. It seems to me that the bill the Senator asks to be heard on is one that it is acknowledged can not possibly pass the Senate——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that this debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the motion of the Senator from North Dakota will be voted down.

Mr. TELLER. If this debate is proceeding by unanimous consent, what is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from North Dakota that the Senate take up for consideration the bill known as the "pure food bill."

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator would withhold that just long enough to allow me to make an inquiry which I think may facilitate the transaction of the business in the Senate and our convenience.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know of the Senator who has the bill in charge which we have been debating for a day or two whether he intends to continue to press that bill or not?

Mr. ALDRICH. I tried to get the Senator from North Dakota to yield to me to make a statement in that connection.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield to the Senator to make a statement in that connection.

Mr. ALDRICH. I failed to get his consent. It certainly is not my purpose to keep the bill before the Senate at any great length or for the purpose of preventing other public business from being transacted. After the notices that were served last night publicly I was satisfied the bill could not pass at this session. I should like to keep it before the Senate until I can make, myself, a short statement in regard to it and possibly there may be some other Senators who will desire to be heard.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say that I should like to make a short statement if the bill gets before the Senate, not with a view of passing it or defeating it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator in charge of the bill should be given that much consideration, and I hope no motion will be made at this moment to displace it.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. I have waited all the morning on account of the Philippine tariff bill. In fact, I have waited for many days to call up that bill, and I want to make a motion to take it up and bring it before the Senate. I wish it to be understood that if any other motion is made I shall be forced to antagonize it.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CARMACK. Does the Senator from Massachusetts make that motion now?

Mr. LODGE. No; the Senator from North Dakota has made a motion which cuts me off.

Mr. DUBOIS. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that perhaps it would be better to dispose of the request made by the Senator from Rhode Island, which is an exceedingly reasonable one, and I do not know that anyone will object to it, and after that matter is disposed of——

Mr. LODGE. I do not object to the request of the Senator from Rhode Island at all. I merely wish to say that I shall be obliged at the earliest possible moment to move the Philippine tariff bill, and therefore, of course, I must oppose the taking up of any other bill.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to make a statement to the Senate. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Last night, in my liberality, I yielded the floor several times, and I yielded it to the Senator from Texas just at the time the Senator from Rhode Island had asked me a question which I construed to mean a desire on his part that I should present to the Senate a dissertation on facts. I was prepared to present them to the Senate, but before I regained the floor the Senate adjourned on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island. I had no opportunity then to present the views I had on the bill, and I want to say that it was not because I was embarrassed at all by the question of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. QUAY. I also ask unanimous consent. I venture, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to make a statement. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. QUAY. I venture in all humility of spirit to make a suggestion which I think will clarify the situation. It is this: That at 2 o'clock to-day the Senate shall proceed to vote upon what is known as the omnibus statehood bill [laughter], with the amendments now pending or then to be offered, and without further debate; that after the vote upon the omnibus statehood bill is concluded the Senate shall proceed to vote upon the financial bill being pushed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] under the same conditions; that afterwards the Senate shall proceed to vote upon the conference report submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]; that afterwards the Senate shall take up the Philippine tariff bill suggested by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and proceed to its discussion, and when that is disposed of that the Senate shall take up the pure food bill of the Senator from North Dakota. That is an order of business which ought to be satisfactory to the entire Senate and which would probably occupy the remainder of this session of Congress.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that he divide his different requests.

Mr. QUAY. I trust the Chair will withdraw that suggestion. I have heard no objection to the proposition as yet.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator again state his proposition? My attention was directed elsewhere for the moment.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I decline to restate the proposition.

Mr. LODGE. Did it contain the Philippine tariff bill?

Mr. QUAY. It included the consideration of that bill.

Mr. CARMACK. Did it include the Littlefield antitrust bill?

Mr. QUAY. It did not; but I will add that if the Senator desires. I pause, Mr. President, for a reply to my request. I hear no objection.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. I suppose that proposition is not debatable, except by unanimous consent, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not debatable, the Chair will say.

Mr. FORAKER. With the permission of the Senate, I rise to express the hope that the proposition made by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be accepted. I think it will be little short of a public calamity if we adjourn without passing some of the measures which are involved in that proposition.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is proceeding, as the Chair understands, by unanimous consent.

Mr. FORAKER. I am not referring in that connection to the statehood bill. I have supported that bill earnestly and with a conscientious conviction of duty, and I want to continue to support it, and I should be glad to vote for it; but some of the other bills I have mentioned, if the Senator heard what I have said, are bills of far-reaching consequence to the American people. I feel that if this Congress shall take a vacation of nine months without acting on the Philippine tariff bill, after two messages of the President, transmitting to us the cable statements from Governor Taft as to the conditions in the Philippine Islands, we shall have fallen short of a most serious public duty. I can not get the consent of my mind, Mr. President, to refuse consideration to such measures except under compulsion.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, do I understand that unanimous consent is given to my request? I shall be glad to have the question put to the Senate.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FORAKER. I only wish to say another word, Mr. President. I have asked unanimous consent that I might say it.

Mr. QUAY. I thought the Senator had concluded his remarks.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to speak in or trespass upon the time of another Senator or in violation of the rules. I ask unanimous consent to say a word further.

Mr. McCUMBER. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is not my motion pending before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from North Dakota is before the Senate, and the discussion has been continued by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, I have not finished my remarks, and by unanimous consent I will say another word.

I feel the same way about the Aldrich bill. I know other Senators here do not agree with me as to that measure, but if we can put them together we can do some business. In advancing this proposition we are not asking anybody to vote in any way which we particularly may favor, but we are asking that the Senate may have a vote. If they do not want to adopt the omnibus statehood bill, they can vote "no." If they do not want the Aldrich bill passed, they can vote "no." If they do not want the Philippine tariff bill to pass, they can vote "no." But it seeme to me the Senate of the United States ought to be able to do business, and especially when there is such important business to be done as this.

I want to take advantage of this opportunity to add one other word that I did not speak when the subject was under discussion before the Senate a few days ago in regard to cloture, and that is this: I hope the Senate of the United States will in the early future adopt some kind of reasonable cloture rule in order that we may have honest, sincere, full, and genuine debate when propositions are presented here.

Mr. TELLER. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. TELLER. It is whether a Senator can ask permission for the consideration of half a dozen bills at the same time; whether he must not ask for their consideration seriatim, and take the question, for instance, on the first bill—the statehood bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no limit to any request a Senator may make. It depends on Senators whether the request can be divided.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, is that an omnibus request? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question before the Senate.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, just one word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to speak, as debate is not in order. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. A few days ago, when the President pro tempore was in the chair, he ruled that a request of this kind could be divided. I did not then believe that the ruling was correct; but if that was the ruling at that time, the rulings ought to be uniform; it is now a precedent that is established; and there was no appeal from that ruling of the Chair, which was made on a request made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] asked that the question be divided, and the Chair did divide the question. The Senator from Pennsylvania will remember that that was the ruling of the Chair thereon. I ask that this question may be divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Mississippi that every authority upon parliamentary law agrees that when a question is subject to division any member of the body can have it divided and have a separate vote upon the various questions.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order now that further debate is out of order on the pending motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

Mr. MCCUMBER. I would ask the Senator from Massachusetts not to oppose my making a very short statement, inasmuch as I have yielded to everyone else to make a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from North Dakota is not debatable. The motion is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the "pure food bill."

Mr. MCCUMBER. I am asking unanimous consent that I may be permitted to make a very brief statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to make a brief statement. Is there objection?

Mr. QUAY. I shall have no objection if the Senator will pardon me for one moment. I merely desire to call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the fact that the measure which he is promoting is included in the request I made for unanimous consent.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I understand that, but I am quite certain that unanimous consent will not be given that the bills named shall be voted upon without further argument.

Mr. QUAY. I have heard no objection to the request.

Mr. FORAKER. There has been no objection as yet to the unanimous consent asked for by the Senator from Pennsylvania, I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NELSON. The proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania has not yet been submitted to the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Because it was not in order. At the time the Senator from North Dakota had the floor and made a motion which was not debatable. By unanimous consent, other Senators have proceeded to discuss various questions. The question now before the Senate is, Shall the Senator from North Dakota have unanimous consent to make a statement in relation to the bill in his charge? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to say that this bill was reported from the Committee on Manufactures on April 2, 1902; that it has been at the head of the Calendar almost ever since that date; that it has not had a hearing; that it has given way to every other possible matter; and it seems to me, considering its importance, the general demand of the public for a pure food law, and the simplicity of the law that is now being proposed, that the bill ought to be considered at this time, and that we should have a vote upon it.

Mr. President, all I want to say is that I want an honest consideration. The bill has been before the Senate during this entire Congress; it has been reported almost a year, and now I only ask a vote on the subject-matter therein contained. I ask for a vote on the motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the pure-food bill.

Mr. LODGE. On that motion, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I rise to a parliamentary question. Has the unfinished business, known as the Aldrich financial bill, yet been laid aside?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The effect of taking up the pure food bill, then, will be to displace that bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would displace that bill.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Before the vote is taken, Mr. President, I suggest the want of a quorum, so that all Senators may be present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Daniel,	Hoar,	Pettus,
Alger,	Dietrich,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.
Bacon,	Dillingham,	Kean,	Platt, N. Y.
Bard,	Dolliver,	Kearns,	Pritchard,
Bate,	Dryden,	Kittredge,	Quarles,
Berry,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Quay,
Beveridge,	Elkins,	McCumber,	Simmons,
Blackburn,	Fairbanks,	McEnery,	Simon,
Burnham,	Foraker,	McLaurin, Miss.	Spooner,
Burrows,	Foster, La.	Mallory,	Stewart,
Burton,	Foster, Wash.	Martin,	Taliaferro,
Carmack,	Frye,	Mason,	Teller,
Clark, Mont.	Gallinger,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Clark, Wyo.	Gamble,	Nelson,	Warren,
Clay,	Hanna,	Patterson,	Wetmore.
Cockrell,	Hansbrough,	Penrose,
Cullom,	Heitfeld,	Perkins,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-six Senators have responded to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is known as the pure food bill, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], but I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. As I do not observe that Senator present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN (after having voted in the affirmative). I ask to withdraw my vote, Mr. President, as I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], who is absent from the Chamber because of a death in his family.

Mr. NELSON. I will say to the Senator that I transferred my pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS]; so that the Senator from Kentucky can vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Under that arrangement, I will let my vote stand.

Mr. TURNER (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire if the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. TURNER. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire if the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. MALLORY. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. With the consent of the Senator from Wisconsin, I propose to transfer my pair, so that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] will stand paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. Under that arrangement I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to inquire if the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed he has not.

Mr. ELKINS. I am paired with that Senator, and will therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to inquire whether the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I withhold my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bacon,	Clay,	McEnery,	Pettus,
Bard,	Daniel,	McLaurin, Miss.	Quay,
Bate,	Foster, La.	Martin,	Simon,
Berry,	Gamble,	Morgan,	Taliaferro,
Blackburn,	Heitfeld,	Patterson,	Teller,
Burton,	Kittredge,	Penrose,	Tillman,
Clark, Mont.	McCumber,	Perkins,	Wellington.

NAYS—32.

Aldrich,	Depew,	Frye,	Lodge,
Alger,	Dietrich,	Gallinger,	Nelson,
Beveridge,	Dillingham,	Hanna,	Platt, Conn.
Burnham,	Dolliver,	Hoar,	Platt, N. Y.
Carmack,	Dryden,	Jones, Ark.	Quarles,
Clark, Wyo.	Fairbanks,	Jones, Nev.	Spooner,
Cullom,	Foraker,	Kean,	Stewart,
Deboe,	Foster, Wash.	Kearns,	Wetmore.

NOT VOTING—28.

Allison,	Elkins,	McLaurin, S. C.	Proctor,
Bailey,	Gibson,	Mallory,	Rawlins,
Burrows,	Hale,	Mason,	Scott,
Clapp,	Hansbrough,	Millard,	Simmons,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Turner,
Culberson,	Hawley,	Money,	Vest,
Dubois,	McComas,	Pritchard,	Warren.

So the Senate refused to consider the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17202) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 7425) authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and granting the same and a right to operate and maintain a line of railroad through the Vancouver Barracks and military reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Northern Pacific Railway Company.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 4641) for the relief of Benjamin Franklin Handforth;

A bill (S. 5118) granting an increase of pension to Adam Stuber;

A bill (H. R. 16910) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904; and

A bill (H. R. 16990) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, covering a statement showing the receipts and disbursements of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company for the month of January, 1903, furnished by the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission in pursuance of section 11 of the "Act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory," etc., approved March 3, 1901.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, March 3, 1903.

COURTS-MARTIAL IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 23d ultimo, certain information in regard to courts-martial in the Philippine Islands in consequence of instructions communicated to General Chaffee by the Secretary of War, and also the action had thereon by the President or Secretary of War, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT EXCISE BOARD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the operations of the excise board of the District of Columbia for the license year ended October 31, 1902; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ELMER E. FORSHAY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Civil Service Commission, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th ultimo, a statement of the charges and evidence on account of which Elmer E. Forshay was dismissed from the surveyor-general's office of Idaho. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] to the communication. What disposition does the Senator desire to have made of it?

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I ask that the communication from the Civil Service Commission may be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the communication will be printed as a Senate document and lie on the table.

Mr. TELLER. I rise to a question of order. It seems to me that the report called for by the Senate from the Civil Service Commission should not be designated as a Senate document. It should be printed and lie on the table or go to a committee, but it is not technically a Senate document. We have not been in the habit of entitling the reports from bureaus or departments in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposes it will answer the purpose of the Senator from Idaho to have the report printed.

Mr. DUBOIS. My object, of course, now is to decide, after reading it over, what further action I shall ask either a committee of the Senate or the Senate itself to take on the report. So the printing of it subserves my purpose for the present at any rate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will then be printed and lie on the table.

M'CLURE & WILLBANKS.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent to make a report at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to receiving the report? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11340) for the relief of McClure & Willbanks, to report it without amendment. It is a small bill. The Senator from Georgia is very much interested in it, and I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. SPOONER. Is there a report with that bill?

Mr. CLAY. I will state to the Senator that there is a report.

Mr. SPOONER. From what committee?

Mr. CLAY. The Committee on Claims. The Senator from New Jersey has just reported it.

Mr. KEAN. There is no written Senate report with the bill, but there is a House report.

Mr. BACON. I can explain the bill to the Senator if he wishes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I feel constrained to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the foundation of the claim?

Mr. BACON. I will say to the Senator——

Mr. ALDRICH. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island objects to the consideration of the bill, and it goes to the Calendar.

REVISED STATUTES RELATING TO TOBACCO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a House bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 16457) to amend section 3394 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to tobacco.

Mr. QUAY. I desire, under Rule XIV, to object to the second reading of the bill to-day.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the right of the Senator to object.

SAFE-KEEPING OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I feel constrained to insist upon the regular order. I do not intend to keep the pending business before the Senate for any great length of time. I should like to finish what I have to say in regard to it, and then the Senate may, so far as I am concerned, go on with the consideration of other subjects. There will be ample time for all unanimous consents later during the day.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 7301) to further provide for the safe-keeping of public money, and for other purposes.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, I had the floor when this bill was up last, and I agreed to yield the floor to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and after he gets through I will be perfectly delighted to yield the floor to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not asking the Senator from Mississippi to yield to me. When the Senator is through with his speech I will submit some remarks in my own time.

Mr. TELLER. I will yield to the Senator from Rhode Island now.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; I will take my own time.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator can have all the time he wants.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the Senator go ahead.

Mr. TELLER. You go ahead.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; you go ahead.

Mr. TELLER. I prefer that the Senator should make his speech first.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator is going to speak on another subject, perhaps I had better go on now.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator had better go on, as perhaps I may branch off.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to have it understood that I am entitled to the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

Mr. ALDRICH. In my own right?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In his own right.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I desire, before this bill passes from the attention of the Senate, to say a few words in answer to some of the criticisms which have been made upon it by Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

I must confess that I have been greatly surprised at their attitude on this question. The vehement and zealous denunciations of national banks which were indulged in by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] recalled the period of the war and the years which immediately succeeded it. Then the Democratic party based its principal claim for popular support on its opposition to capital, opposition to banks, and opposition to business men and methods generally.

I supposed that that day had passed, and I had hoped that new policies and new methods under the leadership of new men were to mark a new era in Democratic history.

The national banking system, with the approval of nine-tenths of the people of the United States, will remain in existence, and thank Heaven it is beyond the power of those two Senators to destroy it. It is not here by their grace or by the grace of the party they represent. It is here because the people of this country believe in its wisdom and its beneficence.

The Senators say they object to the pending bill because in their opinion it gives to the national banks some new rights and new privileges. I deny that. There is nothing in this bill, not a word, not a syllable, that gives to any national bank any new privilege. In fact, it restricts and lessens, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] well knows, the privileges already enjoyed.

This bill, as I stated in the opening of this discussion, has a simple purpose. It is to relieve the business of the country from Government interference in the way of arbitrary monetary contraction at times when that interference is sure to bring about injurious results.

There is not one word contained in the bill that is susceptible of the construction given it by opposing Senators. It does not propose to change the currency or the banking system of the country. It does not even raise a question as to whether the policy of depositing public moneys in national banks is a wise one. The custom of the Government from Mr. Jefferson's time to this moment has been to deposit public moneys in banks. This policy has been advocated by Republicans, Whigs, and Democrats of authority and standing at all times throughout our history.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] alluded to Andrew Jackson and to his fight against the national bank. What was this contest? It was a fight against a single central national bank and in favor of the banks scattered throughout the United States. He insisted, as Mr. Jefferson had and as nearly all known Democrats have from the beginning of our existence as a Government, that the public money should be deposited in banks and not locked up in the Treasury. Conceding that banks should be used, of course it follows that deposits should be safeguarded in every possible way. It is no new policy which we are seeking to inaugurate. It is simply to throw additional safeguards around the policy that has commended itself to every Administration from Washington's to Roosevelt's.

There never has been a time since 1864, when the national banks were first created, down to the present moment that there have not been large Government deposits in these banks. These were increased notably by Mr. Fairchild, when he was Secretary of the Treasury under Mr. Cleveland. His action in that respect was approved by the President. The policy was publicly announced, and it received the approval of both parties in both Houses of Congress. I repeat there is nothing new in the idea of depositing public money in national banks, but we suggest certain changes that we believe in the interest of the Government.

By the provisions of the pending bill, for the first time it is proposed that the United States shall have a lien upon the assets of the bank as additional security. By this bill we propose for the first time that the banks having these deposits shall pay for the use of the public money. Both of those propositions are objected to strenuously by Senators on the other side. They are willing by their action to maintain existing conditions.

In addition to their general and miscellaneous attacks upon national banks, the Senator from Colorado and several other Senators have criticised the dominant party for the existence of a large surplus and to the bad policy, as they term it, of keeping a large amount of money in the Treasury which ought to be used, they claim, for the payment of the public debt or for some other public purpose.

The Senators confuse a surplus of revenues with a surplus in the Treasury. The Senator from Colorado stated that the surplus in the Treasury—I refer to his first statement, which was used in the discussion last night three or four times—that the surplus in the Treasury was $440,000,000, as I understood him. This amount must, of course, include the one hundred and fifty million which is sacredly pledged by the action of Congress to the redemption of United States notes and other sums not properly included.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator will do me the justice to say that I made it as clear as possible that that was a part of the four hundred million.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what I supposed. The Senator from Colorado, I suppose, will agree with me that the actual surplus, as shown by the Treasury's statement of yesterday or the day before, is approximately $72,000,000.

Mr. TELLER. I will not agree to that. There are seventy odd million dollars besides what is in national banks.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand. I am speaking about what is in the Treasury.

Mr. TELLER. Actually in the Treasury there are seventy-five or seventy-eight millions.

Mr. ALDRICH. Seventy-two millions. It is said—and I am not disposed to dispute that—that the amount of deposits in the national banks is in the Treasury.

Mr. TELLER. That it should be treated as if it were in the Treasury.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the actual surplus, outside of the national bank deposit, is approximately $72,000,000. Included in that surplus is a certain amount of minor coin, another amount of subsidiary coin, and another amount of silver bullion, which, of course, are not available for the payment of the debts of the Government or for the ordinary disbursements of the Treasury.

These amounts aggregate $10,000,000, and if they are taken from the surplus in the Treasury it leaves a net surplus of approximately $62,000,000.

I do not think any Senator who is at all conversant with the working of the Treasury Department will say that $62,000,000 is an excessive sum to be used as a current balance for the public business. It has always been admitted here and elsewhere, I think, that at least $50,000,000 was necessary for that purpose.

So there is no such surplus in the Treasury as Senators have spoken of, and there is no possibility, if the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is correct in the statement which he made last night, that that surplus will be considerably increased. In fact, if the Senator is correct in his statement as to the effect of pending legislation—of payments under the canal treaty; of the reduction of the revenue growing out of the ratification of the Cuban treaty—we are quite likely to have a deficiency and to have the surplus reduced within the next fiscal year instead of having it increased.

The Senator from Colorado not only includes in his estimate of the surplus the $150,000,000 of gold reserve held against United States notes, but he proposes by an amendment which is pending to this bill to pay that out—or at least one hundred and forty millions of it—for the ordinary expenses of the Government. This gold reserve is held under a sacred pledge for the redemption of United States notes. It is the base upon which the policy of maintaining the gold standard in the United States rests. Its removal or its destruction or its lessening would, in my judgment, be an act of absolute bad faith toward the people of the United States.

I do not believe that the Senator from Colorado can get a half a dozen votes for his proposition, even in this body. If there is one thing which is settled beyond recall, it is the inviolable maintenance of the gold standard. This standard would be imperiled immediately by the adoption of the Senator's amendment. I feel sure, however, that it will not be adopted. It will be noticed that the attempt made in connection with this bill to show that we have a large surplus in the Treasury which might be deposited in national banks under its operations is not true. This bill is not intended to increase deposits in national banks. It would not have that effect.

In this connection I desire, in answer to suggestions which have been made on the other side of the Chamber as to the feeling of the national banks of the country in regard to this measure, to repeat what I said last night, that the only bank in New York which has written me in regard to it has protested against it. The banks in Chicago and St. Paul and other cities hold similar views in regard to this measure. Why? Because, as they say, if this bill passes, it will not be as profitable for national banks to hold deposits of public money.

I should like to suggest to managers of banks whether they think it is the primary duty of Congress to make it profitable for national banks to hold Government deposits? I submit that it is not. Our first duty is to the Government of the United States and the Treasury of the United States and the interests of the people of the United States; and if our legislation is in the right direction and conservative and safe, the national banks of the United States have no right to say to us, "You must defeat this measure unless you amend it so as to make it profitable for us to hold deposits of public money."

One of the Senators who addressed the Senate last night talked about $600,000,000 to be deposited in national banks. I think the Senator from Colorado himself indulged more or less in the suggestion that we might add a hundred and fifty millions to the present deposits. It is absolutely impossible, unless the policy of the Republican party is to be changed, that the deposits shall be largely increased. We have as a party in this Congress reduced the public revenue $100,000,000. We are bound by every tradition, by every platform utterance, by every consideration of duty to the country, whenever the national revenues are excessive, to reduce them, and we shall never be found, in my belief, recreant to that trust.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow me?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Does not the Senator from Rhode Island believe that the surplus this year will be at least $50,000,000?

Mr. ALDRICH. I believe that, unless some of the suggestions which the Senator from Colorado made yesterday should prove to be correct, we are likely to have a surplus in the present year of $50,000,000. If that should be true, as I said to the Senator two or three days ago, it will be the duty of Congress in its approaching session to reduce the revenue so that there will be no surplus. So I say that there is no probability—I will go further and say that in my judgment there is no possibility—that the Government deposits in national banks will be increased to any considerable extent over the present amount.

Our purpose in this bill is not to increase the deposits. It is to give to the Secretary of the Treasury the same control over the customs receipts that he now has by law over the internal-revenue receipts, and to insure that the money collected from customs receipts, especially in times when there is a great excess of receipts over expenditures, shall be promptly and efficaciously returned to the channels of trade instead of being locked up in the Treasury of the United States. That is one of the main purposes of this bill, and the Senator from Colorado knows that as well as I do. It is not to increase deposits in national banks. It is not to give the national banks a single privilege that they do not now have. It is to take away from them the right to hold the deposits of public money without paying anything for the use of it.

It has another purpose, of course, and that is to allow the banks to deposit other kinds of securities. Why is this? For two or three reasons. First, because the additional use of United States bonds for this purpose has raised the price of these bonds so high that it has prevented their use as a basis for currency. I am speaking now of my own judgment with respect to this. Second, because it gives the banks in localities throughout the country, where they can not in the nature of things afford to hold Government bonds for security, a chance to use their local securities.

It would allow the people of Colorado or the people of Arkansas or any of the monetary centers of the West to use other securities than United States bonds to secure deposits of public moneys. Is there any Senator here who will not say that the bill in that respect is absolutely safeguarded or that the Government of the United States or the Treasury of the United States is liable, if the bill should become a law, to suffer from loss of security? I venture to say there is no Senator who will make that suggestion. There is nothing whatever in it.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and certain other Senators have contended that our proposition to charge the banks something for the use of this money would in some way change the legal status of the deposits in the national banks. Can any Senator seriously contend that a deposit payable on call, payable on demand, is changed in its nature because the party who receives the deposit pays something for the use of the money while it is on deposit? By express terms this money is always under the control of the Treasurer of the United States. It is payable on his demand.

The Secretary of the Treasury can, in case of failure to pay, sell the securities, which are ample; and in case they should not prove to be ample, he has, under the pending bill, a lien on the assets of the bank for the balance. It is an ordinary business transaction, such as every State and city in the United States, I venture to say, without exception, engages in the management of their own fiscal affairs. There is nothing unusual or untried in it.

If the Senator from Arkansas had $100,000 for which he had no use, and wanted to deposit it in a bank in Little Rock or somewhere else in Arkansas, he would be very glad to deposit it on the terms which this bill establishes in regard to the deposit of public moneys of the United States. I am sure he would ask for no better security. He might possibly try to get a higher rate of interest, that is all. It is an ordinary, plain business transaction between the Government and the banks in continuance of the policy which has been universally acquiesced in.

This bill involves no political question whatever. It ought never to have been discussed upon any partisan basis. It is, I repeat, an attempt to loosen the rigidity of a system whose results have been in the past and inevitably will be in the future to lock up, by Government machinery, at a critical time and in a dangerous manner the money which belongs to the people and which should be in circulation for their benefit. It is this purpose and this object which you gentlemen defeat by the methods you have adopted.

There are two provisions in this bill more important than all the others, in my judgment. They must be adopted sooner or later if the Government is not to continue to depress and destroy business by its own agencies. One is the provision of the third section, by which national-bank notes, when they go into the Treasury, shall be paid out in the current business of the Government and not hurried on through the redemption bureau to destruction. This process of redemption and destruction inevitably goes on more rapidly when the business of the country is depressed.

If a bank in Chicago or in New York has national-bank notes at such a time which they can not use as a part of their reserve, they necessarily and naturally hurry those notes into the Treasury of the United States for redemption, because they are sure to get for them reserve money which they can use. The result is that in times of depression, like those I mentioned, such as we had in the months of October, November, and December of the past year, this process of abstracting money from the people, from circulation, and forcing it into retirement goes on with rapid and destructive force. This should be remedied.

I have often listened, in this Chamber and in the other, to the statements of Democrats vehemently denouncing the evils sure to flow from a contracting currency. They have taunted Republicans at times, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] did last night, with favoring a policy of contraction. The men upon the other side of the Chamber who are listening to me have, in this Chamber, under the leadership of the Senator from Colorado and his associates, frequently called our attention to the destructive results of such a policy, and yet they insist that no remedy shall be applied to a contraction which is brought about by Government action and at a time when it is most dangerous and destructive in its results.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. In a moment. We appeal to you that by the use of methods which can not be criticised and in a business-like way you shall give the Secretary of the Treasury authority to stop this process of contraction and to provide means of expansion when it is absolutely and imperatively needed for the business of the country. Yet you say, "No; we will talk the bill to death for political effect." I am willing to meet that issue. Next fall, if what I fear may result shall result, the people of this country, whose business has been injured and whose prosperity has been destroyed, will be able to place the responsibility squarely upon the men, the small knot of men in this Chamber, who have deliberately, with malice aforethought, murdered this bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question for information. It is whether or not he construes this bill to prevent the national banks from sending in their notes for redemption?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not at all.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the notes are sent in for redemption and they are redeemed under the provisions of his bill, can the Treasury reissue the redeemed notes?

Mr. ALDRICH. They do not reissue them at all. That is not the question.

Mr. PATTERSON. Very well.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Treasury is simply to pay them out.

Mr. PATTERSON. I understood the Senator from Rhode Island to say——

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not necessary to reissue them. They are in the hands of the Treasury. They simply pay them out instead of canceling them.

Mr. PATTERSON. I understood the Senator to say that one of the charges against the opponents of his bill is that our opposition tended to contract the currency, because under the present system the national banks under certain contingencies send in their bills for redemption.

Mr. ALDRICH. They do not send in their own bills for redemption.

Mr. PATTERSON. I understood that they sent in the old bills for redemption.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; they never send in their own bills for redemption.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to know whether I understand the Senator aright or not.

Mr. ALDRICH. No. They never send in their own bills for redemption. This bill proposes to adopt the same policy, as the Senator from Colorado must know, that Congress has adopted in relation to the silver certificates. Suppose that all the silver certificates taken in in the ordinary course of business of the country and presented to the Treasury should be canceled and destroyed. What would happen? You would have an absolute and rapid contraction of the currency. Congress has provided very properly and very wisely, I think, that when these notes are received and redeemed they shall be reissued, and they are paid out by the Treasury in the ordinary course of business.

Now, this bill applies the same rule to national-bank notes and enables the Department to return them to business channels to vivify the circulation and the business of the county by an entirely natural and by an entirely safe process.

Mr. PATTERSON. Does the Senator from Rhode Island contend that national-bank notes when at present received by the Government in the usual and ordinary course of business are destroyed and not paid out again by the Government in any way?

Mr. ALDRICH. They are not destroyed.

Mr. PATTERSON. They are not destroyed?

Mr. ALDRICH. Of course not.

Mr. PATTERSON. They are really kept in circulation?

Mr. ALDRICH. Some of them are. But the great mass that are sent by other banks to the Treasury for redemption——

Mr. PATTERSON. I know.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Government receives a great many national-bank notes in the usual and ordinary course of business not simply for redemption. That class of bank notes is paid out again.

Mr. ALDRICH. As a matter of fact, that is not so. The notes that are received for internal-revenue receipts in different parts of the country are deposited in a United States depository and the money is transferred by check and not by the use of money.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is right. So the money is kept in circulation.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not talking about that money at all.

Mr. PATTERSON. And I understand that the provision of the Senator's bill relates to money received in the usual and ordinary course of business.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; it does not. It goes further than that. It refers to all the money that is received in the Treasury, as the Senator will see if he will look at the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. I mean section 3, upon which the Senator was placing so much stress a while ago.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is exactly what I now refer to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have a copy of the bill, and I think I can demonstrate very clearly that that is the money section 3 refers to.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will read the section, it will not need any explanation of the results and the effect. I think the Senator can not have read the bill.

Now, Mr. President, there is throughout the United States——

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask the Senator to yield just one moment to see whether he is correct or I am correct upon that proposition.

Section 3 provides:

That section 3 of the act approved June 20, 1874, entitled "An act fixing the amount of United States notes, providing for a redistribution of the national-bank currency, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the following proviso:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, retain in the general fund of the Treasury national-bank notes received in the ordinary course of business or presented to the Treasurer of the United States as hereinbefore provided, and pay out such of them as may be fit for circulation for any of the obligations of the Government, excepting only the principal and interest of the public debt."

Mr. ALDRICH. What does the Senator understand to be the meaning of the words "presented to the Treasurer of the United States as hereinbefore provided?"

Mr. PATTERSON. I understand that the meaning of the section 3 is just what it says.

Mr. ALDRICH. What do those words mean?

Mr. PATTERSON. That there shall be retained in the general Treasury national-bank notes arising in the ordinary course of business.

Mr. ALDRICH. "Or presented."

Mr. PATTERSON. "Or presented to the Treasurer of the United States." There is not a word said about redemption. He is to pay them out again if fit for circulation.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator had read the section without this amendment, he would have seen that the only presentation at the Treasury is for the purpose of redemption. All these notes so presented can be retained in the Treasury or paid out as other money. The Senator from Colorado has not carefully studied these provisions of the bill evidently.

Now, another word. There is undoubtedly in business circles a widespread apprehension of financial disaster or trouble in the future. It was hoped and believed that this bill, which takes a very short step in the direction of relief, would have prevented disaster. Its destruction by your action, as sure as the sun will rise to-morrow morning, will impair confidence in business circles. It will arrest that development which is just as necessary for the States of the Senators from Colorado and Idaho as it is for any section of the country.

In your communities capital and confidence are necessary if you expect to develop your magnificent resources. It is necessary for all sections and all interests that the Government should not longer be permitted by an arbitrary process of contraction to bring about commercial and financial disaster.

It was to secure relief from this danger that I have appealed to you Democrats to allow this bill to pass. It was this purpose which led to the preparation and introduction of the bill. This purpose by your action on yesterday you have defeated, and I only ask that you take the full responsibility for that defeat. The people of the country will certainly hold you responsible for your action.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, a few plain facts plainly stated will show that all of the denunciation by the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] against those who did not see fit to vote for this bill is entirely uncalled for and undeserved. The Senator says that it was the purpose of this bill to prevent financial disaster, and he intimates that we are in danger of that, and that we will be responsible for it by declining to vote for the bill.

The Government of the United States has collected about $33,000,000, or a little over that sum, in eight months, more than its need, or it is collecting about four and a half million dollars a month more than it needs for its current expenses. Three hundred and forty-six million dollars, in round numbers, has been the expense for the present fiscal year. We have collected $379,000,000, or about $33,000,000 and something more than the expenses of the Government. We have collected of customs duties $196,000,000 and from internal revenue $154,000,000.

Now, Mr. President, if we were collecting more than the current expenses of the Government from customs dues there would be some propriety in the claim of the Senator from Rhode Island that there is danger that the failure of this bill will create a surplus and a lock up of money in the Treasury to the extent of a contraction of the currency. If the Secretary of the Treasury desires, he can put every cent of that surplus of $33,000,000 accrued in the last eight months into the banks of this country under the existing law. He has the right to put every dollar of the internal revenue, if he can spare it, into the banks. He is then compelled to draw for current expenses upon that fund to the extent of about $120,000,000. In other words, the customs duties do not sustain the Government in its normal expenses by $120,000,000 a year.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know whether the Senator was in the Chamber when I made the statement which I made in the beginning of this discussion. It was that at certain times of the year, especially in the fall, when the receipts of customs range from one to three, four, or five million dollars, it was absolutely necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury under existing law to take that money and deposit it in the subtreasuries and lock it up where it could not be reached. It is not that in the long run, with the general balances of revenues and receipts, he might not be able, possibly, to use the internal-revenue receipts and deposit in national banks an amount which would be equal to the surplus, but he can not do that at the time and in the manner which is necessary to preserve the public credit.

Mr. TELLER. The internal-revenue collections are now coming in at a rate of about $1,000,000 a day. I do not care when the time is nor what the time is, there is not a time when out of the daily income of the Government the Government can not pay the daily expenses without taking part of that money, as the customs dues do not produce enough. So if the Secretary of the Treasury can not take it out at that particular time when needed, he will always have some on hand that he can take out. If the Secretary sees fit to distinguish at all times in his accounts the moneys collected by customs dues and those collected by internal revenue, he can put the money into circulation by putting in the banks some part of the internal revenue collected whenever he sees fit, and consuming the money received from customs dues.

The claim that has been made on this floor that the money must go into the banks before it goes into the Treasury is not true in law or in fact. The money goes into the Treasury, and it then goes into the banks, and in the eye of the law it is still in the Treasury when it is in the national banks, and it is subject to the control of the Government at any hour.

There has not been any demand for this bill. It was brought here in the last session of this Congress. It was brought here in the last month of the session, and to-day when you are discussing this bill you are discussing a Senate bill that would have no more hopes, when it reaches the other House, of passing than it has of passing the Senate now.

The claim that the business interests of the country are demanding this bill is not sustained as a question of fact. I have not seen or heard of any considerable demand for this measure, nor do I believe that the public interest will suffer in the slightest degree by a failure to pass it. While I have not felt myself justified to pursue the course that some of my associates thought was proper and desirable and demanded, I have been willing that the friends of the bill should vote for it. Yet I will take my part in the responsibility without any hesitation, if the fact that I refused to vote for it defeats the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not want to interrupt the Senator——

Mr. TELLER. You can interrupt me with any proper question.

Mr. ALDRICH. But when the Senator gets through with the discussion of this bill I will then yield the bill to any other public business so far as I can. If the Senator wants to make a speech, as he intimated, upon the Philippine question——

Mr. TELLER. I think I will make some remarks on this bill now, since the Senator has arraigned us for not looking at it through his glasses, and I may take advantage of the occasion, while I am on my feet, to make some other remarks, according to the custom of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator does not think I was trying to escape the range of his discussion.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator knows I would care very little if he tries to limit discussion; and if he believes that he can drive me off the floor by any suggestion of that kind when I want to make a speech, he is mistaken.

Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island charges that on this side of the Chamber there has been obstruction and opposition and that there is a general opposition to banks. I believe I did hear one Senator on this side of the Chamber say that he was opposed to the national-bank system. That is not an indication that everybody else on this side is so opposed, because I can find on the other side of the Chamber Senators who are not in love with this national-bank system. For myself I believe the present bank system needs some revision, but on the whole it is a great deal better, as I said the other day, than anything that is promised by the reformers, at least those who have been tinkering with this business and proposing to handle it for the last five years.

SENATORS FROM DELAWARE.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, I wish to announce the fact that the two Senators-elect from the State of Delaware are present prepared to take the oath of office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senators-elect from the State of Delaware will present themselves at the desk, the Chair will administer the oath of office.

Mr. Ball and Mr. Allee were escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. HANNA, respectively, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to them, they took their seats in the Senate.

SAFE-KEEPING OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 7301) to further provide for the safe-keeping of public moneys, and for other purposes.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. DIETRICH. By request of the War Department, I ask for the adoption of the following resolution.

Mr. LODGE. I shall be obliged to object to the introduction by unanimous consent at this time, because I want to move to take up the Philippine tariff bill when the Senator from Colorado shall have concluded.

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the Senator, if I may be allowed a moment, that when I get through he can move to take up that bill, but I want to assure him that there is no more possibility of passing that bill than there is of passing this measure.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I want to say a few words on the Aldrich bill. I will follow the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which he sends to the desk.

Mr. LODGE. I must object to the introduction of all business until I can have an opportunity to move to take up the Philippine tariff bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts not to object to the two bills that we considered yesterday and which are reported to the Senate and are now in the Senate open to amendment, and which can be disposed of in a few moments.

Mr. LODGE. There will be time enough to take up these bills by unanimous consent. The Philippine tariff bill has been before the Senate—it is a House bill—since the beginning of the session. It is a bill of great importance. I wish to bring it squarely before the Senate, and then if it is to be beaten and not allowed to be passed at this session I want to have that known, and the responsibility may rest where it belongs. I think I have a right, in view of the importance of the bill, to have that done.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CARMACK. I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, I hope a vote can be reached on the Philippine tariff bill. I hope that the Senate will have the opportunity, after a fair debate, to have a vote on that bill. There are a great many amendments to the bill. Indeed, I have one myself which I wish to present, and it probably will lead to some discussion. It is very late in the session to pass a bill of that sort. Still, I should like to have a vote upon that bill at this session of Congress. I think we ought to vote on it. But I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I wish to submit a few remarks in respect to this bill after the Senator from Colorado has concluded, if I can have an opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

Senators will resume their seats and stop conversation in the Chamber.

Mr. TELLER. I do not find any fault with the little demonstration that has been made on the floor of the Senate; I think it is a subject of congratulation. I think Senators are excusable, perhaps, for making some noise. A State which has had no representation on this floor for years succeeds in sending its representatives here under conditions that I think are much more favorable than we had any reason to hope would come from that State, and I felt like the gallery did with the two new Senators walking down the aisle—I felt like clapping my hands. So if they make a little more noise, I am not going to complain about it. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But it must not be continued.

Mr. TELLER. I simply want to congratulate the Senate that Delaware is at last represented in this body. Although the two new Senators do not belong to the political party I do, yet I am delighted to see that State, one of the original thirteen, have its representatives again on this floor.

Now, Mr. President, the charge that is made that we have been obstructing legislation and are opposed to everything, including the general business of the country, is not correct from any standpoint. This side of the Chamber has been making an effort for the last three months, or nearly, to secure a constitutional privilege to the citizens of the United States who have gone from the various States in the Union and made their homes in the great West, or have been born there, or have come from other sections of the world and secured to themselves the rights of American citizenship, which is never complete and never perfect until the citizen of a State, and that can discharge every function that belongs to a citizen of the United States, including that of assisting in the election of a President of the United States and, through his legislature, Senators for this body. He must be able through his representatives to take part in national affairs.

It comes with a bad grace from the Senator from Rhode Island to talk about obstruction in this Chamber; and it comes with an exceedingly bad grace from him or anyone on that side of the Chamber, who has been filibustering for weeks against allowing these three Territories to come into the Union as States under the Constitution, as they have a right to come.

We have listened to the dreary reading and the dreary speeches made on this floor, with no pretense whatever that they were for the purpose of enlightening us, but for the express and avowed purpose of preventing a vote upon the statehood bill. It was not attempted to be concealed, and if the attempt had been made it could not have deceived the smallest infant in the country, because it is so apparent when a Senator takes the floor and repeats his speech for nearly ten days that he is doing it for the purpose of delay.

Not only that, Mr. President, but nearly a million of American citizens, many of them born to that privilege, have been traduced and slandered here as in a quarter of a century of public life I have never heard any class of people, whether born on this soil or in any other land, abused and slandered.

We have been told that away out there on the frontier there are nearly a million men who are not to have citizenship under this Government and who are incapable of self-government. There was not a man on the other side of the Chamber who uttered that slander who did not know that it was a slander when he uttered it.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] says to me that is not fair. It is, Mr. President, for either it indicated an ignorance of the condition there or a failure to tell the truth about it. That million of men, I say, are as capable of self-government and as much entitled to self-government as the nearly million of people in the State of Connecticut.

Mr. President, for almost a half century I have come in contact with these people; I have come in contact with them in times of war and in times of peace; I have come in contact with them in all the phases of business, social, and political life. I say now—and I know something of the people of Connecticut; I know something of the people of other New England States—that they are as capable of self-government, of maintaining peace and order, of protecting the rights of individuals and of property as are the New England people or the New York people or any other class of American citizens.

Mr. President, I was not born on the frontier. As I say, I know something of New England. I came, at least on one side of my family, from New England; I had a New England mother. I know that there is ignorance and vice in New England; I know there is a great foreign population there, exercising the privileges of American citizenship, as they ought to do, who are not the equals of a considerable number of people of that great section of the country which knocked at your door all of this session, and some of whom have been knocking at your door for more than a half century—a people, at least those in New Mexico, who are exercising the rights of self-government, who are denied the fullest and completest rights of American citizenship, to be citizens of a State, and to partcipate in the national affairs of this great nation.

Mr. President, they have contributed to its wealth; they have contributed to its glory. When the war of the rebellion came on and when the Government called for troops, the people of New Mexico sent 6,567 men into the American Army. Many of them had but a short time before come from under Mexican control and were a conquered people, and yet when the call came, they responded with alacrity. Since 1865 those men who then carried your flag and fought your battles have been begging for the privilege of calling themselves citizens of the United States in the fullest and best sense of that term, and the majority on that side of the Chamber have kept those men out, because you knew we had a majority for their admission. They have delayed day after day the current business of this session, postponed bills of importance, and when you had completed your work and proved to this Senate and to the world that you did not mean to let those Territories become States, then you press upon us these measures, which ought to have been considered months and months ago, and complain if we do not accept your version of them, if we do not take what you say we ought to take, and take it upon your suggestion.

Then we hear, as we heard last night, not only on this floor, but in the cloakrooms and elsewhere, that this opposition to a bill that has been here but a few days, a mere matter of policy, was such that it would bring a cloture rule to this Senate. Very well; if we had had a cloture at the commencement of this session, we should have had three more States in the Union. It may be, Mr. President, that we will get a cloture rule; but when we do we shall get justice for the people of those Territories, which has been denied by Congress year after year and emphasized by the Republican majority of this Congress.

You have belied your party platform and your party professions. It is pertinent and proper to inquire why you have done that. You said you were doing it because you did not think the inhabitants of those Territories were fit for self-government. I have said you were not doing it for that reason; that you were doing it because you did not want those Territories admitted under any condition nor at any time. Has it become the policy of the Republican party that no more States are to be admitted; that Territories are to always remain in that condition?

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. MASON. The Senator must remember that all the Republicans were not opposed to the statehood measure. There were quite a number of us on this side of the Chamber, who like to designate ourselves as the best thought, who were not opposed to the statehood measure.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, that is true, and to some extent we heard from those friends of admission on that side of the Chamber, but not to any large extent. We did not hear any very loud clamor for it.

Mr. SPOONER. We did not hear much from your side.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Wisconsin says he did not hear much from this side. No, Mr. President, he did not. We knew that the purpose of the opposition was to delay this bill until it was too late to pass it, just as they have done. You have accomplished your purpose. You reached the point that you started for when you could say to us, "Will you longer persist in this useless effort to secure the admission of those States at the expense of every great interest, the appropriation bills and all those important matters which ought to be taken up and considered?" Then a majority in this Chamber were compelled, in the interest of the public business, to surrender to the minority.

Mr. MASON. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that while he did not hear any loud debate—and in that other Senators will bear me out—it was the policy of the friends of the statehood bill to permit the filibusterers to do all the talking and we were to keep silent and vote.

Mr. TELLER. So it was on our side.

Mr. MASON. I want the Senator to understand that because we did not make loud speeches is no evidence that we have betrayed our trust or broken our platform promises; but the best thought on this side of the Chamber was considerably shocked when we found that the majority had gone off worshiping strange gods, following in the paths of filibusterers. I realize the situation we are now in, and I hope the Senator will excuse me for interrupting him.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the statement made by the Senator from Illinois is correct, and yet the majority on that side of the Chamber engaged in what is now denounced as a very un-Senatorial proceeding.

Mr. President, I have reached the point where I want to inquire as to the reason of the opposition to the admission into the Union as States of the people in these Western Territories. I listened to the long speech, against the bill, of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who had made a brief tour through that country, and when you have simmered it down, when you get at the meat of it, the principal objection he made was the vast distance between one place and another. He said that "we stopped at a certain place, and when we got there we had to go 80 miles to another place." I can understand how that might have affected the Senator from Vermont, because if he had gone 80 miles from his residence in Vermont in any direction he would have gotten into some other bailiwick, gotten into some other State. He would not have been at home. But in that great section of the country we have States that are bigger than all New England. This Territory of New Mexico has almost twice as much area as all of New England, with her twelve Senators on this floor. New Mexico may not have the population of New England, but it has a population greater than that of the States of some of the Senators who sit on this floor.

You may take the Territory of Oklahoma. That Territory is to be kept out of the Union. Does anybody know when Oklahoma is to be admitted as a State? I wish somebody would tell me. It may be, Mr. President, at the next Congress the effort will be made; but I suppose the same obstructive tactics will be adopted then that have been adopted here during this session.

We have a great Territory up in the Northwest called Alaska. The condition there for many years has been absolutely disgraceful to this nation. We have been unable to secure for the people up there such a government as they are entitled to have. I am not now speaking of the Indians, but I am speaking of the men who have gone to Alaska from their New England homes or their New York homes or their Western homes to settle up that country and to develop its great wealth.

Alaska has been pouring into the Treasury of the nation and into the lap of commerce a quantity of gold so vast that if the same thing had occurred a hundred years ago it would have changed the entire character of the commerce of mankind. It has had its influence upon the world, and there are vast quantities of gold up there yet to be extracted, and there is a place for homes, not in a climate as genial as that of Colorado, or New Mexico, or Arizona, or Oklahoma, or Iowa, or Illinois, but there is room for a million Americans to practice agriculture, as well as can be done in Denmark and Norway.

Mr. President, the best information that can be got from that country is that they have great valleys there, bigger than all New England, and every acre in those valleys is agricultural land. If the winters are long, they are mild, and though the summers are short, they are bright; and people can live there and raise wheat, oats, barley, and cattle, and yet we have denied to those people a decent government. They sent down here a representative who is here now, a gentleman who has begged to have some legislation enacted that would give those people a Delegate on the floor of the House of Representatives, such as for a hundred years always has been given to the frontiersmen who were not sufficient in numbers to become a State—that was denied to them by this Congress, and it was denied to them because it was said, "We do not intend to do anything with Alaska which will ever indicate that she may ever become a State."

Why are you afraid to make Alaska a State? Why are you afraid to make New Mexico a State? Why are you afraid to make a State of Oklahoma with its half million of free-born Americans? Do you think that they will send here to this Chamber men that ought not to come here? You do not know the people of that section if you anticipate that. It would not be possible for any wealthy man to hold up that section of the country and buy a seat in this Senate; or if he should fail, then to hold the State in such a condition that it has no representative here for years. The chances are a hundred to one that when they send their Representatives to this body and to the House of Representatives they will select men born east of the Allegheny Mountains; or if they were born west of them, will be found to be the peers in everything that goes to make American manhood of the men who come from any other section of this our common country.

I have heard the inquiry put again and again: Why is it that these Territories are not admitted into the Union? Why is it that the Republican party, by a majority in this Chamber, belies its last platform and its platforms made many, many years ago? I am not going to read them, for they have been read here. Why is it? It is because you are afraid of the power of the West in this body. That is the plain English of it. The man is a fool who has sat here during this session and does not know it, and he is a coward if he knows it and is not willing to declare it. You are afraid of that power.

I heard in this Chamber a distinguished Senator from a great State declare that the inequality of representation in this body was getting so burdensome by the admission of Western States—he did not say that he would justify revolution, but he said if it was continued there would be a revolution.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement in that connection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DEPEW in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. QUAY. I merely rose to request the Senator from Colorado to exclude Pennsylvania from his remarks as to the Eastern States being afraid of the West. We in Pennsylvania are not afraid of the West. The greatest American and Republican State in the Union fears not the West nor any section and has welcomed every new State to the Union as she would welcome Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Arizona.

Mr. TELLER. The second greatest State in the Union has had representatives on this floor who have stood every hour for the admission of these Territories. The Senator who has just taken his seat has risen late and early and urged upon this Senate, with a zeal that I have rarely seen manifested in any interest, that we should be permitted to vote on the question of the admission of these Territories as States.

Mr. GALLINGER rose.

Mr. TELLER. I will come to the Senator from New England in a minute. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope the Senator from Colorado will permit me.

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wanted to say that one of the things that I have been somewhat proud of has been that during twelve years' service here I have voted with the great West on almost every question that has concerned that part of the country. I think there has not been an exception to that rule in all great matters; and one of the greatest compliments that ever was paid to me was at a gathering in a Western State, when I was denominated an Eastern man with Western ideas. I hoped the Senator would not overlook me entirely in his characterization of New England. [Laughter.]

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I am glad to have given the Senator from New Hampshire an opportunity to say what he has said, but I was just coming to the very astonishing fact that of the twelve New England Senators representing small States, only one man could be found who was in favor of the admission of these Territories; and I was about to remark that this contest had been carried on practically by New Englanders and by the smaller States. So I think that perhaps not only is there some fear in the great States that they may be outvoted in this body by the number of small States, but I am inclined to think that our New England friends feel that in the course of time New England may lose the supremacy that she has had in this body. Her twelve Senators will be insignificant in number compared with a membership in the Senate of 96.

But I want to say that after long service in this body and in an office that brought me in contact with New England people, they are the most forceful men on the continent, and I want to tell them that every one of our Western States is full of their best young men, and old men, too, for that matter. In the State that I in part represent on this floor New England has a great contingent. Since we became a State there is not a New England State that has not furnished us some officials.

I came into this Senate twenty-six years ago last December. New England had then, as it has now, a comparatively small population—less than that of Pennsylvania, very much less than that of the State of New York, and very little more than the State of Illinois.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MASON. As the Senator knows, I am in charge of a very meritorious bill which I should like the Senate to take up. It is a bill in which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] is interested, and with the permission of the Senator from Colorado I should like to call it up.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I renew my statement that I shall object to all other business until the Senator from Colorado has concluded, and then I desire to make my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Philippine tariff bill.

Mr. TELLER. I came here at the close of the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress. There is not now a man on this floor from New England who was here then, so what I say will not be attributed to any desire to flatter anybody, but to state a plain fact. New England was in absolute control of this body, not because of the number of its representatives, for it only had 12 Senators here, but largely because they were entitled to the control which men of such character will get everywhere and at all times. Their States were small, their population small, but their wealth in comparison with the great wealth of the country was insignificant, and yet they made themselves felt in all legislation as no other 12 men ever did in this body. Other States had great men here who exercised great influence and control, but New England then, as now, was practically a solid phalanx for everything that struck New England as the proper thing to do, whether it was right or whether it was wrong. New England was then pretty generally voting solidly in one direction, and they accomplished much.

New England has no reason to be afraid of the West. The Senator from Pennsylvania tells us that the great State of Pennsylvania is not afraid of the West. I am afraid that can not be said of the great State in which I was born and educated and which I did not leave for the West until I was a man full grown and prepared for the duties of life; because I have heard from that State a threat of revolution, a threat to destroy that constitutional safeguard which the fathers of the Republic put around all the smaller States.

I was somewhat irritated when I heard that coming from the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. I had a different feeling when, inside of the closed doors, I heard a Senator from another State, and a State far east of the Alleghenies, utter the same threat or the same prophecy. In the one case I felt that it was probably a thoughtless expression perhaps, and yet I felt that it deserved rebuke; and in my feeble way I attempted, at least, to put in my protest against a suggestion of that kind; but when I heard it a second time from an Eastern Senator, I made up my mind that this virus had poisoned the hearts and heads of some of our New England and Eastern friends; that there is danger that this idea that the State of New York, with her seven and a half million people, is entitled to greater power in this Senate than the States having less than half a million people, and yet are here by virtue of the Constitution of the United States; by the very theory upon which this Government was ordained and upon which it can only be maintained, which is that the States are sovereign, except so far as they have laid down their sovereignty for the general good, and that the maintenance of the equality of the States is essential to the maintenance of a republican form of government on this continent.

What would be the condition if you gave to New York in this Senate a vote corresponding to her population? The Senators who sit here from New Hampshire and Vermont would find that there were 20 Senators sitting here from New York, each of those Senators casting an equal vote with them; and what would then become of the theory that this Senate represents the States in their sovereignty?

We have been told again and again that this principle is so essential and so important to the American people and to the preservation of American institutions that we must continue to elect our Senators by the legislature, and if we attempt to elect them by the popular vote of the State they will cease in some degree to represent the sovereignty of the State. I do not believe anybody who talks about the inequality of the States and who makes a threat here that that time will come when the States on this floor will not be equal in representation have considered what that means. We say that every American citizen, when their numbers in a community are sufficient, shall take part in all the affairs of this Government and have a right to have Senators sit in this Chamber, and because we assert that Senators say we will have a revolution. When you deny the constitutional right of small States you wipe out the State lines, and you can only do it by war, and if you think that the people of the great West, whether they be great or small in numbers, will submit to that you do not know where they were born or from whence they came or what they have been educated to believe. This destruction of the equality of States means war, bloody war, Mr. President. We are not afraid of that. We do not believe there is any general sentiment of that character in the United States; but I say it is beneath the dignity of this body for any man to utter here a thought in that direction.

Mr. President, the great West has not yet the population of the congested East, but we have opened these great States for the New Englander and the New Yorker and the Pennsylvanian to come there and make his home, if he sees fit. Who are the people of the West? Who are the people of the State of Colorado? Where do they come from? We have a population containing more people born on the American soil in proportion to our population than any of your Eastern States. We have made a home for the best thought, as the Senator from Illinois says, of the people of every State of the Union. What you can find in Colorado you can find in every other State of the West, and you can find it in New Mexico and Arizona—perhaps not in so great a degree there, from the fact that in that section of the country there were some native inhabitants who were denied the privileges and the opportunities which the people born on the Atlantic coast possess. And yet, Mr. President, after the debate, the dreary debate, the delaying debate on this floor for weeks and weeks, Senators on the other side tell us: "If you persist in your efforts to defeat bad measures, you will have cloture." Mr. President, most of the time I have been in this body I have been in it as a member of the dominant party. I am now, as I have ever been, an advocate of the freest possible discussion in this body. I know you can not make a cloture rule and apply it here which will not practically destroy the high character of this body.

I alluded in the Senate—perhaps it was in executive session, and I ought not to refer to it—to the fact that I have been one of those who believe that of all the wise things our ancestors did the wisest in connection with this great Union of ours was when they provided this body, and provided it upon the ground and in the manner they did. This Government could not have been organized except by the concession of the smaller States. Rhode Island, with its sixty-odd thousand people, was not going to surrender to Virginia, with her 700,000. New York, with her 300,000 or thereabouts, would not surrender to Virginia, with her 700,000. Virginia was the great State, the populous State, then. The New England States and New York were comparatively small in their population, and when it was attempted to organize the Government after the war with these different States taking part, it was provided carefully that no State should have exceeding seven members in Congress, and no State should have less than two. Why? New York feared the undue influence of Virginia. Rhode Island feared the undue influence of the great population of New York. I have here, and shall present it if I can lay my hands upon it, a table giving the population at that time. [After a pause.] I can do it by the census reports.

Mr. LODGE. It is in the manual. I was going to ask the Senator if he was not mistaken, and I find that he was. Virginia was the largest State. Pennsylvania was next, with 434,373, and Massachusetts next with 378,787.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, Massachusetts was greater than New York. I agree to that. I remember it now. I stated the Articles of the Confederation correctly, I think, although I stated them from memory when I said they provided that there should be not less than two nor more than seven members. Virginia was the greatest State in population; then came Pennsylvania; then came Massachusetts, and then came New York. I have the list here somewhere. I have mislaid it. I can read it from this volume. [A pause.] I find I can not give it from this; but I have a memorandum showing the population at the time of the organization of the Confederacy, but I can not put my hand on it. I will call attention to the fact that in 1790, soon after the adoption of the Constitution, the North Atlantic States, consisting then of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, had a total population of a little less than 2,000,000.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] hands me the manual showing the dates of the ratification of the Constitution by the thirteen original States, their population, and area. I have the same thing, but I have mislaid it. When I started I did not expect to talk on this question or to discuss it.

When Delaware ratified the Constitution she had 59,096 people; Pennsylvania had 434,373; New Jersey had 184,139; Georgia had 82,548; Connecticut, 238,141; Massachusetts, 378,787; Maryland had 319,728; South Carolina, 249,073; New Hampshire, 141,899; while Virginia had 747,610. New York had 340,120 and North Carolina 393,751. It will be seen that New York had less population than North Carolina at the time the Constitution was adopted, or at the time it was ratified, which was shortly afterwards. It was practically the adoption of it immediately after the convention adjourned. Rhode Island had 68,825; Vermont, when she was admitted to the Union, had 85,539. I wish to call the attention of the junior Senator from Vermont to the fact that 85,539 was considered ample to take the State of Vermont into the Union, although she had an area of 9,565 square miles.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Does the Senator from Colorado overlook the fact of Vermont's service in the Revolution, and that while she was not one of the thirteen colonies, her place in the number of States that achieved their independence was substantially the same as that of the others?

Mr. TELLER. I have not overlooked that. I want to state to the Senator from Vermont that I am one of the thousands and tens of thousands in the West who claim a Vermont ancestry. No, Mr. President, I am not likely to overlook the services of Vermont. Who forgets Ethan Allen and the Green Mountain boys who ever read anything in the Revolutionary history of this country? But, if I had been likely to forget that, I have seen too many Vermonters in my forty years in the West.

The other day I had occasion to pick up the Directory of some years ago, as long ago as when I first came into the Senate, and I found in the list of Congressmen from the great West that this one and that one and the other had been born in the State of Vermont. Sometimes it appeared that half the delegation from some of the Western States had birth in the State of Vermont. If they did not boast of birth in Vermont, they could frequently boast of a parentage which came from there or from some other Eastern State.

If anybody think that because we live in the extreme West we have not high regard for the people in the East, amongst whom our fathers and mothers were born, bred, and lived, he is mistaken. I have as much attachment for the people of the State of New York, where, as I said before, I was born and educated, as I have for any people in the world, and I have for Massachusetts and for all the New England States the same regard, because everywhere in that country I can find relatives, people of my own blood. And that is the difference between you and us. You think, because your sons have gone West, you can deny to them the rights they would exact and maintain, if necessary, by force of arms if they remained in the East. No New England man or New York man has ever lessened his manhood by going West. He has come in contact with the conflicts and activities of life, which, if they have not made him better, have not made him weaker or more cowardly.

When the great war came on, among the men who carried the flag from the West and the Northwest there were hundreds and thousands of men born east of the Allegheny Mountains, and we put into the field more men in proportion to our population than even the great States of the East did, with all its wealth, and on every battlefield the flower of the West maintained the reputation of American citizens for courage and devotion to duty.

Mr. President, numbers do not always make merit. I remember the old fable about the fox and the lion. The fox boasted and said she had a number of whelps, and she said to the lion, "You have only one." The lion replied, "But that is a lion."

Numbers do not always count. In forming States you must have some reference to numbers. Why? Because if the number is too small, the people will not be able to bear the burden of statehood. Do any of you dare to say here that you do not believe Arizona, New Mexico, or Oklahoma can properly perform the duties of statehood by reason of lack of means? Oh, no; you will not say that, but you did say an infinitely meaner thing when you said they did not have the character out of which to make States.

Mr. President, I have listened to a great many speeches made in the Senate, and sometimes I have felt hurt at the methods pursued for the purpose of securing results, but I have never in my public service felt so outraged as I felt at the traducing and slandering of the people of these three Territories who are demanding statehood at our hands. They will be States some day in spite of the fear that there may be a preponderance of votes in this body against some other section of country. You can not keep them out always. You may belie your platforms and you may refuse to do your duty, but ultimately and not very far ahead in the future these people will be given the full rights of American citizens, and why should they not?

Senators have been talking about the poverty of those Territories. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that Arizona has in twenty years mined and put into circulation $34,000,000 of gold and $62,000,000 of silver, or practically $100,000,000. New Mexico, not professing to be a mining State, but an agricultural State, has put into circulation $29,000,000 of silver and $12,000,000 of gold. Where has come the great metallic wealth of this country? It has come from west of the Allegheny Mountains; yea, west of the Missouri. It has come from the Rocky Mountains and the mountain region and the new States of the great West and Northwest. Since 1848 the United States has produced two thousand three hundred and sixty millions of gold, and all but twenty-four millions of that came from the region of country denominated the extreme West. In addition to that, we have produced and sent out one thousand six hundred and fifty millions of silver. I have taken these figures from the Government reports.

Mr. President, I want to say in conclusion that if the Senators who have justified themselves in their long opposition to the statehood bill are satisfied, I can not blame them, and I bring no accusation whatever against them. As I said here before, while the unwritten law of the Senate is that the majority shall be allowed to vote when it is ready, after fair debate, yet there will doubtless be times when the judgment of a Senator will lead him to go beyond that. But I want to say that if you are justified under these conditions in keeping those people out, you need not complain if we think that under conditions of another character we are justified in insisting that a financial bill that comes here or a revenue bill or any other bill shall have the attention of the Senate more than can be accorded to it in the hurry incident to the last days of an expiring Congress.

Mr. President, I said—and I want to repeat it before I sit down—that this bill is probably dead. The bill with which it is proposed to follow it will meet the same fate, as a matter of course and a matter of right.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Would it not facilitate public business and be a good thing generally if the Senators on the other side would look over the Calendar and make a list of the measures we may pass?

Mr. TELLER. We have not had any chance to do that.

Mr. SPOONER. On every bill that comes up, we are notified by somebody that it can not pass.

Mr. TELLER. We have not had any chance to do that. We do not take charge of the Calendar. But it would expedite things if the Senator and his associates would bring before the Senate in the concluding days and hours measures that we had considered before and had an opportunity to pass or an opportunity to discuss. I think if you bring the statehood bill in now the Senate is sufficiently instructed upon it to vote. But you say, "We will not allow it to pass;" and when we say that an insignificant measure of no particular importance can not pass, then you say, "Oh, that is filibustering." How did you get the divine right to filibuster? Where did you get it? Is it because you are in the majority?

Mr. SPOONER. I got it some years ago, when the Senator from Colorado and some Senators on the other side filibustered.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to say that whenever a bill was brought up some Senator on this side refused to let it be passed. I should like for the Senator to specify any Senator on the Democratic side who refused to permit a vote or did anything to prevent a vote on the statehood bill.

Mr. SPOONER. The trouble with the Senator from Mississippi is that he did not understand what I said; and I excuse him for that.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not care to further discuss this question. But I felt inclined at least to say that those who had been filibustering for weeks should not throw any brickbats at us, who have not been filibustering at least more than a few hours if at all. When the Senator says that there are measures I objected to, that is true, but there is a measure here that we have made every effort to get up. There is a bill which came to us from the other body and went to the Committee on the Judiciary. As I am not a member of that committee I can say that it is one well qualified to deal with this great question, and I recognize myself that this trust question is one of the greatest questions which has ever been presented to the American people.

I am not one of those who think it can be lightly dealt with. I am not one of those who think that there are not grave dangers in any effort we may make to control these great combinations and organizations. I think by the wit of man we might get something by which we can minimize their evil influence, if evil influence they have, as I think they have, by some measure, and not injure and destroy the beneficial influences that come from these great organizations.

But, Mr. President, twice we have endeavored to supplant one of these inconsequential and absolutely worthless bills, you might say, compared with the great question involved in that bill, after it had the careful attention of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, after they had reported it here with amendments, and when we attempted to get it up we were met with almost a solid Republican party that the bill was not to be considered.

Mr. President, why is that? If there could be any excuse for it at all, and none has been given, it is because you think there is not time to deal with this great question. That is what we think, when we say to you that certain measures in the last expiring hours of Congress can not receive sufficient consideration to bring them to a vote, because there is not time, whether it be the financial bill fathered by the Senator from Rhode Island, or the Philippine tariff bill fathered by the junior Senator from Massachusetts, it does not make any difference. There is not time to consider either one of them. But here is a bill that has had, as Brother MASON said, the best thought of the House, because it got practically, I believe, the votes of all of that body. It has had the best thought of the Senate Judiciary Committee. I do not know whether it was a unanimous report or not, but I know that it brought with it the chairman's approval, and that ought to weigh much in this body.

Now, Mr. President, we could take that bill up in the expiring hours, and if we were not able to get through with it we could at least show to the people a determination to deal with it in a conservative and careful manner.

Mr. President, there has been no subject in the public eye for many years that has attracted so much attention as the question of the management of trusts. It has brought to it the very best thought of the best minds of this country and the best efforts of the best men in it, whether it be in the House or in the Senate or out of both. The President of the United States has considered it great enough and important enough, as he has traversed this country, to make speeches on it from one end to the other, and he has addressed great crowds of people. I have on my desk a speech he recently made on this subject in which he promised to the American people that there should be legislation practically on this subject. I do not hold him responsible for its failure. I think he has done all that he ought to do, and I am sometimes afraid he has done more than he ought to do to secure that end.

But I do say, Mr. President, that if the Republican party, as a party, want to deal with these trusts, they have had two years to do it, and they have failed to do it, or if they have done it they have failed at the last expiring hours to enact this measure into a law.

That is presented to us as a proper measure; and as it had the support of every Republican except two or three in the House, and all the Democrats except about an equal number, it comes here accredited in such a way that it ought to have at least the right to come up and be considered; and that has been denied it by the Republican majority in the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, I hope we shall hear less hereafter of obstruction on this side of the Chamber. We may not let you pick out all the bills you want to pass, but if you will take bills of great interest like that measure, you will find us with you, and we will do what we can, if it is not now perfect, to make it perfect, and no one on this side of the Chamber will offer any obstruction to it. That is what you are afraid of, and why you do not take it up is because of the fear that we will not obstruct it on this side, and you dare not do it on your side.

Mr. President, I am going to leave the floor to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

APPENDIX.

In Senate, Tuesday, March 3, 1903.

SAFE-KEEPING OF PUBLIC MONEY.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent to add to some remarks I made to-day tables which I prepared and which I omitted to put in. I will put them at the end my of remarks. They are statistics of population, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that certain statistics, etc., may be inserted by him in his speech of to-day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Area of Territories as compared with New England States.

	Square miles.
Arizona	113,020
Indian Territory	31,400
New Mexico	122,580
Oklahoma	39,030
Total	306,030
Connecticut	4,990
Maine	33,040
Massachusetts	8,315
New Hampshire	9,305
Rhode Island	1,250
Vermont	9,565
Total New England	66,465

Hence it will be seen that New Mexico contains 8,945 square miles more than all the New England States with New York combined.

And Arizona, with her 113,020 square miles, has 1,340 more square miles than all the New England States and Pennsylvania combined.

And that the four Territories—Arizona, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, and New Mexico—containing 305,030 square miles, are larger than the thirteen original States in the Union by 7,400 square miles.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15702) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 8, 1902.

Mr. TELLER. Can the Senator do that when I had the floor and yielded to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. LODGE. The floor can not be yielded by one Senator to another when he gets through.

Mr. TELLER. I did not expect to do that, but the Senator from West Virginia gave notice that he expected to take the floor on the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. LODGE. I only want to get the bill up. I have no desire to cut off the Senator from West Virginia. He can make his speech on the Philippine tariff bill.

Mr. ELKINS. I will only take a few minutes, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. LODGE. Let me get up the Philippine tariff bill. I have been here all day for that purpose.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I wish to make an inquiry. If the bill before the Senate is to be abandoned, I want to abandon my purpose to speak on it. If not, I wish to hold the floor, because I am entitled to the floor while the bill is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts is agreed to, the pending bill is displaced as the unfinished business.

Mr. LODGE. My motion will displace the pending bill, and it is my intention to displace it.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I well understood that the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts would displace the bill, but I wanted to know whether there would be any further discussion on the bill which has been under consideration.

Mr. LODGE. I understood from the Senator from Rhode Island that there would not be. He sent me a message to that effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves——

Mr. ELKINS. I shall want to debate the motion.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can not debate the motion. It is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from West Virginia when the motion is determined.

Mr. ELKINS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15702) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 8, 1902.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Philippines with amendments.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, the bill which has just been under consideration is to my mind a most righteous one, and I regret exceedingly in the public interest that it has failed. I regard the failure of the bill as a calamity to the country. Indeed, I fear before the year closes the failure to pass it will prove most disastrous to the business and financial interests of the country.

Next fall we will be visited with the usual stringency in the money market and business will not know where to turn its head to find relief, except to the Treasury, where the people's money, which should be in circulation, will be locked up. This bill afforded the ways and means to avoid the recurring difficulties in the financial world.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I rise to an inquiry. The Senator is not talking about the bill under consideration. I understand him to be addressing himself to the currency bill.

Mr. ELKINS. I am coming to the Philippine tariff bill. To confine a Senator strictly to the question under discussion would be against the traditions of the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. The currency bill, I understand, is not any longer under consideration.

Mr. ELKINS. If the Senator will indulge me I will very soon reach in my remarks the Philippine bill.

Mr. FORAKER. What I want to say is that it is getting late in the day, and this is the last day of the session. Almost every Senator here has business in his charge which he wants to bring before the Senate. I rose for the purpose of appealing to Senators to remember that, and let us from this time on try to accommodate each other, and where there is no bill before the Senate let us not discuss one, but address ourselves to the business under consideration. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will not protract his remarks unless they are addressed to the bill under consideration.

Mr. ELKINS. I am obliged to the Senator from Ohio. I have not spoken for two or three days, and I think I have listened to him quite often with pleasure, as I always do.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to say in answer to that, and the records of this body will bear me out, that I have not spoken at all. I have risen a number of times, because I had bills in charge about which I had to say something, but I do not think I have occupied the time of the Chamber three minutes at any one time during the last week, and then I have taken that much time only because I was interrupted.

Mr. ELKINS. I was stating my conception of the disaster that would follow the failure of the passage of the currency bill. It seems to me that no Senator should be opposed to some method by which the money locked up in the Treasury, from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 and sometimes $200,000,000, should not remain there and be taken from the channels of commerce and circulation, where it is most needed. This bill will restore to the people for their use in business the money that belongs to them and which was taken from them by taxation.

Mr. President, this bill must fail, not so much because Senators are opposed to it, but because the statehood bill favored by a majority of the Senate has been defeated by filibustering.

Next in importance to this bill is the Philippine tariff bill, urged by the President of the United States, I believe, in two messages on behalf of the Filipinos, who are now suffering great depression in trade and business for the want of such a bill. According to the notice given from the other side of this Chamber, it must fail also, and largely because a majority of the Senate was not allowed a vote on the statehood bill. The Philippine tariff bill, brought forward just now by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], is not only urged upon the attention of Congress by the President, who earnestly favors it, but by the governor-general of the Philippines, Judge Taft, and alongside these two bills, most important bills, lie buried two important treaties and other measures of great public interest.

Mr. President, there is a reason for all this. To what source can we trace the failure of this most important legislation? The Republican party is in power and primarily is responsible for all legislation in this Congress and it will be held responsible by the country. I regret to state that in my judgment the Republican party is responsible for this condition of affairs, which is so unfortunate for it and for the country at this time.

It will be remembered, last June unanimous consent was given to bring up in the Senate on the third day of this session the statehood bill for consideration—but not to be talked or filibustered to death. The understanding was in the mind of every Senator that the bill would, after fair discussion, be voted; no one dreamed that an effort would be made to avoid a vote and kill it in this way. Early in the beginning of this session a majority of the Republican members of the Senate determined to defeat the statehood bill, and to this end adopted a programme which involved, first, a violation of the pledges made in the platform of their party in three national conventions binding the party to admit the Territories of Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Arizona as States into the Union.

Mr. President, this was a great mistake and a great wrong. One that will come up to plague us hereafter. A political party can no more afford to violate its promises and pledges than an individual. But one mistake always leads to another. In order to sustain and maintain this violation of pledges made in their national conventions a filibuster was organized by a majority of Republican Senators to defeat the statehood bill voted for by every Republican in the House. This filibuster was carried on successfully for fourteen weeks against the majority of the Senate. I regret to say it is the first time in the history of the Republican party in the Senate under any leadership that the Republican party resorted to filibustering. We always left that for the Democratic party. It will always stand to the credit of 16 Republican Senators that they kept the pledges of their party in national convention, favored the statehood bill, and refused to join in filibustering.

Mr. President, it was this filibuster and defeat of the bill of the majority of the Senate that has led to the death of the important bills I have mentioned, and the Republicans can not avoid this responsibility. It rests upon them and upon no one else. At any hour or day the Republicans of the Senate by allowing a vote on the statehood bill could have insured the passage of all these measures. They held the key that could have unlocked the door and freed us from all difficulties.

The organization of this filibustering movement, which is an offensive term I know, was begun and inspired largely by two States—Maine and Rhode Island, both small States; I mean the Senators for these States, one a distinguished leader on this floor, who had charge of the currency bill that is so near his heart, and now about dead; had he looked a little further into the future he might have seen the death of his bill when he was digging the grave of this statehood bill so assiduously day and night on this floor. We owe this unfortunate situation largely to the small States, and chiefly to two Senators of great ability and long service in the Senate.

Every time there was a spadeful of dirt put on top of the statehood bill there was another put on the Aldrich bill, on the Philippine bill, and on the treaties, and this is the result Republicans have brought about by not keeping the pledges of their party made in national convention, by resorting to filibustering for the first time in the history of the party and against all the traditions of Republicans in the Senate. This is a bad precedent for a great party that has such an honorable record in the Senate for bowing to the will of the majority after full, free, and ample discussion.

I feel humiliated that the great Republican party has found it necessary to establish this precedent, not only because it is bad in itself, but because it will forever stand and be cited by our opponents to plague and confuse us. This will not be the last of this precedent. It mars the history of a great party and dwarfs it. Badness begets badness, even in politics. This filibustering, this unholy precedent, the first in our history after forty years, was left to 38 Republicans of this Senate to establish. Mr. President, I feel obliged to make this statement in behalf of the majority of the Senate; and I am not ashamed to be with Democrats when they are attempting to help us keep pledges we made as a party in national convention and bring into this Union great States and to give people liberty and full citizenship that has been denied them for so many long years.

Mr. President, I make these few remarks that history may be written just as it happened and just as it occurred, and in justice to 16 Republican Senators who have tried to keep the pledged faith of their party and have for twelve weeks set their faces against filibustering and adhered to the traditions of their party.

The majority of a Republican Senate is responsible for these disasters that have overtaken the Republican party in the closing hours of this Senate and for the failure of the currency and other bills. A broader and wiser leadership would early in the session have brought the Republican party to a better understanding between its members. There was a chance of a just and honorable compromise, but the Senator in charge of the bill turned a deaf ear to all advances in this direction.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, no one can regret more than I the bringing up of the pending Philippine tariff bill on this the last day of the session. A bill for the reduction of the Philippine tariff was considered in the last session of Congress for no less than five weeks. The subject is thoroughly understood. There is no room for any great amount of discussion, for the bill simply provides for a further reduction of the duties on Philippine products coming into this country.

Now, Mr. President, we are responsible for those islands. Owing to war, to cattle pestilence, to cholera, and to other afflictions not caused by man, the condition in those islands is bad in the extreme. All we can do is to try and revive business and give the people a chance at prosperity. In the vast volume of the imports of the United States the small amount of increase in sugar and tobacco that would come by the passage of this bill would go unnoticed. But, small as it is to us, it may mean life or death to hundreds of those people. We have given them $3,000,000 in the sundry civil appropriation bill to restock their farms and help them buy cattle and start again; but the greatest charity, the largest humanity, that we can show to them is to open the channels for reviving business.

The currency bill which has passed and become a law will do much in that direction. This bill will supplement that work. I believe that it is a great measure of humanity to those people. It is on that ground that I ask the Senate to vote upon it. The bill has been here since the beginning of the session. Everyone knows its contents; one single page expresses it. It is a mere amendment to the existing law, that was discussed for five weeks, reducing the duties on sugar and tobacco from 75 per cent of the Dingley rates to 50 per cent of the Dingley rates and making other Philippine products free.

Mr. President, I have no desire and no intention of discussing the bill at this time in these closing hours, but I do ask that we may have a vote upon it. It is in no interest of any class of American citizens. It is in the interest simply of those distant people whose fate has been committed to our hands.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will be willing to vote upon it. It is a House bill.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I want to catch exactly the purport of the bill. I have not read it. I understand the present tariff is 75 per cent of the Dingley rate between the Philippine Islands and the United States.

Mr. LODGE. It is.

Mr. CLAY. And this bill proposes to reduce the tariff to 50 per cent on sugar and tobacco and to make other articles free?

Mr. LODGE. That is correct.

Mr. CLAY. I shall vote in favor of it myself.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill and to have it read.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose the committee amendments are first in order.

Mr. CARMACK. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. The committee amendments, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee, have not yet been voted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Tennessee will lie on the table until it is in order to be offered.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I am opposed to this measure. In what I say I speak only for myself, but I hope to convince at least some Senators that my objections are substantial and ought not to be lightly passed over. I hope to convince the Senate that this is a bill which requires a greater measure of discussion than can possibly be given to it in these the closing hours of the session, and that there are interests peculiar to the agricultural section of the country that are sadly menaced by the measure should it become a law.

NOT A HIGH PROTECTIONIST.

Mr. President, I am not a high protectionist; I favor a revision and a reduction of the tariff, but I stand opposed to being used either by a trust or any combination of speculators under the plea of humanity for their selfish purposes. I am not willing, at their command, to place the products of some particular American industry upon the free list or to greatly reduce the duties upon it when the motive is not that of humanity nor a desire to bring relief to any suffering people. But I am especially opposed to doing so when the motive is to fill their already overflowing coffers, while they imperil an industry of unusual importance to the agriculturists of this country.

Mr. President, I do not question the motives of the President; I do not question the motives of the Senator from Massachusetts, and as to Senators generally upon the other side I do not question their motives, but they have in two instances made an attack upon two products peculiar to the agricultural section of our country—upon the tobacco and sugar industries.

THE TOBACCO INDUSTRY.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator is surely aware that the tobacco industry is one of the largest industries in New England.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am aware that Connecticut raises some tobacco.

Mr. LODGE. And all through the Connecticut River Valley in Massachusetts.

Mr. PATTERSON. Why, Mr. President, the agricultural industries of all New England are a mere bagatelle as compared with the agricultural industries of one of the great Western States.

Mr. LODGE. They are probably a mere bagatelle as compared with the great resources of Colorado, but they mean something to us.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is true; but whether the great agricultural interests of New England mean anything to New England statesmen or not, there is one thing discoverable, that their peculiar talent and energy have all been directed to the protection of manufacturing industries, which are largely peculiar to the eastern section of the country, and they are quite indifferent, as a rule, whether the farmer is seriously injured or not. They are willing, perhaps, that the small agricultural productions of their section may suffer with those that are menaced in the great West and the South for the benefit of those interests that are of far greater moment to the people of the section in which they live.

SUGAR AND TOBACCO ATTACKED.

Mr. President, as I was suggesting, these two particular industries have been selected upon two occasions during this session for special attack. The claim is that the only relief that can be brought to Cuba is through the lessening of the tariff upon sugar and tobacco, and the only relief that can be brought to the Philippines is through the lessening of the tariff upon sugar and tobacco, directly affecting the planters of the South and the farmers of the West, when these gentlemen know that there is not a material industry of their own section molested by these efforts to remove whatever protection the tariff affords to the sugar of the Great West.

I say it is peculiar; and yet it is not peculiar when we consider the general attitude assumed by the Republican party toward the agricultural interests of the country whenever they are in anywise in conflict with the manufacturing industries.

SUFFERING IN THE PHILIPPINES.

I am willing to admit that there is serious suffering in the Philippine Islands, and also that the United States is more responsible for this suffering than any other country. There is rinderpest among their cattle, and I call attention to the fact that the condition in which the Philippine Islands now are is more directly the result of our war of conquest and subjugation, and that you could hardly expect any other condition to follow the grave wrongs we perpetrated against persons and property in those islands. Their land has been laid waste; their best men have been slaughtered; famine and pestilence stalk throughout the islands. It is not to be wondered at that there is famine and other sufferings in the islands and that it will require outside help to give their people at least a portion of the relief they are entitled to receive.

This country owes it to the Philippine Islands, by reason of the part it has played in their affairs, to give them succor; but I submit, Mr. President, that the method selected in this measure will not bring them the relief of which they stand in need. The plan suggested will, so far as results are concerned, yield nothing, and when the real facts are understood I do not see how those who advocate this measure upon the score of humanity can look each other in the face without smiling.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Colorado has been telling us how on two occasions we have singled out two American industries for attack—the sugar and tobacco industries. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that instead of those industries being singled out for attack, as he indicates, in this bill they have been singled out for favor, to which I am opposed. This bill provides, as amended by the Senate committee, for absolute free trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands for every product coming from there here except only sugar and tobacco, and upon those two products 50 per cent of the Dingley rates are, according to the committee amendment, to be imposed, to which I am opposed, for I think it ought to be only 25 per cent at the utmost, as provided by the other House. So that the Senator's contention, it seems to me, is not warranted in view of the provision of the bill which he is discussing, for, instead of singling out and discriminating against those articles, they are singled out and especially favored, and I do not know why they should be favored.

FREE TRADE IN SUGAR.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the Senator will content his soul in patience, it will not be many years until he will have absolute free trade if you commence the work now through this bill. I want to point out to the Senator from Ohio what that means to one or two great and growing industries of the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will excuse me for interrupting him, for there is no time at this stage of the session for orderly debate and long protracted speeches, one following after another; if it were so, I would not interrupt him; but I want to say to the Senator there, that there is no terror to me in the suggestion that there will be free trade between the Philippine Islands and the United States, for, while I am a protectionist as between this country and foreign countries, I believe that we ought to have absolute free trade between this country and all the possessions of this country, including the Philippine Islands. I would not assent to the imposition of one iota of tariff duties on productions coming from the Philippine Islands to the United States, except only for the purpose of revenue. They need revenue to support their government; they must have it; and in that way it can be more lightly, and without burden, raised.

That is the reason I am in favor of the bill as it passed the House of Representatives. Otherwise I should insist on absolute free trade, as we now have it between Porto Rico and the United States.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, there are only two articles produced in the Philippine Islands that in any wise come in competition with the products of the State of Ohio; indeed, there are none to any material extent.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator forgets that tobacco is a very large industry in the State of Ohio, and I think if the Senator will consult the statistics he will want to withdraw that remark.

WILL BRING NO RELIEF.

Mr. PATTERSON. No; I would not withdraw it, because the production of tobacco is so infinitesimal as compared with the other protected industries of Ohio that the destruction of tobacco in Ohio would not appall the Senator from that State for a single moment. Therefore, there being little or no conflict between the products of the Philippine Islands and the products of the State of the Senator from Ohio, I can well understand how he is quite willing to have absolute free trade between those islands and the United States. So it is with the Senators from the New England and Middle Western States. I stand here representing at least one State in this Union, surrounded by other States that are deeply interested in this item of sugar, and until there shall be a revision of the tariff that will take into view every item upon it, making an equitable reduction all along the line, I shall oppose interfering in any degree with the duties upon the particular industry I am here defending.

But let us see what relief this bill is to bring to the Philippine Islands. Why, Mr. President, the largest amount of sugar that was imported into the United States in any year during the last ten, was 145,000,000 pounds; and if the relief which the Senator from Massachusetts is seeking, upon the basis that, next year or the year after, this same amount will be imported, it will amount to a fraction of but a little over $750,000, a mere bagatelle—a mere mite toward relieving the distress in the islands, and when these figures are considered, the utter fallacy of the arguments of those who are insisting upon this bill, will be clearly seen.

In 1900 there were but 50,000,000 pounds of sugar imported from the Philippine Islands to the United States, and if this bill shall pass, upon the basis of the importation of two years ago, there would be relief to the extent of but $250,000. In 1900 there were 5,000,000 pounds of sugar imported, and if you determine the benefits to the Filipinos upon the basis of the importation of 1900 it would amount to the magnificent sum of $25,000.

WILL DESTROY AMERICAN SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Mr. President, let me suggest why it is that we are opposed to this bill. It means, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio, not many years hence absolute free trade in every item of the products of the Philippine Islands between those islands and the United States. Let me take the item of sugar. There are Senators interested in the beet-sugar product of their own States. I ask them to weigh well the figures. The documents on file in the departments disclose this fact, that sugar can be produced in the Philippine Islands at a fraction over 62 cents per 100 pounds.

The beet-sugar raiser receives $2 per 100 pounds for the sugar that is in the beet that he sells to the sugar maker. Then the first cost of sugar, considering the simple process of extracting it from the cane in the Philippine Islands, is 62 cents per 100 pounds, as against $2 per 100 pounds in the United States. When you add to the cost of the production of sugar in the United States the cost of transportation, of storage and insurance, the cost of American sugar on the market in this country is more than 3 cents a pound. Add everything to the cost of sugar in the Philippine Islands, and it will be laid down in the United States, including the custom duties to be levied under this measure, at less than $2 per 100 pounds.

8,000,000 ACRES SUGAR LANDS IN PHILIPPINES.

The Senator from Massachusetts declares that there will be little or no sugar introduced into this country from the Philippine Islands. If that is true, then there is little or no relief in this bill for the people of the Philippine Islands. That fact stands confessed by the very claim of the Senator from Massachusetts.

But here is the significant fact in connection with sugar raising in the Philippine Islands: Governor Luke Wright, in the room of the Committee on the Philippines, admitted that there were from 4,000,000 to 6,000,000 acres of sugar lands in the Philippine Islands. It is also admitted that the productiveness of these Philippine lands is at least double that of the lands of this country. With the cost of sugar as I have suggested; with a law already upon the statute books that enables corporations to obtain title to Philippine lands by the hundreds of thousands of acres, I maintain that within less than ten years the sugar industry of the United States will be swept out of existence and the sugar raised in the Philippine Islands take its place.

I had a conversation with an expert upon both Philippine lands and sugar. He visited the Philippines for the express purpose of examining the possibilities of sugar production in that country. He asserts that there are 8,000,000 acres of land in the Philippine Islands well adapted for sugar culture, and that those lands are much better sugar lands than the best in the United States. If one-quarter of those lands is used for the raising of sugar cane, they will produce annually twice as much sugar as is annually consumed in the United States. The United States consumes about two and a half million tons. If you cultivate but 3,000,000 acres of Philippine land with sugar cane, there will be a production of 6,000,000 tons of sugar annually at the very lowest estimate.

LAND AND SUGAR SYNDICATES ORGANIZED.

So, I say, with the lands of the Philippine Islands open to speculators, with corporations and syndicates already organized and being organized to get psssession of those lands, with the eyes of the sugar trust fastened upon them, intending, as it does, to devote them principally to the cultivation of sugar, with the cost of this sugar, transportation, and duty added at the ports of the United States less than two-thirds that of American-raised sugar, it must be apparent what the outcome of the contest will be. It means the absolute, unqualified destruction of the American sugar industry. Whatever else may be considered, the dear labor of the United States can not compete with the cheap labor of the Philippine Islands.

These islands have more than 10,000 miles of seacoast line within 600 miles of the Empire of China. It is utterly impossible to prevent the flooding of the islands with the Chinese cooly who will work for 30 or 40 cents a day in Filipino money. Compare the cost and amount of sugar that can be raised in those islands with the cost and amount of sugar that is produced in the United States under present conditions, and when the one comes in conflict with the other, under the fostering protection of this measure, there is no question but that the American industry must go to the wall and the Filipino industry take its place.

A HOTHOUSE FOR CHEAP LABOR.

This question of the relations of the Philippines with the United States reaches far beyond the question of the productions of their soil. The Supreme Court of the United States has declared that they are "territory appurtenant." I do not know precisely what that means except that it is territory subject absolutely to the will of Congress or that of the Commission in control.

It will not be long, with free intercourse between the islands and the United States, the unrestricted right to come and go at will, before you will find ships traversing the ocean between those islands and the Pacific coast coming back loaded to the guards with cheap labor to take possession of the factories of the country, both in New England and in the West, and to take the place of section hands upon the lines of our great transcontinental railroads. Absolute and free intercourse between the Philippine Islands and the United States means more labor troubles than the American mind has been able to conceive, for with the right of free intercourse firmly established there is nothing to prevent as great an influx of cheap labor from the Philippines as the employing interests may desire.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should like to ask the honorable Senator, who is apprehensive of cheap labor being imported from the Philippine Islands, where that cheap labor would come from, since one of the greatest problems now pressing in the Philippines is to get adequate labor? The Senator, who is a well-informed member of the Committee on the Philippines, knows that the Philippine laborer could not and would not for a moment compete with any labor that we have in this country upon the railroads. Whence, then, does he anticipate this flood of cheap labor would come?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not agree with the Senator from Indiana in his proposition to its full extent. The problem in the Philippine Islands is not cheap common labor; it is cheap expert labor. The claim that was made before the Committee on the Philippines was that the labor that was needed in the cities, the labor of artisans, the labor that is skilled, had to be brought into the islands to a very large extent, and it was upon that plea that the claim for Chinese labor was based.

But as to ordinary labor, labor at the mill, at the loom, labor in the cigar factory, labor in the field, there was no claim that the labor of the islands was not ample in quantity and quite skillful enough to meet all the demands that might be made upon it. It was admitted that the Filipino is peculiarly skillful in light handicraft of every kind, good writers, could readily handle delicate and intricate machinery, but he was not well fitted for the rougher skilled labor of the world. He works for a pitiful sum per diem, living upon a ration upon which a white man would starve. I can well anticipate the time when the greed that permeates every industry, left untrammeled, will, when it comes to labor, seek through the agency of free intercourse between the United States and the Philippine Islands, the large abundance of very cheap and skilled labor that is there for the industries peculiar to certain sections of the country.

SENATORS WILL BE HELD RESPONSIBLE.

It is for that reason I am opposed to any further interference with the existing tariff upon sugar. I see the day, not far distant, when the beet-sugar industry of the West and the cane-sugar industry of the South will pass away, and if Senators from the South can sit idly by while the tobacco interests of their States are threatened in like manner, that is a matter of their concern and not of mine; but I warn them that the time will come, not many years hence, when any lack of interest in this, to them, all-important question will rise up to haunt them and accuse them of dereliction in their duty to their constituencies. If the Philippine Islands were in truth and in fact a constituent part of the United States, then no matter how the industries in which my constituents are interested might suffer, I would feel compelled to remain silent while free intercourse and free trade were being established; but we all understand they are not a constituent part of the United States and will not be at any future time.

They have no interest in the Constitution, because it affords them no protection. They have no voice in the making of the laws that control them. They are at the will of Congress—their lives, their property, their labor, and their future. It is while they are in this condition, while Congress may legislate as it will to destroy through them an American industry, that I take the position I do.

DISCUSSED UNDER OTHER CONDITIONS.

Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines suggested that this question was discussed in the Philippine Committee and upon the floor of this Chamber at the last session of Congress. It was in part, but at that time the members of the Republican party were asserting upon every occasion that their purpose was to hold the Philippine Islands only until the Filipinos were fit for self-government. They would not indicate whether in their opinion that time would come in five years or ten. But their attitude indicated that it would be at some reasonable time in the future. The Republican party, so far as its Senators and other leaders are concerned, has advanced a step since then. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] only the other day boldly declared that while he had not changed his attitude so far as theory was concerned he was satisfied that the day when the Filipinos would be fit for self-government was so far in the future that it was not worth while taking that factor into consideration.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Colorado is well aware that I made that statement at the last session of Congress, and that I made that same statement precisely in the speech I had the honor to make in this Chamber upon the ratification of the treaty of peace. I said in all those speeches, and I have said whenever I have had occasion to say it, that the time when our obligations will be all discharged, and when the Filipinos will have developed a capacity of self-government, if they ever do, is necessarily so far in the future, and so indefinite as to point of time, that it is useless now to consider it one way or the other, and that we must govern ourselves upon the theory that we were there charged with a responsibility which it was our duty to take care of.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will not take issue with the statement of the Senator from Ohio as to what he has said upon former occasions. I was of the opinion that his former statements were not so broad; that he was willing to allow the impression to be conveyed which other Republican Senators did convey, that it would not be a very long time before this capacity for self-government would be developed; that the then pending legislation for the Filipinos was temporary as to time, and that in all human probability within our lifetime the Filipino people would be free and independent, with a government of their own protected by us from interference by outside nations, as are the people of Cuba now.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know the Senator from Colorado would not intentionally misstate the position of this side or of any Senator upon it. I think the Senator, upon reflection, will agree with me that this side generally agreed with Governor Taft, who testified before our committee that that condition was a question for generations.

Mr. PATTERSON. I can not agree with the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then the Senator should look at the testimony taken by our committee.

Mr. PATTERSON. Perhaps the Senator will produce the testimony.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; it is in the printed volume.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have no recollection of any such statement by Governor Taft, but there is one thing which this discussion has served to demonstrate, and that is so far as the attitude of the Republican party to-day is concerned, whatever its attitude was six months ago, the independence of the Filipinos is not now contemplated as a possibility of the future. From this time forward we must regard the Philippine Islands as a part of the United States as indissoluble from our country as is any one State from the Union.

PHILIPPINES TO BE PERMANENTLY HELD.

It is well enough for the people of the country to understand that and to understand also that the islands are to be held as territories appurtenant, not territories within and under the Constitution, and that they are to be the plaything of Congress, to be legislated for just as the needs and the necessities and the whims of the Congress of the United States may determine.

Mr. President, then in behalf of the sugar-raising industry of the United States, of the beet-sugar farmers of Michigan, and Minnesota, and Wisconsin, and Kansas, and Nebraska, and California, and Washington, as well as of my own State, if their Senators will not stand up to protect them, I enter my protest against this entering wedge of the law that must ultimately result in the destruction of one of the great agricultural industries of those States. With lands almost unlimited in quantity and of immense productiveness, with labor not one-third the cost of labor in the United States, with a cost of transportation but little over 15 cents a hundred pounds—sugar being brought from the Philippine Islands in fast sailing vessels as ballast—if Senators from sugar States can not see what is in the future for the sugar-beet raisers of their States, then I think their constituencies will see when this question is understood, and they must abide the consequences.

I desire to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that regarding this question as of such great moment I can see every reason why there should be fuller and freer discussion than it is possible to give to it during the few hours remaining of this session.

ORDER FOR RECESS.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate take a recess from 6 until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. FORAKER. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator. It is already late in the day. There is a great deal of legislative business which we have been unable to get before the Senate. Would not an hour for the recess be enough—say from 6 until 7? We can go down to the restaurant and get a cup of coffee.

Mr. ALLISON. I fear it would not be long enough.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa, that the Senate at 6 o'clock take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15702) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 8, 1902.

Mr. BACON obtained the floor.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia has been recognized.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me to ask unanimous consent to call up a very short bill? The Senator from Maryland——

Mr. LODGE. I shall have to object, as I said before. I want to get action on the pending bill.

Mr. MASON. I hope——

Mr. LODGE. If I let in one I can not refuse others.

Mr. MASON. I want to make a statement to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. Even if I yielded it would do no good if the Senator from Massachusetts objects to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MASON. I should like to make a statement, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will have an opportunity later to pass the bill.

Mr. MASON. The Senator from Maryland was called away by reason of a death in his family, and I promised to call up the bill if I could. It is a matter where a man——

Mr. BACON. It will be useless for me to yield, with the objection of the Senator from Massachusetts to the present consideration of the bill. So I will proceed.

Mr. MASON. Very well.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] appeals to Senators who represent States in which there is sugar production. In the State which I have the honor in part to represent there is some sugar production. It is expected that there will be a great deal more. In the next month a sugar convention is to be held in my State under the auspices, if I may so say, of the Department of Agriculture. But it matters not to me how that may be. I think that the Government of the United States is under the highest moral obligation to pass this bill. I think we should go much further than this bill goes. I think we should entirely lose sight of the mere question of personal interest, if I am correct in the view as to our moral obligations in this matter. The question presented is not like the question presented as to intercourse between this country and a foreign country, or even a quasi-foreign country, such as Cuba may be, but it is a question which rests upon very much more serious considerations.

Now, of course, it is unnecessary for me to say that I have been utterly opposed to the acquisition of the Philippine Islands. I have been utterly opposed to the retention of the Philippine Islands. I would be glad now to see some way in which those people might be left to themselves, under such care as might be necessary to protect them against present evils from outside sources. But I must look at conditions as they exist. In spite of the fact that those who have with myself objected to the acquisition of the Philippine Islands have been disappointed in our efforts to prevent the retention of the islands, the fact exists that we have retained them, and they are to-day absolutely subject to our control and to our dominion and are absolutely dependent upon what we may do for them in the way of trade relations with ourselves and with other countries.

Mr. President, while I do not share the apprehensions of the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] as to the threatened production of sugar in the Philippine Islands and the threatened competition of sugar grown in the Philippine Islands with sugar produced in this country, for reasons which I may mention a little later, yet if I did share such apprehensions, appreciating as I do the condition of that people—not simply from what we have heard, but from what I myself have seen—I would still say that now is the time when we should extend the hand of relief to a desolate people, because that is what they are.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. PATTERSON. Does the Senator from Georgia know what the extent of relief will be through this bill? I will state to him that taking the very highest importation of sugar from the Philippines in any one year of the past ten years as the index it would amount every year to $750,000, and taking the lowest it would amount to $25,000.

Mr. CARMACK. That is an index that it would not do much harm.

Mr. BACON. That is what I was about to say.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is not to-day, but the future. We are guarding against an inroad upon our industry, and we must look to the future, and not confine ourselves to a single year.

Mr. BACON. The inquiry suggested by the Senator from Colorado would, so far as present conditions are concerned, indicate that there would be no special injury resulting to the industry of this country from competition in that particular industry in the Philippine Islands. I want to say to the Senator that what appears to be a very small amount here is a very large amount there, and possibly if it is limited to the very small amount as we consider it, as stated by him, that amount of itself, in the low scale of living that those people have, amounts to a great deal.

But it is not limited entirely to sugar. Of course it extends to tobacco, and all other articles are free. Now, that fact is a matter of objection to some Senators. They say that all other things are free. I am not going to discuss details, and I am not going to take much time. I am simply going to present one thought which I have.

There is no doubt about the fact that that country has been utterly desolated. We know that fact from the reports which we have, and I have had occular demonstration of the fact. We have had it stated here that by reason of the ravages of war and the rinderpest the working animal of that country has been destroyed, and it has been spoken of as a comparatively recent event. I can say from personal knowledge that two years ago, or nearly two years ago, the statement was made then, as it is now, that 90 per cent of the caraboa had been destroyed. It is not a recent matter, but it was so two years ago. It is the only work animal that can be used in that country by reason of the climate, and it could not be used in that country were it not for the fact that it can immerse itself in water every two hours, and in that way prepare itself for renewed work.

The food crops have been destroyed. Their little villages have been destroyed. Their farms have been broken up. Their people have been scattered. Hundreds of thousands of them have died or have been killed. If to-day there is on earth a spot of utter want and desolation it is the Philippine Islands. I make no criticism of anybody in this connection, certainly not at this time, for any responsibility for that. I am speaking of an existing condition. I am not making any imputation or casting any reflection upon any agency by which this condition was brought about. But, nevertheless, it is an existing condition among a people absolutely dependent upon us.

I believe as a matter of law it is our duty to extend free trade to those people. I believe there should be free trade between those islands and this country. However, I will not stop to discuss that. But as a matter of simple justice, ought they not to have it? I am not only prepared to vote for this bill, but I am prepared to go further and say that they shall have all the advantages they can enjoy by reason of unrestricted commerce between that country and ours.

Mr. President, the learned Senator from Colorado speaks about the vast production that is going to come from those islands. There is no man within the sound of my voice who will ever live to see it, unless we should turn the flood of Chinese immigration upon those islands. It is an impossibility. The Senator talks about skilled labor. I do not know what may have been said before his committee, but if you will go to that country you will find in the shops, in the saddle shops, in the harness shops, in the cigar shops and cigarette shops, and in all such places, skilled Filipino labor. There is not where the great difficulty is to be found. The Filipino will never be an active laborer outside of those small industries. When it comes to agriculture, he limits himself to such work as is necessary to supply the common wants of life, and when he gets them he is happy and wants no more. Wages are no temptation to him. He wants simply that which will supply the necessaries of life, and the time will never come within this generation or within the life of any man now living when there will be such an active agricultural industry in those islands as will make any production that will threaten the industries of this country.

However, as I have said, I am not going to discuss those questions. I wish to put the action in this matter upon the high ground, without casting reflections upon anybody, that without their agency and against their will they have been brought under our subjection. It is a fact that they are in a condition of utter want and desolation, and it is a further fact that the condition we are seeking to meet is a present condition and should not be put aside by the simple suggestion as to what may be the condition in the future. If in future the condition shall change, then, if necessary and proper, we can make a change to meet it; but what shall be done now? Does the fact that these people are starving——

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me ask the Senator from Georgia a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the reduction of the tariff on sugar or tobacco give a single Filipino a carabao now or next year? The thing to do, if you want to give them relief, and I am in favor of it, is to give them $10,000,000 from the United States and have it expended by the Commission for the purpose of buying carabaos now, and giving those to them, so that they will get present relief. This bill does not bring present relief. It is all for the future, and for the benefit of speculators in the future.

Mr. BACON. The very earnest contention of the Senator, if correct, of course would comparatively close the argument, but I differ with him as to that statement. It is not necessary as the result of this particular piece of legislation that there should be money put into their hands to buy carabaos, but no one can possibly dispute the proposition that every advantage which we give to them in the way of trade is a stimulus pro tanto in the way of production, and that every advantage in the way of production assists to put bread in the mouth of the hungry. It is with that view——

Mr. FORAKER. If I may interrupt the Senator, I wish to make a statement in answer to the remarks of the Senator from Colorado. To give to the people of the Philippine Islands a market will make valuable their possessions in the Philippine Islands, on which they can raise money, which they can not now, because they have no markets, and therefore no values, and thus they can relieve themselves. Ten million dollars would be soon spent, and but little good to a great people like this would be felt; but if you give them a market you make valuable all their possessions, and they can take care of themselves. That is all they need.

Mr. PATTERSON. May I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask the Senator whether or not when you give them a market in the articles that we produce to the extent that you give them a market, are we not replacing the production of our own people?

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator has been insisting that all they would send here would be of very little value or but little in amount.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Ohio agrees with me.

Mr. FORAKER. No. I think but little would come next year or the next year, but year by year the importation to this country from the Philippine Islands would grow, and in the course of time they would no doubt become of considerable magnitude. If they should ever threaten our industries, the people, as the Senator from Georgia has suggested, who would then be legislating for this country could deal with that question in a way that would be just. But on that point I have no fear. Except only for revenue, I would no more think of putting a tariff between the United States and the Philippine Islands than I would of putting a tariff between Colorado and Ohio or Georgia. They are ours and should be so treated.

Mr. BACON. I am delighted to hear the Senator from Ohio say that. I think that is the condition to which we should come. That is the proposition I should like to see made the basis of action here.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Ohio practically admits my contention. He says it will not bring much relief now, but it is a relief that will come in the future.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——
Mr. PATTERSON. In one moment. Wait until I get through.
Mr. FORAKER. But the Senator has gone off——
Mr. PATTERSON. Year by year the production of the islands will increase, the trade and the revenue will increase, and it is in the future that the relief is to come, and not in the present.
Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——
Mr. PATTERSON. One moment. So far as absolute free trade is concerned between the islands, whenever the Senator from Ohio and his party by legislation will secure the relations between the Philippine Islands and the United States that exist between the United States and organized Territories, then under the Constitution the mouths of all objectors are closed. But you hold them as a conquered province and you rule them at will, and you legislate for them to suit the interests of greed at home under the pretense of relieving the necessities of those abroad.
Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?
Mr. BACON. With pleasure.
Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator from Colorado want them brought in the same relation with the United States that the Territories occupy?
Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Colorado does not want them brought into it, but the party of the Senator from Wisconsin can bring them in. They should not occupy this extraordinary and unusual relation. They should either be in the Union or they should be an independent people, making their own laws and working out their own destiny. I am in favor of the latter attitude and condition for the people of the Philippine Islands, and I do not want to hold them as a constant menace to many of the industries as well as to the civilization of the United States.
Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for a moment?
Mr. BACON. With pleasure.
Mr. CARMACK. I simply want to make a request, as I do not expect to get into this debate, as I intended, to have some matter printed in the RECORD.
Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I am about to conclude, and he can resume the floor on that question and in his own time. It would come in better then.
Mr. President, I do not desire to continue the debate longer. I quite agree with the Senator from Colorado as to the wish I have relative to the relations of these islands with the United States. But that is not the question here. When the matter was before the Senate in a former session as to whether or not there should be a concession in the tariff rates, it will be remembered that some Senators declined to vote for that measure upon the ground that these people were entitled to free trade, and that to vote any tariff at all was a violation of their view of constitutional obligation. I believe that under the law they are entitled to free trade. I say that subject, of course, to the superior judgment of five out of nine of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States.
But, Mr. President, this is, as I have said before, an existing condition. As I am not able to give them free trade, as I am not able to give them the best I wish that they might have, I will give them the best I am able, and therefore I am prepared to vote for whatever reduction it may be put in my power to vote for.
Now, Mr. President, one other word. It does seem to me that here are eight or ten million people. It is not a small question. I do not claim this as any special matter of prescience, but more than a year ago I wrote and published articles which anticipated this very condition of affairs. I was satisfied that a country which had been desolated and swept by war as they had been, with everything destroyed which was necessary to administer to their everyday comforts, could not be a prosperous people, and while there were fictitious conditions then which gave a fictitious appearance of prosperity, the time was near at hand which has now come, and, Mr. President, when it has come with this vast multitude of starving people are we to let the present Congress adjourn without action upon the subject?
I say, Mr. President, that the highest moral obligation is upon us, not only to afford this relief, but to give them the opportunity to advance and to do what they may wish to avoid such an emergency in the future.
Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?
Mr. BACON. With pleasure.
Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia what he understands to be the operation of this bill. Is this relief of the tariff on other products and the 50 per cent on tobacco and sugar likely, in his judgment, to make for a year or two any increased trade which will benefit that people in their distress?
Mr. BACON. I think that anything which will give any stimulus to their industry will help that people.
Mr. HOAR. They are starving, they are without animals, they are without the means of cultivating their land, and now we say to them, if I understood the Senator from Ohio correctly, it will only be a few thousand dollars a year that it will increase their product for the present, and the Senator from Colorado said he thought so. What operation is the taking off of the United States tariff to have during the time when a man wants to buy these draft animals and wants to get some food to put in his mouth?
Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me?
Mr. HOAR. Will it save one human being from the agonies of hunger?
Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon me, there must be no misunderstanding on the question of the relation of draft animals to the work of the Philippine Islands. Of course the draft animals there play a very important part, but they do not play all the part in the agricultural industry of the country by any means, and not near so great a relation as draft animals bear in this country, owing to the fact that a larger proportion of the agricultural industry of that country is carried on by hand work.
At the same time there is a necessity and importance, of course, for these draft animals; but anything which stimulates the agricultural industry of that country, which gives them better prices, enables them to employ these poor people, and each man who is employed gives something to somebody else who has business relations with him.
Mr. HOAR. That is all true, of course, but I am inquiring about the present relief for men who are starving. I do not understand that there is any stock of sugar or stock of tobacco or stock of anything else accumulated there now to be let loose or sold at once if we pass this bill. The Senator from Ohio, I think, said—somebody did in the debate—that it would be an improvement this year, a larger improvement next year, and larger the next. It is a permanent tariff policy now entered into for their benefit undoubtedly. I do not know that there is any objection to it, but how it is going to affect one starving man or woman is what I want to know.
Mr. BACON. Of course, in a case of famine there has to be some other relief except the stimulus of industry, because there must be something of present benefit. I understand it is the purpose to devote a certain amount of money to that necessity. But, Mr. President, that does not in any way minimize or depreciate the importance of stimulating industries, so that while the starving and famishing people may be relieved to-day by charity they may in a month or two months or six months, as the case may be, to a certain extent be able to administer to their own wants.
Mr. HOAR. How does the Senator expect that if this bill passes there will be an increase of $50,000 a year either in sugar or tobacco in their trade with this country next year, not this one? Does the Senator expect, or does any Senator expect, that there will be an increase of $50,000 a year of the imports to this country of either sugar or tobacco next year? That is what I want to know.
Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Ohio?
Mr. BACON. Certainly.
Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Georgia will yield to me, I will read to the Senator from Massachusetts an answer to what he has said. It is what Governor Taft and his fellow-Commissioners said in their final report on November 1 last on this general subject:

We urge the reduction of the duties imposed on goods and merchandise imported into the United States from the Philippine Islands so as to make them not more than 25 per cent of the duties imposed by the Dingley law. The reduction of only 25 per cent, and the absurdly small effect of that reduction upon the trade between the islands and the United States, shown in the collection of little more than $11,000 of duties in five months, demonstrates that if any benefit at all is to be conferred upon the Philippine Islands by such action the percentage of reduction must be largely increased.

Mr. HOAR. That——
Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to finish it? In just a moment I will have concluded reading, and then I will give way?
Mr. HOAR. I do not want the Senator to give way. I want him to answer a question when he gets through.
Mr. FORAKER. I will finish, if the Senator will allow me.
Mr. HOAR. Certainly.
Mr. FORAKER (reading):

We feel confident that a reduction of 75 per cent will not result in a dumping upon the American market of either tobacco or other commodities so as perceptibly to affect that market; while, on the other hand, the ability to sell in the markets of the United States will be of the greatest encouragement to the woefully depressed agriculture of the Philippine Islands, under the conditions which we have described. The reduction of 25 per cent, instead of being an aid to us in winning the good will of the Philippine people, if it is not followed now by further reductions, will lead them to believe that we are merely going through the form of a concession, which amounts, in fact, to no concession at all; that the United States is merely "keeping the word of promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope."

We think that a 50 per cent reduction will not give any substantial relief—

Mr. HOAR. That is my question exactly.

Mr. FORAKER. I am answering it. I knew it would answer the Senator; that is the reason why I persisted in reading it—and that nothing short of 75 per cent will accomplish a useful purpose.

Just what the House made—

It is a mistake to suppose that the severance of these islands from Spain has made no difference in the markets to which their tobacco and sugar growers may look. On the contrary, with the separation from Spain, the sugar and tobacco growers have been deprived of markets which were of great assistance to them, and it seems only fair and just that the United States should substitute its own markets for the Spanish markets.

Now, Mr. President, that is what Governor Taft said on that subject. I believe thoroughly that he is right, and entirely right, about it. I believe that when we acquired the Philippine Islands, whether wisely or not, having cut off their markets in Spain and elsewhere, it became our duty to give them the benefit of our own markets.

It does not matter, Mr. President, how good a government we may organize, nor how good the men may be we send there to administer it, that government will be a failure unless that people are satisfied, and they can not be satisfied unless they have prosperity; and they can not have prosperity unless they have a a market in which they can sell their products when they have brought them forth.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President, that is exactly the point of my question and exactly the answer to it. Senators had stated—two of them, I think—that this would do no substantial good to the Philippine Islands and would make no substantial difference to us. I asked the question whether the Senators thought that a reduction of 50 per cent would have any material effect in relieving the unhappy condition of things there, to which the Senator from Ohio answers in the language of Governor Taft, which he indorses himself, namely, that 25 per cent reduction has operated in an increase of trade of $11,000 only, and has not done a particle of good; that 25 per cent more will not do a particle of good, but that on the contrary, 25 per cent more—being what this bill proposes—the intelligent Commissioner says, "If you do that and nothing more, you will hurt the existing conditions, because the people will believe you are trifling with them, keeping the word of promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope, and you are not accomplishing anything at all."

So you have the warning of Governor Taft and the warning of the accomplished Senator from Ohio that this bill is going to do mischief if not harm. That is exactly where we stand.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me? The Senator will remember perhaps, or will at least recall when I remind him of it, that when we debated the Philippine tariff law which is now in force I insisted it ought not to be a reduction of 25 per cent, but a reduction of 75 per cent of the Dingley rates; that the rate ought to be 25 per cent, and that we ought to have that rate only because they needed a revenue there. Except only for the purpose of revenue, I would not have any tariff duty between the Philippine Islands and the United States any more than I would between Massachusetts and Maine.

Mr. HOAR. Now, what I think myself, though I wish to defer to gentlemen who have studied this question more than I have——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to say just a word?

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to finish my sentence. What I should like to do would be to have entire freedom of trade for what is coming in here, unless possibly some little administrative duty, but limited to a period of time, say five years——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. By giving five years you can reconsider the matter under more favorable conditions.

Mr. FORAKER. I thank the Senator for that suggestion. It had occurred to me that that might possibly be a way that would lead us to an agreement.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. I want to finish before I am interrupted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will take the liberty of inquiring of the Senator from Georgia whether or not he has yielded the floor?

Mr. BACON. I will yield it to the Senator from Ohio. I had about completed my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. FORAKER. I am obliged to the Senator from Georgia. I wanted to remind the Senator from Massachusetts of the fact that the bill which is before the Senate is the bill as it came from the House. It passed the House with a provision that only 25 per cent of the Dingley rate should be levied on sugar and tobacco and that everything else should come in free of duty.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. The House did not make anything free of duty. They made the rate 25 per cent on everything.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; I stand corrected as to that.

Mr. LODGE. We made everything free of duty except sugar and tobacco. I do not agree with the statements which have been made, but I am not going to debate it, because it simply consumes time.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know what statement I have made to which the Senator takes exception, and I would be obliged to him if he would call attention to it. What I want to say is that the proposition for 50 per cent reduction only is a proposition of the Committee on the Philippines of the Senate. So the question is, or will be when we get to that, whether or not we shall amend the bill that the House sent to us by increasing the tariff duties on sugar and tobacco they import into this country from the Philippine Islands to 50 per cent of the Dingley rates instead of leaving the duty at 25 per cent of the Dingley rates, as that bill provided.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio whether he has given any attention to the cost of the production of sugar in the Philippine Islands and the cost of transportation from the islands to the United States?

Mr. FORAKER. I have not studied that question so as to answer the Senator with accuracy. I do know, however, that for this year it is estimated that there will be a production of not exceeding 10,000 tons of sugar in the whole Philippine Archipelago. Last year the production amounted only to 60,000 tons. There has been that reduction on account of the extraordinarily unfortunate condition that obtains there. When this matter was adverted to a few days ago in the Senate the Senator from Colorado said that some time in the past the annual production of sugar in the Philippine Islands had been as much as 400,000 tons. That may be true. It was much higher than I had supposed it had ever been. Mr. President, whatever may be capacity, the Senator——

Mr. PATTERSON. Four hundred thousand pounds.

Mr. FORAKER. Four hundred thousand tons.

Mr. TELLER. Four hundred thousand tons.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not remember to have seen such a statement, but I have no disposition to take issue with the Senator. I am very glad to hear that those people were able to produce 400,000 tons of sugar in the Philippine Islands under favorable circumstances, and I would be rejoiced if I could believe that at any time in the near future they would be able to produce there 5,000,000 tons of sugar, as the junior Senator from Colorado said in this debate this afternoon. It would show to us that there is a possibility for great prosperity in those islands, and that it would be a very sad miscarriage of our duty with respect to the islands if we were to so legislate as to make it impossible for a country of such capacity to have any prosperity at all.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that at the present time it is not a question of the capacity of the islands for production.

Mr. FORAKER. That is just what I am going to show, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. PATTERSON. One moment. Let me get through.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I object to being interrupted except by my own consent.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Ohio is the most persistent interrupter on the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please address the Chair.

Mr. PATTERSON. He always interjects in Senators' remarks, but objects when a Senator interrupts him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado will please address the Chair and get permission to interrupt the Senator on the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, Senators will know whether there is any warrant for such a statement as that just now made by the Senator from Colorado. I listened to him almost an hour this afternoon, and I did not interrupt him very much.

Mr. PATTERSON. I spoke in my own right.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I know; in his own right certainly, and I am speaking, I hope, in my own right now. I do not object to being interrupted, but my objection was to being interrupted in the midst of a statement. I said to the Senator that if he would wait a moment I would give way to him. What I wanted to say was, Mr. President——

Mr. PATTERSON rose.

Mr. FORAKER. And I insist upon being allowed to say that, and then I will yield to the Senator with pleasure.

The conditions in the Philippines are such that we know there can not be any production of tobacco or sugar there this year or next year or at any time within the next ten or fifteen or twenty years that would seriously conflict with any industry in this country if those articles were allowed to come in absolutely free of duty.

Therefore it was a wise suggestion on the part of the senior Senator from Massachusetts, in view of that which has been suggested here, if we can not otherwise agree, everyone recognizing the necessity of doing something for the present relief of those islands, that we limit the time that this law shall be in force. I think it would be well perhaps to do that. I am willing to limit it to five years or ten years, as may be thought wise. No man opposing this bill can successfully maintain the proposition that during that period there could come any injury to any industry in this country, and then we could determine whether or not we should further continue the law in force.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question before he takes his seat. I understood the Senator from Ohio to say that he thought the reduction of the rate of duty to 25 per cent, instead of 50 per cent, would result in no serious loss to the revenues of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not think it would. I do not remember that I made exactly that statement; but I think there would be more revenue collected at the ports of this country upon importations from the Philippine Islands with a tariff duty of 25 per cent of the Dingley rates than there would be if the tariff rates were 50 per cent.

Mr. MALLORY. I am inclined to think so myself, and I should like to vote for such a proposition.

Mr. FORAKER. I am glad to know the Senator feels so disposed.

I want to say that I think this is one of the most important measures pending before the Senate. I place it second to no measure which has been presented to us for consideration during this session, and I want to repeat what I said when I had the floor before this afternoon, that if we adjourn without taking any action of this character we should remember that it is an adjournment for a nine months' vacation, and it will be a pretty serious responsibility, in my opinion, that the Senate of the United States will assume in taking that action of letting those people, whose necessities we are now fully acquainted with, go without any relief, without any helping hand whatever from the Government, denying to them the right to trade in our own markets when it is conceded that they have not enough of anything that comes in conflict with our industries to prejudice those industries this year or at any time within the next five or ten years by any possibility.

AFFAIRS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. LODGE. There is some executive business that must be disposed of, and the time for the recess is approaching. So I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CARMACK. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion.

Mr. LODGE. The bill which has been pending will come up again at 8 o'clock, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts withhold his motion for a moment.

Mr. CARMACK. I want to say what I have to say now, as I do not want to consume any time to-night and be accused of delaying action on this bill. I simply want to make a request.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator may make his request.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I made the request last night to have printed in the RECORD statements of certain persons in regard to affairs in the Philippine Islands, together with some comments which I have made thereon. I now ask unanimous consent that they may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I beg to ask what is the nature of the material to which the Senator refers?

Mr. CARMACK. I supposed the Senator was familiar with it.

Mr. LODGE. I am not familiar with it, and do not know that I ever heard of it.

Mr. CARMACK. They are statements of certain persons who should have been examined as witnesses before the Philippine Committee, and would have been examined had the committee been in session for that purpose. As they did not have an opportunity of appearing before that committee, their statements were taken otherwise.

Mr. LODGE. That opens a pretty large question for the Senate to determine. Of course, if any individual Senator can hold a meeting by himself, take testimony, and present it to the Senate, it would be quite useless for a regular committee to sit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LODGE. I shall have to object at this stage, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not know that it will be possible for me to get the floor to-night, for I do not know whether the Chair will recognize me under any circumstances, although I am a member of the Philippines Committee, but if this matter is pending and I can get the eye of the Chair, and it be possible to do so, I shall read these statements.

CLARENCE R. HOOPER.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. MASON. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw his motion for a moment to enable me to call from the Calendar a private bill in which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], who has been called away, feels an interest.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2637) for the relief of Charles R. Hooper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read in full to the Senate for its information.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he intends to yield to a series of requests for unanimous consent?

Mr. LODGE. The question of time is involved; it is necessary that we shall have an executive session, and we must take a recess at 6 o'clock. I promised to make a motion for an executive session at the request of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understood the Senator to yield to a request for unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. HOAR. May I be permitted to say a word?

Mr. MASON. I have the floor at the present time, but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say to the Senate, what may not be known to all of them, that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] is absent under the most painful possible circumstances; and this is a request left by him to have something attended to which he had in charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 2637) for the relief of Charles R. Hooper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I can not consent to the passage of that bill without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I now renew my motion for an executive session, and feel that I must insist upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator withhold that motion for a moment? I want to make a special appeal to the Senate. I have two bills which have been reported out of the Committee of the Whole with amendments, and the bills are now in the Senate. They have been read, and there is nothing to be done except to allow them to be acted upon. I do not think there are any further amendments to be offered in the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. There are many Senators who have made appeals for the passage of bills. I promised other Senators now absent that there should be an executive session, and I can not, in justice to them, yield at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

T. A. WOODRESS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1488) for the relief of T. A. Woodress.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay T. A. Woodress, of Grundy County, Mo., $135.60, to cover expenses and transportation paid out by him, to convey his son, A. C. Woodress, late a private of the Third United States Cavalry, in the Spanish war, from Jefferson Barracks, Mo., to the insane asylum at St. Joseph, Mo., and thence back to Jefferson Barracks, Mo., including the cost of attendants.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIGHTS OF WAY FOR IRRIGATION PURPOSES IN HAWAII.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the further consideration of House bill 11997, known as the Hawaiian ditch bill, and also the bill (H. R. 17546) to provide for a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States from Porto Rico. Both of these bills are in the Senate and open to amendment. All the amendments have been agreed to, and there is no opposition that I know of to either one of them. Both have been read. It will take but a moment. The amendments have been agreed to in Committee of the Whole and the bills have been reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 11997) granting to the Hawaiian Ditch Company, Limited, the right of way over public lands in the districts of North and South Kohala, in the island of Hawaii, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining ditches or canals and the necessary reservoirs, dams, and the like, for irrigation and domestic purposes in said districts.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Is that a Hawaiian company or an American company?

Mr. FORAKER. This is not a grant to a company. This is a substitute for the bill. There is no objection to this measure at all on the part of anybody.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I wished to discover.

Mr. FORAKER. It is not objected to by any of the parties in interest. It is simply a general provision extending to Hawaii our laws now in force in the Territories.

Mr. HOAR. What is the purpose of extending the law?

Mr. FORAKER. It is simply a reenactment of the Territorial law.

Mr. HOAR. What Territorial law?

Mr. FORAKER. The law enacted by the Congress of the United States authorizing the construction of irrigation ditches and their maintenance.

Mr. HOAR. I understand; but this seems to be a grant to a company known as the Hawaii Ditch Company.

Mr. COCKRELL. The title of the bill is to be changed.

Mr. FORAKER. It is a general law. The House passed a bill making a grant to the Kohala Ditch Company, Limited, organized under the laws of Hawaii. I, in committee, offered a substitute, which I have offered here, which is simply a reenactment of the irrigation laws of the United States, and under which no right is given to any company.

Mr. HOAR. I see. I wanted to know whether it singled out one particular company——

Mr. FORAKER. It does not.

Mr. HOAR. Or is a general law. That is all right.

Mr. BATE. I think I shall have to object to the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the objection of the Senator from Tennessee is based upon the bill as it came from the House. This is an entire substitute for that bill, and is opposed by none of the parties in interest.

Mr. BATE. With that statement of the Senator from Ohio, I have no objection to the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to grant the right of way through public lands in Hawaii to canal and ditch companies formed for irrigation purposes and to regulate the use of the same."

PROTECTION OF INDUSTRIAL PROPERTY.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17085) to effectuate the provisions of the additional act of the international convention for the protection of industrial property.

Mr. FORAKER. I asked unanimous consent that I might have the two bills that were in the Senate and open to amendment acted upon. The other is a bill to provide for a Delegate from Porto Rico. It has been read and reported to the Senate. There are no further amendments that I know of.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I hope I may have consent for the consideration of the bill which I have called up.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the bill will be passed. It is a very important one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. TELLER. I do not mean to object to the bill, but it is a very important measure. It makes some very important amendments to the statute. I want to know from somebody connected with the committee whether it comes from the Committee on Patents; and if so, whether it has been favorably reported?

Mr. COCKRELL. It has been reported favorably from the Committee on Patents. It is indorsed by all of the committee, including the oldest member of the Committee on Patents, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This bill was prepared by the Commissioner of Patents, and its only object is to make our practice conform to the practice which has been adopted by the international convention for the protection of industrial property.

Mr. TELLER. I did not intend to make any objections; I merely wanted to know something about it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PREVENTION OF COUNTERFEITING.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 13075) to amend section 3 of the "Act further to prevent counterfeiting or manufacturing of dies, tools, or other implements used in manufacturing," and so forth, approved February 10, 1891.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend the third section of the act referred to so as to read as follows:

That every person who makes, or who causes or procures to be made, or who brings into the United States from any foreign country, or who shall have in possession with intent to sell, give away, or in any other manner use the same, any business or professional card, notice, placard, token, device, print, or impression, or any other thing whatsoever, in likeness or similitude as to design, color, or the inscription thereon, of any of the coins of the United States or of any foreign country that have been or hereafter may be issued as money, either under the authority of the United States or under the authority of any foreign government, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not to exceed $100. But nothing in this act shall be construed to forbid or prevent the printing and publishing of illustrations of coins and medals, or the making of the necessary plates for the same, to be used in illustrating numismatic and historical books and journals and the circulars of legitimate publishers and dealers in the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPOONER subsequently said: I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. I will not call it up now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered.

JEROME W. TURNER.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 17026) granting a pension to Jerome W. Turner.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Jerome W. Turner, late first lieutenant and adjutant, Thirtieth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $17 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. PETTUS. There is on the table a measure which has come from the House. It is the bill (H. R. 15802) for the relief of certain homestead settlers in the State of Alabama. It came from the House this morning and has not been put on the Calendar. It is the same in substance as Senate bill 7247, which is on the Calendar. I ask present consideration for the House bill, and after it is passed I will move the indefinite postponement of the Senate bill on the same subject.

The bill (H. R. 15802) for the relief of certain homestead settlers in the State of Alabama was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any person, association, or corporation that has recovered, in any court of competent jurisdiction, the title to any land which is included in any homestead entry made on lands granted by the Congress of the United States to the State of Alabama to aid in the construction of the Mobile and Girard Railroad or the Tennessee and Coosa Railroad, which recovery of said land was made or had by virtue of the title asserted and claimed by either of said railroad companies or its vendee or successor in interest, shall execute a deed conveying all his or their interest in, or claim to, the land included in such homestead entry to the United States, and file the same with the Secretary of the Interior, such person, association, or corporation shall be entitled to receive from the Secretary of the Interior a certificate authorizing them or their assigns to enter, within one year from the issuance of such certificate, of the public lands of the United States in the State of Alabama, subject to homestead entry, an area equal to that contained in the tract so deeded and relinquished, and all certificates which have not been presented as a basis for the entry of a specific tract within one year of their issuance, as above, shall be void, and each and every certificate issued shall have plainly printed across the face thereof the date of its expiration.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe all necessary rules and regulations for the administration of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the bill (S. 7247) for the relief of certain homestead settlers in the State of Alabama on lands which have been recovered, or which may hereafter be recovered in the courts by the grantees of certain railroad companies in that State, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

RECESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 6 o'clock having arrived, under the order of the Senate a recess will now be taken until 8 o'clock.

Thereupon (at 6 o'clock p. m.) a recess was taken until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. TALIAFERRO presented the credentials of STEPHEN R. MALLORY, appointed by the governor of the State of Florida a Senator from that State until the legislature thereof shall fill the vacancy in the term beginning March 4, 1903; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION AT ST. LOUIS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Following the suggestion of the Committee on Industrial Expositions, the Chair appoints as the committee to attend the dedicatory ceremonies of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition to be held at St. Louis April 30 and May 1 and 2, 1903, the following Senators: The Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. BURNHAM; the Senator from New York, Mr. DEPEW; the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. PENROSE; the Senator from Iowa, Mr. DOLLIVER; the Senator from North Dakota, Mr. HANSBROUGH; the Senator from Oregon, Mr. MITCHELL; the Senator from Colorado, Mr. TELLER; the Senator from Arkansas, Mr. BERRY; the Senator from Virginia, Mr. MARTIN; and the Senator from Louisiana, Mr. FOSTER.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask for a call of the Senate to find out whether we have a quorum or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Alger,	Cullom,	Harris,	Proctor,
Allison,	Deboe,	Heitfeld,	Quay,
Bacon,	Dietrich,	Jones, Nev.	Rawlins,
Bate,	Dillingham,	Kean,	Spooner,
Berry,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Stewart,
Beveridge,	Fairbanks,	McEnery,	Taliaferro,
Burnham,	Foraker,	Mallory,	Teller,
Burton,	Foster, La.	Mason,	Tillman,
Carmack,	Foster, Wash.	Millard,	Warren,
Clapp,	Frye,	Nelson,	Wellington.
Clark, Wyo.	Gallinger,	Patterson,
Clay,	Hale,	Perkins,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 7414) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 7307) to provide certain souvenir medallions for the benefit of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Association of the United States.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 7307) to provide certain souvenir medallions for the benefit of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Association of the United States; and

A bill (S. 7425) authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and granting the same a right to operate and maintain a line of railroad through the Vancouver Barracks and Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Portland, Vancouver and Yakima Railway Company, its successors and assigns; and

A bill (H. R. 17202) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for otherpurposes.

EFFICIENCY OF ARMY CHAPLAINS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I present copies of indorsements of the General, the Adjutant-General, and other officials of the United States Army, and also of eminent bishops, clergymen, and laymen of various religious bodies, together with comparative tables and matter explanatory and commendatory of the proposed legislation to recognize and promote the efficiency of Army chaplains. I move that the indorsements be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE.

On motion of Mr. KEAN, it was Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 1,000 copies of Public No. 103, "An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States," approved February 19, 1903.

PORTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17546) to provide for a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States from Porto Rico. The bill was reported unanimously to the Senate, and is now in the Senate without any objection, and I ask that it may be put upon its passage. It does not have to be read.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], in charge of the Philippine tariff bill, asked me to see that it retains its place and is not displaced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to put the request so that it shall not be displaced.

Mr. ALLISON. If this bill takes no time, I will yield.

Mr. FORAKER. It will take no time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17546) to provide for a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States from Porto Rico.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yesterday, as in Committee of the Whole, the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] in the nature of a substitute was agreed to. No other amendment was offered, and the bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to move an amendment to the amendment which was made as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out the paragraph commencing on line 4, page 3, beginning with the words "The said commission," down to and including the word "island," in line 21, and to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 4, after the word "Paris," strike out all of the bill down to and including the word "island," in line 21, and in lieu insert the following:

The said commission shall make full report of its examinations and findings, together with its opinions and recommendations, to the Congress within one year after its first sitting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. FORAKER. I accept the amendment. The only difference is that it provides for a report to Congress instead of to the President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely. But the bill as it now stands provides for a report to the President, and upon that report the President can do certain things, and certain very important things. I think the report ought to come back to Congress for its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to. It is agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FORAKER, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the appointment of commissioners to settle title to church lands in Porto Rico, and for other purposes."

SAFE-KEEPING OF PUBLIC MONEY.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent to add to some remarks I made to-day tables which I prepared and which I omitted to put in. I will put them at the end of my remarks. They are statistics of population, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that certain statistics, etc., may be inserted by him in his speech of to-day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15702) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 8, 1902.

Mr. CARMACK. I ask the Secretary to read the paper which I send to the desk.

Mr. BURTON. Is that the paper the Senator asked to have go into the RECORD?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir; I want to have it go in as a part of my remarks.

Mr. BURTON. I suggest that there is no objection to its being printed.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not care to have it read if there is no objection to its being printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to know what it is.

Mr. CARMACK. I have stated it two or three times.

Mr. ALLISON. I was not present.

Mr. CARMACK. It is testimony taken on the Philippine matter.

Mr. ALLISON. At this moment I think I will not consent that it may be printed without reading.

Mr. CARMACK. Then I will ask to have it read. Does the Senator object to its being read by the Secretary?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to its reading by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What was the objection of the Senator from Iowa, that it should not be printed or that it should not be read?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to its being read as a part of the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee. I suppose it will be printed afterwards, but I should like to hear what it is.

Mr. CARMACK. I have some remarks to make. The reading can be suspended, and in the meanwhile the Senator can look over it if he wishes to do so. I simply do not want to take the time that would be consumed in reading it.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. FAIRBANKS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 7414) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, 8, 9, 11, 13, 14, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 29.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 12, 16, 17, 23, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 2, and agrees to the Senate provision with an amendment as follows: After the word "dollars," in the last line of the amendment, insert the following: "And authority is hereby given to the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and adjust any claims for damages due to the abrogation of certain contracts under a former appropriation for a public building at Anniston, Ala.: Provided, The amount thereof can be liquidated for such sums as, in his opinion, are just and reasonable, and a sum of money sufficient to cover such adjustments and settlements shall be paid from the amount herein authorized;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the item "United States post-office at East Liverpool, Ohio, $30,000," insert the following: "Provided, That such site shall be deemed to comply with the provisions of this act if bounded on two sides by streets and on a third side by a public alley, and shall contain not less than 13,000 square feet;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert in line 2 of the amendment, after the word "directed," the words "in his discretion;" and the Senate agree to the same.

CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,
GEORGE TURNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

DAVID H. MERCER,
CHARLES W. GILLET,
J. H. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. MALLORY. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Indiana as to certain items in the bill which were added by the House.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I can not hear the Senator.

Mr. MALLORY. It is impossible for me to understand the report as made indicating the amendments by numbers. I wish to get some information regarding certain amendments which were added to the bill by the House. I find that, beginning on page 13, section 5, there are a number of new items which were added by the House. I should like to inquire from the Senator if the conferees agreed on all those items.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. They did.

Mr. MALLORY. For purchase of sites for new post-office buildings?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes; the conferees agreed upon them.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask the Senator if there was any new site provided by the Senate bill at all?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator has the text of the Senate bill before him, he will discover that there were no new sites provided in the Senate bill.

Mr. MALLORY. And none were added by the conferees?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. And none were added by the conferees.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President I do not propose to antagonize the bill, but I wish to express my dissent to the method by which this measure has gone through both bodies of Congress. As I understand it, it was originally a Senate bill. When it was pending before the committee of the Senate I undertook to add a provision for the purchase of a new site for a post-office building. I was informed by a member of the committee that no new sites would be provided for in the measure, and that it was utterly useless for me to undertake to have one provided for. The bill went to the House. I desisted from any effort at all to have that new site provided for, one which I thought was very proper and very meritorious, and it is much more so than many that are in the bill now. The report now comes to the Senate with quite a large number of new sites appropriated for. I find that Alabama has 3; Iowa, 2; Wisconsin, 1; Georgia, 2; Michigan, 2; and Nebraska, 2; most of them being places of comparative unimportance.

I understand, Mr. President, that the Senate conferees made an earnest effort to have these provisions eliminated from the bill, and that they finally yielded on the assurance that if they insisted on bringing them out it would result in the absolute defeat of the bill, or if they insisted on adding any Senate amendments of the same character that that also would result in the defeat of the bill.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator is entirely accurate in that statement.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire merely, Mr. President, to bring out those facts, because I do not think that is a proper method of legislation. While I have no comment to make upon the other House in the matter, and while I do not wish to delay an agreement to this conference report, I wish the facts as they are to appear in the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, for several years we have been endeavoring to get a site for a hall of records, and I recall the fact that a provision was made in this bill for a site for a hall of records. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if that provision for a hall of records remains in the bill.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes; there is a provision for the purchase of a site in Washington for a hall of records, and it looks as though after twenty-five years of effort we would succeed in getting a hall.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think, in view of the inquiry made by the Senator from Florida, it is due to the Senate that some explanation or statement should be made regarding the items to which he refers. I do not believe the Senate will withhold its commendation—nor its commiseration, for that matter—from the Senate conferees on the omnibus public building bill, for they have been placed in a most embarrassing and I think I can truthfully say a most humiliating position.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator permit me one moment? I do not wish to be understood as reflecting on the Senate conferees in any way. I believe that they did everything in their power to make this bill just.

Mr. WARREN. I am glad to have at least one Senator confirm the fact. We all remember how ably the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] in charge of this bill conducted its passage through this body, refusing all amendments of appropriations for new building projects and for new building sites, stating then, as he had a right to state, that there was an agreement between the committee which he represented on this side and a committee from another place, a committee who had the right to enter into such negotiations, that a bill, in order to be safe and pass the House, must pass the Senate with no new projects included, except such as related to the District of Columbia; that all other matter would have to relate to bills or laws already passed and under which buildings had been commenced or plans drawn in the completion of works already authorized.

Now, Mr. President, our committee was besought in its committee room and on this floor by individual Senators, who desired to have included new buildings or sites, and we had to turn to all a deaf ear under our agreement. Many Senators that were thus refused are here to-day, and have given their assent to this final conclusion. Others, including my seat-mate on my right, are not here, and necessarily have not been consulted.

Senators (one and all) were assured by the chairman and by me and by other members of our committee that there would be no new buildings or sites provided for in the bill because we had an agreement to that effect with the corresponding committee of the House, and therefore we could not put them on here.

Notwithstanding this our agreement of honor it transpires that in another place, immediately after the Senate bill passed and before it had reached the House of Representatives, it was taken into a committee room. That committee's pledge to us was broken and some twenty-odd sites that had been originally put in a House bill were added to our bill, and this, too, notwithstanding the fact that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds here had been besought by those from that other committee to pull them out of a hole, if I may use that term, into which they had placed themselves. They had put in their House bill these sites, which were being strenuously objected to, so that they could neither get their bill up in the House nor pass it, if they had got it up.

In this their dilemma and distress they begged and prayed us to come to their rescue and pull them out of the hole.

They asked us to come to their relief and frame a bill which could pass over there at their end of the Capitol. With that extreme kindness which has always characterized our chairman, he consented to the proposition. We were led to make a bill exactly as the members from another place asked us to construct it. I am sorry to say that all of those representations to us have fallen by the wayside, have been repudiated and trodden under foot.

Of course, I will use no harsh terms; but when I hear the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] speaking of bunko hereafter, as he did yesterday, or whenever anybody shall speak of bad faith or bunko, my mind will involuntarily turn back to this period and the actions of those from another place in relation to this measure.

There is another thing, Mr. President, aside from the matter of fair dealing and justice to this body, that in my mind is radically wrong about this bill, especially the item of sites, which your conferees have been compelled to swallow. It is true that we are in the midst of piping times of prosperity, and it seems to be true that in our extravagant expenditures and appropriations we have forgotten that there is any such thing, or ever has been such a thing, as hard times.

We seem to have forgotten the strained financial condition in which we were but a few years ago, and the condition we have been in many a time before, and probably shall be in again. When we look at our different appropriation bills and sum up their stupendous totals we wonder where we are going to land. This omnibus public building bill carries in the matter of these deceitfully acquired building sites probably not more than a half million dollars in direct appropriations, but this Congress commits itself, by inserting provisions for those sites, to further appropriations that will amount on an average to more than half a million dollars apiece for the twenty-five or thirty buildings.

Possibly it is right, but I think it ought to be considered whether or not we want to further extend this system of mortgaging the future by carrying similar provisions into every single appropriation bill which we may pass.

Our greatly esteemed chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. FRYE] established some years ago—and properly so, in my judgment, upon that particular class of appropriations—a method of providing for river and harbor improvements by appropriating certain money for the current year and certain amounts and making a limit in continuous appropriations to be provided for thereafter as to the items named in the bill. Since that time our sundry civil bill has consequently fattened and thriven and grown corpulent, of course.

So far as we carried it only on rivers and harbors where it was necessary to make contracts, it seemed harmless enough, but when we look now at the various appropriation bills we find that we have continuing appropriations for almost everything and for public buildings galore. We appropriate direct $3,000,000 for the privilege of having a railroad depot from which we may depart when leaving town and into which we may come when coming into town. We appropriate $2,000,000 for a District building and $1,500,000 for an Agricultural building. We are appropriating or authorizing three and a half millions of dollars for a National Museum in our sundry civil bill.

We are called upon, and there is legislation pending toward the matter of the appropriation of $10,000,000, so far, for the extension of the Capitol and buildings connected with it for the convenience of the House of Representatives and the Senate.

We are confronted with the necessity—and the proposition has just been entered into or is under contemplation—to put seven to ten million dollars into a temple of justice which will compare with the handsome Library building. We are asked to appropriate $7,000,000 for a building for a new Department of Commerce and to give up 1,300 men with which to commence housekeeping, an infant industry which must be protected in a $7,000,000 building and given 1,300 men to start with. We appropriate over $200,000 for an addition to our printing and engraving plant, and divers and sundry other large sums too numerous to mention.

I might speak as I go along of the expenditure of some five hundred thousand to six hundred thousand dollars on the White House, including, Mr. President, an expenditure, it is stated, of over $65,000 for that diminutive wigwam that defaces the western side of the White House grounds [laughter]; that little wigwam, or tepee, whose front yard is mostly a coal hole and whose best room is the back yard, where perhaps we may sometime erect a building to which this so-called structure, this Executive office, may be added as a porch or a piazza. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I might go on with the enumeration of a hundred million dollars or more which it is proposed to expend——

Mr. NELSON. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming what did the building to which he refers cost?

Mr. WARREN. I understand it cost over $65,000; and if I had personally expended $6,500 and did not have a better result and a better product than that one, I should consider that I owed myself and everyone who came along to see it an apology. [Laughter.]

We have other little matters. We provide in some of these bills which are under consideration for a mail-bag repair shop, to cost nobody knows how much. This public-building bill contains an appropriation of $400,000 for a site upon which to erect a three or four or five million dollar hall of records. We are informed by the Post-Office Department that over in New York they need a little matter of a couple of extra post-offices—suburban affairs—that will cost something like $16,000,000, according to their present calculation; but I want to record the prophecy that they will never be built inside of $30,000,000.

Good Lord! If it costs this much for two branch offices, what will it cost for a central or main post-office in Greater New York?

Where are the time-honored watch dogs of the Treasury? Where is our Uncle JOSEPH and all the rest of the old guard with their powerful mailed hands which have so firmly seized and throttled extravagance heretofore? Where are they? Echo answers, Where?

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the time will soon come when this Senate will be required to instruct its conferees upon these various bills, not only about the rights of this body in connection with another body, but instruct them also as to what they are expected to be led into and are willing to be led into in promised expenditures hereafter, in the way of a mortgage, if you please, upon the future.

Yet, Mr. President, I say it with shame, that in all these great expenditures, in this ghost dance of intoxicating indulgence and extravagance, we have not time nor inclination, it seems, to stop and pay debts which the Government owes to those who have furnished service and supplies to this nation, long years ago, and who are left with their claims unadjudicated, unpaid.

Whenever a Senator rises in his place and reports favorably a claim from the Committee on Claims he is looked upon with suspicion, and when he undertakes to pass one he is usually blocked.
